What is important to remember is that when corporations fail, workers lose their jobs, families hit hard times and children suffer. There must be a zero tolerance for corporate corruption.

CORPORATE RESPONSIBILITY

(Mrs. MYRICK asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Mrs. MYRICK. Mr. Speaker, corporate responsibility and personal integrity is on the minds of most Americans. After all, honesty and integrity have always been the backbone of our American way of life.

When I was a young girl, I used to frequently see my dad seal a business deal with a handshake, which he always honored. There sure is not a lot of that going around today, is there?

We, the Members of Congress, have an opportunity to play an important role, beyond our usual duties, in determining the future direction of America. We have a very clear choice of either being examples of steadfast integrity or continuing to just be more examples of the lack of integrity we see so much of today.

Which will it be?

CORPORATE RESPONSIBILITY

(Mr. BROWN of Ohio asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, why was President Bush's speech on Tuesday so badly received? Why did worker after worker who attended the speech just say it was mere politics and not substance? Why did the market drop hundreds of points after the President made his speech on Tuesday?

It is because of a lack of confidence in the Bush-Cheney team that it will demand accountability from its big contributors on Wall Street and its CEO friends; because of the coziness that the Bush-Cheney team have with wealthy interest group after wealthy interest group.

Let me give an example. Three weeks ago, President Bush and House Republicans trooped off to a big fund-raiser where the prescription drug industry gave $2 million to the Republicans. The next day, on a party-line vote on amendment after amendment after amendment, the consumer side lost and the drug industry side won.

The oil industry is writing energy legislation for the Republicans, the chemical industry is writing environmental legislation, Wall Street is writing Social Security privatization legislation, the insurance companies are writing Medicare privatization legislation, and the pharmaceutical companies are writing prescription drug legislation.

Mr. Speaker, it must stop.

PRESIDENT CALLS FOR NEW ETHIC OF RESPONSIBILITY

(Mrs. BIGGERT asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Mrs. BIGGERT. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of President Bush's plan to cut down on corruption in America's corporate community. The President's plan creates tough new criminal penalties and enforcement provisions to punish those who refuse to play by the rules.

This is America, and those who break the law and threaten the integrity of our financial markets must pay the piper and return their ill-gotten gains.

Mr. Speaker, the House earlier this year took steps to codify the President's plan into law, even before his address on Wall Street. On March 7, the President first said that CEOs or other corporate executives should not profit from erroneous financial statements. He also said that corporate officers who clearly abuse their power should not serve in the leadership of public companies.

The House overwhelmingly passed a bipartisan accounting reform bill in April that included both of these initatives. When the President called, the House responded.

As we continue to install a new ethic of corporate responsibility, we must strike the right balance between empowering the SEC to do a better job and not overregulating or tying ourselves up in unnecessary red tape. At the end of the day, we must punish the crooks, not the honest brokers.

CORPORATE RESPONSIBILITY

(Ms. SOLIS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Ms. SOLIS. Mr. Speaker, corporate responsibility. Well, my colleagues, Enron got away with robbing thousands of pension holders from their life savings, and millions of Americans are watching us, waiting to see why there is a double standard. Why is it that someone who walks into the local grocery store, who picks up maybe a box of Cracker Jacks gets thrown into jail and the CEOs that rob thousands and millions of people, pensioners and retirees, of their life savings do not have anything going against them. No record, no nothing. They are let off with hardly a scandal.

The other thing I want to bring up is, why are we allowing for corporate America to get away with not paying for the pollution that they create in our waters, in particular Superfund sites? I have two Superfund sites in my own district now, and I ask why is it that we are giving them a break to get off the hook? It is not fair for our communities.

Why should the consumers and the taxpayers that I represent have to pay for corporate America's mistakes and mishaps? We ought to use a big stick, not a pillow, and we ought to talk big and make punishment real for those people that break the law.

TRIBUTE TO ALFRED L. WATKINS

(Mr. ISAKSON asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. ISAKSON. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to stand today and pay tribute to a man of great vision in my district, Alfred Watkins.

Twenty years ago, he took over the leadership of a brand-new high school in my community. He built a music program from 78 participants to the largest music program in public education east of the Mississippi River. His children have won the John Philip Sousa Award, the Louis Sudler Flag Award, a Grammy for the best music program in a public school, twice marched in the Grand Parade at the Tournament of Roses, the World's Fair, and the Macy's Thanksgiving Day Parade.

But is his legacy the great music or the great music his children perform? No. It is countless numbers of young people who, through the discipline of participation and through the appreciation of music, are changing the lives of other people all over this country.

Alfred Watkins has been a visionary leader who has been great for our community and great for its children. Dr. Theodore Hesburgh once said, "Leadership requires that you have a vision, for without a vision, you cannot blow an uncertain trumpet." It is ironic that Alfred Watkins was a trumpeter, and his music are my district's children, who are a symphony of perfection in my district and in the lives of countless thousands of Americans.

CORPORATE RESPONSIBILITY THREATENS HOMELAND SECURITY

(Mr. McDERMOTT asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. McDERMOTT. Mr. Speaker, the House is now throwing themselves as fast as they can at developing a homeland security plan. Somehow, however, we have forgotten half the problem. The problem of the external dangers we all know about, but Pogo, the cartoon character, once said, "We have discovered the enemy, and he is us."

We forget what the internal threats in this country really are. What we have watched on Wall Street is threatening the homeland security of all of us, our pensions, our health care, the economy, and whether we can retire. All those issues are in danger because of, as some of my colleagues say, a few bad apples.

In Washington State, where the apple is really the symbol of the State, we know if you have a bad apple in the barrel, it can ruin the whole barrel. The American people recognize that the barrel has bad apples in it, like the leadership of Halliburton and the leadership of Enron and the leadership of Harken and the leadership of all these companies.

Maybe we should throw some of those apples out of the barrel.

RESPONSIBLE FOREST MANAGEMENT

(Mr. GIBBONS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. GIBBONS. Mr. Speaker, it is summertime, and out West it is the height of the fire season. Every day we ask our brave fire fighters to risk their lives to put out these dangerous blazes. Unfortunately, their job is made more difficult primarily due to extreme environmental groups.

The U.S. Department of Agriculture reported that nearly half of the 2002 projects to reduce wildfires and wildfire risks have been blocked by lawsuits brought by these same extreme environmental groups. These delays have significantly slowed efforts to remove the tinder-dry overgrowth out of our Federal forests and contributed greatly to the West's worst fire year on record. With half of the fire season left, more than 3 million acres have been lost to forest fires and wildfires, lost for all Americans to enjoy, lost for 100 years to come.

Today, the Subcommittee on Forests and Forest Health of the Committee on Resources will hold a hearing to address this issue. We need to find a way to end the misguided crusade against responsible forest management. Only then will we be able to prevent destructive wildfires that decimate our national forests.

BUSH DISCOVERS IMPORTANCE OF CORPORATE ACCOUNTABILITY

(Mr. DOGGETT asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DOGGETT. Mr. Speaker, like a preacher welcoming every convert to the fold, we welcome all converts, no matter how belated their interest in controlling corporate corruption.

To date, this Administration's "See no evil, hear no evil" approach has produced and condoned a steady stream of corporate misconduct in this country. So long as more special-interest lobbyists are appointed to fill key regulatory roles and the Administration continues to conspire with House Republicans to undermine every genuine reform that is proposed, the President's newly professed concern amounts to little more than a fresh coat of paint on rotten wood, very rotten wood.

The American people can see right through the thin paint and see the damage that is caused to retirement savings, to investors' earnings, and to taxpayers that are cheated by corporations that use accounting tricks to avoid paying their fair share.

Our patience has been exploited and our trust has been taxed by the culpable inaction, indifference, and complacency of this Administration and its House Republican allies.

LEXINGTON COUNTY PEACH FESTIVAL

(Mr. WILSON of South Carolina asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. WILSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, South Carolina is the second largest producer of peaches in the Nation, and yesterday fresh peaches from South Carolina were hand delivered to every congressional office.

I would like to commend the efforts of the South Carolina Farm Bureau, the South Carolina Peach Council, and the interns and staffers for their efforts yesterday in delivering the peaches on Capitol Hill.

Last Thursday, I was honored to be the guest Speaker at the 44th annual Lexington County Peach Festival in Gilbert, South Carolina. This wonderful event is held every July 4th, a time for patriotic families to come together to celebrate the independence of our great Nation. The festival features a parade with wonderful floats and, of course, fresh peaches, peach ice cream, and peach cobbler available for everyone.

I would like to thank all the supporters and organizers of the Lexington County Peach Festival and especially the festival coordinator, Raymond Boozer, along with Gilbert mayor, Phil Price; First Lady Frances Price, and long-time parade coordinator, R. J. Taylor.

My family has attended 32 Lexington County Peach Festivals, and I look forward to many more years of this special July 4th celebration.

CORPORATE RESPONSIBILITY

(Mr. HINOJOSA asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. HINOJOSA. Mr. Speaker, recent corporate scandals, including Enron, WorldCom, Tyco, Merck, Rite-Aid, Xerox, and so many other corporations have demonstrated the need for our government to take action and bring order, justice, and trust back to our Nation's corporate infrastructure. Criminal practices put in place by high-paid executives demonstrate irresponsibility, hurt investors and employees, jeopardize innocent rank-and-file-worker pensions and retirement systems, and must come to an end.

We need to send strong legislation from this House that will make crooked accounting, cooked financial records, and careless corporate executives a thing of the past.

To do this effectively, we must craft legislation that puts fear in would-be corporate criminals. Stiff prison sentences for white collar criminals are a must and not an option.

High-level executives who have defrauded investors, misled employees, and mismanaged company pension funds must be held accountable.

I support legislation that requires honest accounting, independent investment advice, sensible regulation, and criminal penalties for those guilty of wrongdoing. We cannot have economic growth without eliminating corporate crime.

HIV/AIDS FUNDING

(Mr. KIRK asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. KIRK. Mr. Speaker, the HIV epidemic is making headlines in the international AIDS conference in Barcelona. New projections concerning the disease show there is little good news.

Secretary Thompson leads the U.S. delegation, and I thank him for his recent commitment to work with China to fight HIV. The United States will sponsor collaboration with China using a $14 million CDC grant for research on HIV prevention and treatment. China currently has over a million cases of HIV, estimated to rise to over 10 million by 2010. HIV has no cure, and prevention is our only means to fight it.

Since the President set a precedent for funding CDC work in China, he should also fund the U.N. population fund. UNFPA provides family planning services in 140 countries, including Mexico, and supports HIV awareness campaigns in 78 countries. The $34 million approved by Congress for UNFPA is being held because UNFPA works in China, but we are now funding CDC work in China, so it is hard to see the distinction.

Mr. Speaker, we need every tool to fight this lethal disease. Our contribution to UNFPA will help reduce the immigration pressure on the United States, reduce the damage of overpopulation, and slow the spread of HIV. I urge the President to fund both CDC and UNFPA.

CORPORATE ACCOUNTABILITY

(Mr. PASCRELL asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. PASCRELL. Mr. Speaker, the other evening the President provided a policy speech on corporate accountability. In response to the President's speech, business experts such as John Bogle, founder of Vanguard Group, stated that in terms of real substance of what will solve the problems, it does not get nearly as far as I would have hoped. I agree with Mr. Bogle, Mr. Speaker.

While the President discusses transparency and required disclosures by corporate executives, his own Vice President refuses to disclose which energy moguls sat in the White House and put together our energy policy. None of us on either side of the aisle should be cavalier about these problems. These are systemic, serious problems. We are not talking about a few bad apples.

When regulators refuse to do their job, the result is that the American people are injured. Just look at the situation with Enron and the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission. Members know Enron was manipulating the system. Lawmakers have been urging FERC to investigate market manipulation long before the Enron scandal broke.

When FERC's chairman, Pat Wood, who was handpicked by Enron's Ken Lay, joined FERC last June, he said it was FERC's job to act like a vigilant market cop walking the beat.

I would say the fox is guarding the hen house. These regulators ought to resign.

CORPORATE RESPONSIBILITY

(Mr. KINGSTON asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. KINGSTON. Mr. Speaker, when I was selling football programs at the University of Georgia back when I was in junior high, I was robbed once. Two older kids beat me up and took about $100. I felt humiliated and violated. Victims of crime, and I have talked to many victims of crime, it is a very personal thing.

But yet when somebody steals a worker's pension plan, their retirement money, or cooks the books and devalues the stock, there is no difference. In fact, I would say the criminals who come out of the closet and beat their victims up and take their money are, if anything, more noble than corporate CEOs who do this behind the books of accounting procedures and fancy talk, and certainly do not follow the general accounting principles.

That is why this House on April 24 passed corporate accountability. There is no difference between ethics and business ethics. Businesses have to operate with honesty and integrity. We need that in society. Too many widows and orphans are counting on their stock to be the value they claim it is worth. That is why people buy it in their retirement account.

I am glad that the Senate is moving on this legislation. We passed it out of the House 3 months ago, but let us get it to the conference committee so we can address corporate accountability. America needs it. Business integrity is important for the prosperity of our country.

CORPORATE RESPONSIBILITY

(Mr. EHLERS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. EHLERS. Mr. Speaker, some corporate executives have been lying and cheating. They have betrayed their companies, their stockholders, their employees, and the public. I am angry about it. They are as bad as the previous speaker said, as bad as a street punk who mugs someone. It is totally unacceptable behavior.

At the same time, we have to recognize this is just a small fraction of the corporate executives in the country, just as the aberrant priests in the Catholic Church are a very small fraction of that church. Or the number of Members in this body who are accused and convicted of breaking the law are a small number of this body. Nevertheless, their behavior is totally unacceptable, and we have to take action.

It is not simply a matter of changing the law or strengthening the law, although that may be part of it. What we need is enforcement of the law. I am pleased President Bush went to Wall Street yesterday and spoke to them about the need for enforcing the law and enforcing regulations. We must do that. It is not just a matter of punishment, but we also should seek retribution from these highly paid executives who have cheated employees out of their 401(k) accounts, who betrayed stockholders and reduced the value of the company; and not only that, have scared the American public from participating in the stock market.

Mr. Speaker, it is high time that our Nation take action against these individuals, both through regulation and enforcement of the law. I hope it happens soon. The American people are angry at this betrayal of the free enterprise system. I am angry about it, and we have to see that something is done about it.

PROVIDING FOR CONSIDERATION OF H.R. 2486, INLAND FLOOD FORECASTING AND WARNING SYSTEM ACT OF 2002

Mr. DIAZ-BALART. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up House Resolution 473 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

H. RES. 473

Resolved, That at any time after the adoption of this resolution the Speaker may, pursuant to clause 2(b) of rule XVIII, declare the House resolved into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for consideration of the bill (H.R. 2486) to authorize the National Weather Service to conduct research and development, training, and outreach activities relating to tropical cyclone inland forecasting improvement, and for other purposes. The first reading of the bill shall be dispensed with. General debate shall be confined to the bill and shall not exceed one hour equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Science. After general debate the bill shall be considered for amendment under the five-minute rule. It shall be in order to consider as an original bill for the purpose of amendment under the five-minute rule the amendment in the nature of a substitute recommended by the Committee on Science now printed in the bill. Each section of the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute shall be considered as read. During consideration of the bill for amendment, the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole may accord priority in recognition on the basis of whether the Member offering an amendment has caused it to be printed in the portion of the Congressional Record designated for that purpose in clause 8 of rule XVIII. Amendments so printed shall be considered as read. At the conclusion of consideration of the bill for amendment the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted. Any Member may demand a separate vote in the House on any amendment adopted in the Committee of the Whole to the bill or to the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute. The previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommend with or without instructions.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. QUINN). The gentleman from Florida (Mr. DIAZ-BALART) is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. DIAZ-BALART. Mr. Speaker, for the purpose of debate only, I yield the customary 30 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. MCGOVERN), pending which I yield myself such time as I may consume. During consideration of this resolution, all time yielded is for the purpose of debate only.

Mr. DIAZ-BALART. Mr. Speaker, House Resolution 473 is an open rule providing for the consideration of H.R. 2486, the Inland Flood Forecasting and Warning System Act of 2002. The rule provides 1 hour of general debate evenly divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Science.

This is a fair and balanced rule that will afford Members every opportunity to debate the important issue before us.

The underlying legislation will help to improve the capability to forecast accurately inland flooding associated with tropical cyclones. Florida knows the fury of hurricanes all too well, but the damage goes much deeper than that which occurs on our battered coasts.

As storms move inland, they begin to slow and often come to a stop over a particular area. The residents of my district in western Miami-Dade County have seen firsthand the damage that inland flooding can cause. Hurricanes and other tropical disturbances cause homes to flood and streets to become impassable. The danger associated with this type of flooding is a major issue that many Americans are simply not aware of.

This legislation instructs the National Weather Service to develop, test, and deploy an inland flood warning system for use by public and emergency management officials. With passage of the legislation, we will also provide increased training to improve forecasting and risk-management techniques for inland flooding.

Mr. Speaker, this is a good bill. It will help protect Americans across the Nation. I urge, accordingly, my colleagues to support this open rule and the underlying legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. MCGOVERN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Florida (Mr. DIAZ-BALART) for yielding me the customary 30 minutes. This is a fair and open rule for a non-controversial bill. H.R. 2486 will direct the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration, through the U.S. Weather Research Program, to improve the ability to accurately forecast inland flooding. Additionally, this bill will direct NOAA to develop, test, and install a new flood warning index so that weather service personnel and local meteorologists will be able to explain the dangers of weather emergencies to the public.

Currently, the National Weather Service does not have the ability to accurately forecast coastal inland flooding caused by either tropical cyclones or excessive heavy rains. This legislation gives the National Weather Service the technology to better forecast these natural disasters.

Simply put, the information that will be provided by the National Weather Service to the American public is a vital step towards limiting fatalities and property damage.

As many remember, Hurricane Floyd killed 48 people and caused almost $3 billion in property damage to inland locations in 1999. One year later, Tropical Storm Allison left areas of Texas with over 35 inches of rain, and then continued its course through the southwest, ultimately leading to the deaths of more than 50 people.

Over the past week, eight people have died and two more are missing as a result of over 30 inches of rain in Texas. According to the Red Cross, at least 48,000 houses have been affected by this rainfall and flash flooding.

The Governor of Texas estimates this damage will cost over $1 billion. These examples of fatalities and property damage were a direct result of inland flooding.

The New England region also suffers from severe storms that result in devastating inland flooding. In 2000, a Nor'easter hit the coast of Massachusetts, and FEMA and other Federal agencies are still working with families and businesses in central Massachusetts on recovery programs. Based on information gathered as a result of this legislation, families and communities will be better able to plan for these storms. Hopefully this will lead to saving lives and property across the country.

Mr. Speaker, this bill was unanimously referred to the House by the Committee on Science. It authorizes approximately $1 million annually for FY 2003 through FY 2007. Of that, $250,000 can be used for merit review grants to colleges and universities like the Worcester Polytechnic Institute and the University of Massachusetts-Dartmouth, which are in my congressional district, for improving coastal and inland flooding forecasting.

In order to avoid a recurrence of the devastating results of previous inland flooding, NOAA needs this funding to develop research that will help solve these problems. The bill before us today is an important step in that direction.

Mr. Speaker, I commend the members of the Committee on Science for their bipartisan work on this bill. I especially want to thank my colleague, the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. ETHERIDGE), for his leadership on this issue. I ask Members to support this open rule and to support the Inland Flood Forecasting and Warning System Act. I hope this Congress will not just authorize these important programs, but make sure the funds are made available to carry them out.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. DIAZ-BALART. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. EHLERS), the distinguished chairman of the Subcommittee on Environment, Technology, and Standards of the Committee on Science.

Mr. EHLERS. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me time.

Mr. Speaker, most Americans do not understand the power of floods until they encounter them. Floods cause an immense amount of damage to this Nation and also cause an average of approximately 100 deaths per year throughout America. Most Americans are not aware of how dangerous they are and do not realize that we lose almost as many people to floods as we do to tornadoes within this country.

Flooding affects every Congressional District in this country. The force of only 6 inches of swiftly moving water can easily knock people off their feet and carry them away into a nearby stream. The force of 2 feet of moving water can sweep cars away.

I am sure all of us have seen night after night on the evening news pictures of cars being trapped in water and we say, how could that happen? How could these people not know the danger? But it fools us. We think it is a small amount of water, but there is so much force that it can easily stall a car or sweep it away and carry it down the river.

The public needs more useful information about flooding, about the nature of floods, the damage from floods, and, most importantly, they need more and better information about when floods are likely to occur.

The bill that is before us, H.R. 2486, the Inland Flood Forecasting and Warning System Act, which came out of our subcommittee, provides that the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration, better known as NOAA, will have a $6 million authorization for a 5-year period to, first of all, develop a new flood warning index that will give the public, the media, and emergency management officials more useful information about the risks and dangers posed by expected floods.

We have done very well in this country in terms of tornado warnings, we have done very well in terms of hurricane warnings, and we have saved not just hundreds, but thousands, of lives over the past few decades with these new warning systems that have been in place. But we have ignored the need to warn people about floods; and not just about the general nature of a flood, but we have to outline roughly the boundaries of the expected flood so people know when to evacuate before the water hits them. So this bill will help develop the new flood warning index that will be understandable by the public, can be easily broadcast by the media, so that we can give warnings out so people will know precisely what to do before the flood hits.

The second aspect of the bill is that it will conduct research and develop, new flooding models, to improve the capability to more accurately forecast inland flooding due to tropical storms. Most people are not aware of the fact that deaths from hurricanes are not from these strong winds that come in from offshore. Most of the deaths are due to floods which occur when the hurricane moves inland and drops huge amounts of rain with resulting flood waters occurring.

It is an excellent bill. I was very pleased to work with the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. ETHERIDGE) on this bill. We have perfected it in every way possible. It will serve the people of our Nation well. I urge that we pass this rule and then pass the bill.

Mr. McGOVERN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. DIAZ-BALART. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Texas (Mr. BRADY).

Mr. BRADY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the leadership of the Committee on Rules and appreciate the leadership of the subcommittee chairman, the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. EHLERS), on this issue.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to express my strong support for the Inland Flood Forecasting and Warning System Act and urge all Members to vote for this important, truly lifesaving, measure.

Mr. Speaker, when flood water starts to pour through your front door, it does not care if you are a Republican or Democrat, and for this reason I am pleased to be an original cosponsor in working on this common-sense bill with my colleague, the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. ETHERIDGE), and fellow Texan, the gentleman from Texas (Mr. HALL).

When it comes to hurricanes and tropical storms, the gulf coast of Texas where I am from is pretty experienced. The hurricane season is something we prepare for, we monitor daily and we have grown to live with.

However, we were hit especially hard by Tropical Storm Allison, and it was extremely difficult to see lives lost and people left homeless in its aftermath. Tropical Storm Allison was the costliest tropical storm in U.S. history, both in terms of life and in property damage. That means homes, things people have worked their lives for. More than 50 people died. The storm caused more than $5 billion in damage throughout the Southeast United States, but especially in our Houston area, where 35 inches of rain fell in just a few days.

The amount of flooding and the unprecedented damage caused by Allison surprised even the most experienced among us. It has caused our communities to wonder whether we are doing all we can to prepare for and prevent this level of damage in the future.

This legislation is a big step forward in the right direction. It would help prepare residents for future natural events like Allison by finding ways to improve the weather system modeling and early forecasting. It would allow NOAA, the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration, to develop an inland early warning index so we would understand how severe these storms could be, and then to train our emergency management personnel in improving these methods.

Here is the key point: Research that leads to earlier, more accurate forecasting is a sound investment, an awfully sound investment. So is finding new ways to alert communities to inland flooding. Flooding affects all of us in the United States, as the gentleman from Michigan (Chairman EHLERS) told us.

In conclusion, I will tell you, no one can control the weather, but we can certainly control our preparation for it. This bill will help provide inland residents with the warning system that raises the awareness of the destructiveness of such storms so we can protect ourselves, our families and our property, as well as ultimately lowering tax costs to the United States taxpayers.

I urge all of my colleagues to support this very important bill.

Mr. McGOVERN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I will just simply close by reminding my colleagues that this is a fair and open rule for a good bill, and I would urge my colleagues to support the rule and support the bill.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. DIAZ-BALART. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I also would urge all of my colleagues to support the rule as well as the underlying legislation, for which the debate will now begin shortly.

Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, I yield back the balance of my time, and I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PROVIDING FOR CONSIDERATION OF H.R. 2733, ENTERPRISE INTEGRATION ACT OF 2002

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up House Resolution 474 and ask for its immediate consideration.

H. RES. 474

Resolved, That at any time after the adoption of this resolution the Speaker may, pursuant to clause 2(b) of rule XVIII, declare the House resolved into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for consideration of the bill (H.R. 2733) to authorize the National Institute of Standards and Technology to work with major manufacturing industries on an initiative of standards development and implementation for electronic enterprise integration. The first reading of the bill shall be dispensed with. General debate shall be confined to the bill and shall not exceed one hour equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Science. After general debate the bill shall be considered for amendment under the five-minute rule. It shall be in order to consider as an original bill for the purpose of amendment under the five-minute rule the amendment in the nature of a substitute recommended by the Committee on Science now printed in the bill. Each section of the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute shall be considered as read. During consideration of the bill for amendment, the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole may accord priority in recognition on the basis of whether the Member offering an amendment has caused it to be printed in the portion of the Congressional Record designated for that purpose in clause 8 of rule XVIII. Amendments so printed shall be considered as read. At the conclusion of consideration of the bill for amendment the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted. Any Member may demand a separate vote in the House on any amendment adopted in the Committee of the Whole to the bill or to the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute. The previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit with or without instructions.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. QUINN). The gentleman from Texas (Mr. SESSIONS) is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. Speaker, for the purpose of debate only, I yield the customary 30 minutes to my friend, the gentlewoman from New York (Ms.

SLAUGHTER), pending which I yield myself such time as I may consume. During consideration of this resolution, all time yielded is for the purpose of debate only.

Mr. Speaker, the resolution before us is an open rule that provides for consideration of H.R. 2733, the Enterprise Integration Act of 2002. The rule allows for 1 hour of general debate and provides that the amendment in the nature of a substitute recommended by the Committee on Science shall be considered as an original bill for the purposes of amendment. Priority in recognition will be given to Members whose amendments were preprinted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. Finally, the rule provides for one motion to recommit, with or without instructions.

Mr. Speaker, today the House will consider H.R. 2733, the Enterprise Integration Act. The bill authorizes the National Institute of Standards and Technology to work with major manufacturing industries to set standards for developing and implementing electronic enterprise integration.

Before the Internet, factories were automated on their own with no consideration of how to share manufacturing data. Factories installed software packages that best met their individual needs or customized software to address particular problems. This resulted in a typical supply chain where suppliers used a variety of different and incompatible software packages.

The burden resulting from incompatible software was more pronounced further down the supply chain as smaller companies had to comply with all the manufacturers higher up the chain. These companies, who must bear the greatest burden, tend to be the ones least able to afford multiple software systems.

However, the Internet and other technological advances have made it possible for manufacturing companies to work together electronically, something that was impossible just a few years ago. This seamless exchange of information, along with the vertical supply chain, is known as enterprise integration.

For example, if Ford Motor Company decided to change a design specification for a bumper, every one of the suppliers that contribute to that part would then have the ability to easily and quickly see the new specification and how it would impact their component.

This integration helps large and small businesses all along the supply chain to reduce costs and productivity times.

A 1999 study commissioned by the National Institute of Standards and Technology estimated that enterprise integration in the auto supply chains of General Motors, Ford, and Chrysler would result in a potential savings of at least $1 billion annually.

This estimated savings from just select companies in the automobile industry is an example. Similar savings are also possible all across other industries such as shipbuilding, major construction, home-building, furniture manufacturing, and electronics manufacturing, just to name a few.

One solution to compatibility problems in design and manufacturing is to develop standards for the exchange of product data. Through this legislation, the NIST, which has 20 years of experience in this area, will be tasked to work with government and industry representatives to identify and develop ways of enterprise standardization and integration.

The measure also requires NIST to work with companies and trade associations to raise awareness of enterprise integration activities, as well as developing training materials for businesses to participate in an integrated enterprise.

Manufacturers today must be more flexible, efficient, and responsive to the changing needs and preferences of consumers. The European Union understands the importance of enterprise integration and has already been aggressively developing standardized protocols in such areas as I have talked about. In order to maintain and remain competitive to ensure that international standards are compatible with U.S. software packages, the United States must be active in helping to develop these standards.

Mr. Speaker, in this day where technology is so intertwined with our economic prosperity, we must take the necessary steps to streamline our operations and ensure that there is coordination from top to bottom. I commend the gentleman from New York (Mr. BOEHLERT), the chairman of the Committee on Science, and the Committee on Science for taking this necessary first step to ensure that our manufacturing industries are not only able to function more efficiently, but also to remain competitive worldwide.

I urge my colleagues to support this fair and open rule, as well as the underlying legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Ms. SLAUGHTER. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Texas (Mr. SESSIONS) for yielding me the customary 30 minutes, and I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the open rule. Again, Mr. Speaker, this is an entirely noncontroversial measure that might have been put on the suspension calendar, but nevertheless, it is an important measure for many regions of the country, including my own district in upstate New York, and I urge its favorable consideration.

Mr. Speaker, the manufacturing sector remains one of the most critical economic engines of the U.S. economy. My region of the country, with a combination of Fortune 500 companies, as well as midsize and smaller firms, has emerged as the leading per capita exporting city in America. Many of our smaller and midsize firms have become the lifeblood of our community and, indeed, have led the Nation in innovation and expansion. These firms know the critical importance of a coordinated exchange of information up and down the supply chain.

With the emergence of the World Wide Web, international standards for product data exchange greatly accelerated the movement toward electronically integrated supply chains during the last half of the 1990s. European and Asian countries are investing heavily in preparing their smaller manufacturers to do business in the new environment. European efforts are well advanced in the aerospace, automotive, and shipbuilding industries and are beginning in other industries, including home building, furniture manufacturing, textiles, and apparel. This investment could give overseas companies a major competitive advantage in the months and years to come.

The legislation before us today will give the small manufacturers in the United States access to the same electronic integration that the large firms enjoy. The measure would increase efficiency and productivity throughout all sectors of our economy by providing technical and financial assistance to small- and medium-sized businesses.

I was pleased to see in this legislation that the National Institute of Standards and Technology would spearhead these efforts. With a long history of working cooperatively with manufacturers, and the nationwide reach which of its manufacturing extension program, the institute is in a unique position to help the United States, large and small manufacturers alike, in their responses on this challenge.

Moreover, the institute will involve the Manufacturing Extension Program, MEP, which I know firsthand is making a real difference in my district. The MEP program, through High Tech Rochester, has assisted more than 1,000 small manufacturing firms within my district. Established in 1987, High Tech Rochester has been a force in the region's economy. By 1997, High Tech Rochester could boast that its client base had collectively realized a 2½-fold growth in employment and a $43 million increase in sales to $61 million. Enterprise integration, as provided for in this bill, would provide High Tech Rochester and other successful MEP programs throughout the Nation with a promising new tool to assist the small manufacturing firms.

Mr. Speaker, I have seen what a difference this kind of support can make for not only existing small manufacturers, but for manufacturing start-ups. High Tech Rochester's business incubator supports fledgling small businesses by helping them to spin off, creating new companies to diversify the economy, making it stronger in the long run.

I have been a strong supporter of High Tech Rochester's business incubator program which, over the past 4 years, has successfully supported dozens of start-up companies to ensure that they survive in their first years in business. It has been a tremendous success. In the year 2000, four companies "graduated" from the facility and moved to new larger facilities in our community. By their graduation, the combined numbers grew from 13 to 61, a nearly 370 percent increase. In 2001, the facility graduated twice as many firms, and we look forward to them doubling the success of their predecessors.

It is my firm hope that other regions of the country will benefit from similar programs, and I urge my colleagues to support this measure.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Grand Rapids, Michigan (Mr. EHLERS), the rocket scientist from the Republican Conference.

Mr. EHLERS. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

In 1994, when I first arrived in this Congress, I was absolutely astounded. I went to my office and, first of all, found that I did not have a computer in my office, but when I tried to use staff computers to send e-mails, I discovered that I could send an e-mail more easily and more rapidly to Moscow than I could to a colleague 20 feet down the hall. Why was that? Because in the House of Representatives, we had allowed a system to develop that did not have standards for the whole House of Representatives, and each Representative had a kingdom where they had set their own standards for their computer systems. Each individual system could not talk to each other.

When the Republicans took the majority, then Speaker Gingrich put me in charge of standardizing the system. Today, we have a system that seamlessly allows over 10 million e-mails a month to flow between offices in this Capitol, saving us a lot of money and a lot of staff time. That is an illustration of what we can accomplish with standards. Without standards, this place barely functioned in terms of Internet usage, e-mail and Web sites. Today, with standards, it functions extremely well, and the American people have access to each and every one of us almost instantaneously, and the American public, through Web sites, can receive information on our activities instantaneously.

This bill is about something similar. It will help industry by setting standards—standards for enterprises working together. Let me give an example.

A smaller auto parts supplier from my district visited me recently. As my colleagues know, in Michigan we make a lot of automobiles and we have many auto parts suppliers around the State. He had a good business. But he commented that he was working very well with the Japanese manufacturer. He was making parts for this manufacturer, who manufactured cars in this country, and they had a good system working together.

Everything was computerized, everything was set up from the beginning so each side knew exactly what the other was doing, and they could relate to each other well. But with the American manufacturers, they did not have that relationship. They were trying to establish it, but it was going to be different than the one with the Japanese manufacturer, so he was going to have to have two different systems to deal with these two different manufacturers.

That does not make sense, and that is what this bill is about: so that small businesses such as this gentleman's can be assured that whichever manufacturer he makes parts for, he will be able to use the same communication system via the Internet, and that his business will flourish, because it will reduce his expenses tremendously.

This bill will help both large and small manufacturers alike, because it will cut costs and improve efficiency. By taking advantage of information technology such as the Internet and other parameters relating to that, our manufacturing industry will be able to fully integrate their supply chain so information will be able to flow freely up and down the supply chain.

This integration, however, will require the development of standards on how the information is going to be exchanged between businesses within a supply chain. Going back to my example of the small parts supplier working with the Japanese manufacturer and American manufacturer, each of them thinks their own standards are the best. There has to be some outside force that works out the differences and gets agreement.

This bill will provide that outside force by supporting this integration through authorizing the National Institute of Standards and Technology, better known as NIST, to work with industry to identify what research, testing, and development needs to be undertaken to develop these information exchange standards. NIST has been in the standards business for over 150 years. They are experienced at this. They are experts at bringing together different parties and establishing standards, and this is the logical place to put this particular effort.

This legislation provides NIST an authorization of $47 million over 4 years, starting with $2 million in fiscal year 2002 and ramping up to $20 million in fiscal year 2005; and with this money, they will be able to carry out this effort.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to support this rule and this legislation. Small and large businesses in America will benefit from it. I urge my colleagues to vote for this rule and this bill.

Ms. SLAUGHTER. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Rochester, Minnesota (Mr. GUTKNECHT).

Mr. GUTKNECHT. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time. I rise in support of this rule and this bill.

There is an old expression that ideas in children are brilliant when they are your own, and we have a problem sometimes with technology because we have one group who has an idea and another group that has an idea, and they begin to speak different languages. What this bill, the Enterprise Integration Act of 2002, is about is ultimately getting everybody talking the same language.

Imagine, for example, if we had a situation where pilots from one airline here in the United States spoke Greek and the next one spoke Latin and the next one spoke German; what we want them all speaking is the same language.

It is said that 50 percent of our economic growth over the next 10 years is going to come from small business. It is also said that more than 50 percent of our economic growth is going to come from technology. This is the way we tie together small business and technology. This is a very, very important bill in the long-term economic future of this country, and particularly for our small businesses here in the United States.

Let me take a minute, though, to say what a wonderful agency the National Institute of Standards and Technology is. I have had the chance to visit two of their campuses, and I cannot tell my colleagues enough how impressed I am with the scientists who work there. The National Institute of Standards and Technology is involved in all kinds of basic research. They study everything from fire to atomic clocks, and they do it very well and they do it on a very limited budget.

In fact, I was so impressed when the chairman and I went out to Boulder, Colorado, to see the way they do business out there at their labs to see how much duct tape they are using in their various labs, and this is very high technology that they are working on. They do not waste any of the taxpayers' money, but what they do best is come up with standards so that various industries are all working on the same language, and the language of science is something that is probably way above my ability to completely understand, and we are delighted to have the good doctor being a very important part of this discussion, but I understand this: if we can get big business and small business, manufacturers and suppliers, all using the same language, both the big business, the small business, the consumer, everyone; the American economy will benefit.

This is a very important piece of legislation. I hope Members will join me in supporting the rule and the bill.

Ms. SLAUGHTER. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

The Committee on Rules brought this rule forward. It is great legislation. It makes sense. It will aid not only small business but encourage the opportunity for big business and small business to be more competitive around the globe. In my prior life, I worked for a company that was called Bell Communications Research, formerly known as Bell Labs. It was our mission at that time to make sure that we ensured the standards for the telecommunications industry were the same across the United States, albeit the world.

The ability to speak together in the same language, as the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. GUTKNECHT) talked about, is so critical to the success of people who are trying to provide products worldwide. This not only makes sense, what we are doing, but it will help America be more competitive. I wholeheartedly support not only this rule but the underlying legislation. And I would say, Mr. Speaker, that this is a great bill; and I urge my colleagues to support this.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time, and I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

INLAND FLOOD FORECASTING AND WARNING SYSTEM ACT OF 2002

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SESSIONS). Pursuant to House Resolution 473 and rule XVIII, the Chair declares the House in the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill, H.R. 2486.

IN THE COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Accordingly, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 2486) to authorize the National Weather Service to conduct research and development, training, and outreach activities relating to tropical cyclone inland forecasting improvement, and for other purposes, with Mr. QUINN in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Pursuant to the rule, the bill is considered as having been read the first time.

Under the rule, the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. EHLERS) and the gentleman from Texas (Mr. HALL) each will control 30 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. EHLERS).

Mr. EHLERS. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

I rise today in strong support of H.R. 2486, the Inland Flood Forecast and Warning System Act of 2002.

Mr. Chairman, everyone talks about the weather, but no one does anything about it. That is a famous statement I remember from my youth, but I am here today to talk about a way that we are going to do something about the weather.

When it comes to hurricanes, wind speeds do not tell the whole story. Hurricanes produce storm surges, tornadoes, and often the most deadly of all, inland flooding. While storm surge is always a potential threat, more than half of all deaths associated with tropical cyclones during the last 30 years are due to inland flooding.

Inland flooding can be a major threat to communities hundreds of miles from the coast. In 1999, Hurricane Floyd killed 48 people and caused nearly $3 billion in property damage, primarily because of flooding of inland communities. The severity was quite unexpected because these communities are 50 to 100 miles inland from hurricane landfall. However, this type of flooding has become all too common.

While the National Weather Service has the ability to accurately predict most flood events, it has difficulty in forecasting inland flooding events that are caused by tropical cyclones.

In addition, the flood warning index currently used by the National Weather Service for all flood events does not include enough information about the potential risks and dangers posed by expected floods. This index defines floods as minor, moderate, or major. Sometimes the category is accompanied by a warning of a comparable flood from another year. However, most major floods happen several years or even decades apart, so this information may not be very helpful. We need only to watch the news during the past few weeks as flooding in Texas has caused the deaths of many people.

It is time for a new warning system that will provide more information to emergency managers and the public and will save lives in the process.

This bill, H.R. 2486, the Inland Flood Forecasting and Warning System Act of 2002, provides the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration, lovingly known as NOAA, an authorization of $5.75 million over 5 years to do several things: first, improve the capability to accurately forecast inland flooding, including flooding influenced by coastal and ocean storms, through research and modeling; second, develop, test, and deploy an inland flood-warning index that will give the public, the media, and emergency management officials more accurate information about the risks and dangers posed by expected floods; third, train emergency management officials, National Weather Service personnel, meteorologists, and others regarding the improved forecasting techniques for inland flooding, risk-management techniques, and the use of the new flood-warning index; and, fourth, conduct research, outreach, and education activities for local meteorologists, media, and the public regarding the dangers and risks associated with inland flooding, as well as the use and understanding of the new inland flood-warning index.

Mr. Chairman, I want to thank the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. ETHERIDGE) for introducing this important bill. It was my pleasure to work closely with him in perfecting it.

I might add, Mr. Chairman, that the two bills before us this day coming from my subcommittee were both authored by Democrats, and in both cases I worked very closely with them. That is a good example of the bipartisanship that one experiences on the Committee on Science, and I believe is a model for other committees, as well.

It was the district of the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. ETHERIDGE) that suffered the loss of 48 people in 1999 because of the unexpected severe inland flooding caused by Hurricane Floyd. I appreciate his leadership by responding with this legislation, which will help communities to more fully understand the risks and dangers of floods. We worked together closely during consideration of the bill in the Committee on Science to ensure that the new flood-warning index would help all our States, whether landlocked or coastal.

But, more importantly, I am confident that training managers in the use of this new index and educating the public on its meaning and importance will save lives.

This bill received strong bipartisan support in the Committee on Science, and I urge all of my colleagues to vote in favor of this important and timely piece of legislation.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. HALL of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of H.R. 2486, the Inland Flood Forecasting and Warning System Act of 2002. This legislation was developed by the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. ETHERIDGE), who has done a good job on it. He has worked on it for quite some time. I have great admiration for the gentleman. He is from the home State of my father and most of my family. He is a gentleman, and good to work with.

This bill has strong bipartisan support, not only on the committee but among Members from coastal areas, as well. The gentleman from Michigan (Chairman EHLERS) has already outlined the provisions of this bill, so I just want to take a few minutes to talk about the need for this legislation.

Flooding affects, of course, every part of the country; and although we have improved our flood forecasting capabilities, we still lack an effective means of transmitting to the public the nature and severity of a flood.

Mr. Chairman, one day this country will capture and hold the devastating flood waters to fight future droughts in additional lakes, above-ground giant containers, and some underwater storage. Water and fire, fearful enemies, could become wonderful friends for the future to allow these devastating floods to fight the droughts.

One of the least-understood flood patterns is related to tropical storms. For example, we still do not fully understand the interaction between storm surges and flooding caused by precipitation. As a result, our flood forecasting is often inaccurate. In addition, tropical storms impact not only coastal areas, but can have devastating and disastrous effects as they continue to move inland.

For example, Tropical Storm Allison dumped more than 35 inches of rain on my State of Texas. There were 50 deaths. The flood damage to Houston and surrounding areas was estimated in the several billions of dollars. Just last week, parts of central Texas received more than 30 inches of rain.

In Texas, we have firsthand knowledge about the damaging effects of floods, so I am proud to be a cosponsor of this legislation, and I strongly support the efforts of the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. ETHERIDGE) to develop an improved inland flood-forecasting index. I also want to thank the gentleman from Michigan (Chairman EHLERS) and the gentleman from New York (Chairman BOEHLERT) for their strong support of this legislation. I urge my colleagues to vote "yes" on the so-called Etheridge bill.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. EHLERS. Mr. Chairman, it is my pleasure to yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Texas (Mr. BRADY), who has firsthand experience with the problems this bill is designed to address, because, as we know, there have been some disastrous floods in Texas the past week.

Mr. BRADY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the gentleman's leadership as subcommittee chairman on this important issue to our region and the Nation as well. I also especially appreciate the leadership of my colleague, the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. ETHERIDGE), as well as the gentleman from Texas (Mr. HALL), who have taken such a lead role in this legislation.

When flood waters come through our homes, destroy our businesses, knock out our local hospitals, it does not care if we are Republican or Democrat; it just does the damage. In Houston, Tropical Storm Allison, we are told, was the costliest tropical storm. We lost 50 lives, 50 neighbors in that storm.

We have lost some $5 billion in our damage to our homes and businesses; and in our medical research center, we lost just tons of research in so many areas, from cancer to genetics, in some of our life-saving research that is being done. Some of the experiments that we lost were 10 years in the making. Scientific experts tell us that there was not a single discipline of science that was not in some way set back from the loss of research from Tropical Storm Allison.

What we heard over and over in our community was that people, families and businesses, were saying, if we only had some notice; if we only had some warning about this devastation, we could have prevented it, or we could have lessened the damage. This is why I appreciate the lead of the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. Chairman, this bill is so commonsense. It says, let us invest in the research which tells us why this flooding is coming and how quickly it is coming, and then let us do an early warning system for us, for those of us in the community, so we know how severe this storm would be on inland flooding and how it could affect us, so we can take those preventive steps.

Then it goes another step and works with our local emergency response people to train them how to respond so they can assist us in leaving that area and preventing that damage, that loss of lives and loss of property.

I am convinced that in our region, which is very experienced in flooding, we were watching for flooding from the coast. We were prepared for the punch from the right; we did not see the punch from the left, from inland flooding. That is what I appreciate so much about this bill.

□ 1130

It takes the inland flooding, provides the research, gives us the warning, trains the communities to prevent. And I am convinced this will save lives, it will save properties, it will save tax dollars to us in the end. It is a compassionate, smart, intelligent investment and the very best next step in preventing inland flooding.

Mr. HALL of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. ETHERIDGE).

Mr. ETHERIDGE. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from Texas (Mr. HALL) for yielding me time. I also want to take this opportunity to thank the gentleman from New York (Mr. BOEHLERT) and the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. EHLERS) and others who have been on the Committee on Science, who have helped so much with this piece of legislation. As the gentleman said earlier, the Committee on Science has a tradition of bipartisanship and this bill is another indication of that bipartisanship at work.

Mr. Chairman, as the 2002 hurricane season begins to heat up, I am pleased that we were able to get H.R. 2486, a bill to improve the forecasting of inland flooding and develop an inland flooding index on the floor of the House, and hopefully we can get it through quickly to the Senate and on to the President.

I know it seems a bit strange, and if the folks back home happen to be watching this morning, to be talking about flooding when my State and many other States across this country are facing some extreme drought conditions, some of the worst we have seen certainly in our State in almost 100 years. But much of my district desperately needs rain today, and right now they would like to have a little rain to bring some of the plants to life and replenish our falling water supplies.

However, we in North Carolina know all too well how devastating tropical storms and hurricanes can be. As you have already heard, just 3 years ago in 1999, Hurricane Floyd killed 48 of our citizens. Almost all of them lived hundreds of miles from the coast, and died not from storm surge as we have heard, not from hurricane wind forces, but from flooding caused by the torrential rains associated with the tropical storms. And as we have already heard this morning, the one thing they did not have was time because this storm hit at night. People lost their lives, they lost their property, and many people lost everything they had because they did not have the one thing that would have made all the difference in the world, which was time.

Last year Tropical Storm Allison, as we have heard others talking about already, demonstrated all too effectively the power of these floods, killing more than 50 people in several States, starting in Texas and moving up the eastern coast; and more recently torrential rains have caused major flooding in Texas all over again, killing 12 people. These and other storms clearly indicate that current methods of predicting whether storm rains will produce heavy flooding are insufficient and that flood warnings are tragically inadequate.

Last year, the House Subcommittee on Environment, Technology and Standards of the Committee on Science heard testimony as to the need of improving the inland flooding forecasting and developing a better warning system that raises public awareness on the destructiveness of inland flooding so people can protect themselves, their property and their families.

Ever since Floyd hit my State with such devastating power, I have been working with experts in storm predictions to help develop an effective piece of legislation to respond, and H.R. 2486 is the result of that effort with my colleagues here in the House.

This bill authorizes a small sum in the terms of the dollars we produce, only $5.75 million over 5 years to provide the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration with additional resources to enhance the science of flood prediction and, more importantly, develop an improved, effective flood warning index that really will save lives and warn people. NOAA's forecast for this year calls for the potential of nine to 13 tropical storms in the Atlantic, including six to eight hurricanes with two to three of them to be classified as major hurricanes, Category 3 or higher on the Saffir-Simpson scale.

William Gray, a professor of atmospheric sciences at Colorado State University and a leading hurricane expert, predicts a 75 percent chance of a Category 3 or higher hurricane striking land in the United States this year. In an average year, that chance is only 52 percent, so you can see this year we stand a chance of really getting hit. Let me repeat that. Experts say there is a 75 percent chance the United States could experience another Floyd, another Fran, another Andrew, or another devastating storm hitting the U.S. coast.

When you consider that more than 50 percent of America's population lives in coastal areas around this country, that makes it a frightening prediction. That is why, along with 23 of my colleagues, I have sponsored H.R. 2486, because as our Nation enters what appears to be a period of increasing storm activity, we need to better understand the damages these storms can cause and better inform our citizens of the danger that these storms pose.

I am pleased that this measure has won the bipartisan support of so many of my colleagues on the Committee on Science, including the gentleman from New York (Mr. BOEHLERT), the gentleman from Texas (Mr. HALL), the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. EHLERS) and others. I want to thank the gentlemen, as well as the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. BARCIA), for their help on the subcommittee, for their assistance in moving this legislation forward.

I want to express my appreciation to the staff of the full Committee on Science and the subcommittee on both the majority and the minority side, in particular Mike Quear, Eric Webster, Bob Palmer, Mark Harkins, and Dave Goldston and others who have worked to get this bill to the floor.

I also want to acknowledge the help of the staff of NOAA and the National Weather Service, and cite the work of Dr. Leonard Pietrafesa, a professor at North Carolina State University, who helped in the crafting of this legislation.

Mr. Chairman, at this very moment a storm is brewing in the Gulf of Mexico that may or may not develop into a tropical storm. Time is of the essence. I encourage my colleagues to pass this with haste, get it to the Senate so the President can sign this legislation as quickly as possible.

Mr. EHLERS. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, I am pleased to join the gentleman from North Carolina in commending the chairman of the Committee on Science, the gentleman from New York (Mr. BOEHLERT) for his good work, and also the ranking member, the gentleman from Texas (Mr. HALL), as well as the staff. They have made the Committee on Science into a smoothly working machine, one of the most productive committees in the House, and I commend all of them for that.

Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. GEKAS).

Mr. GEKAS. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding me time.

I too rise in support of this legislation. I remember very well being a witness to one of the most devastating floods that ever hit Pennsylvania, and I was reminded of the fact that in Hurricane Floyd, which was just referred to by the previous speaker, many Pennsylvanians went down to help in that disaster; and they did so because they remembered, did these Pennsylvanians, what happened to us in central Pennsylvania in 1972. Agnes, the mother of all hurricanes, swept over Pennsylvania and lingered on top of that topographical area for a long period of time.

We learned many, many different lessons at that time. And one of them was, of course, what is common sense: that the more ability we have to forecast and prepare, the less risk there is to human life and the less risk there is to destruction of property. And that is what the essence is of this piece of legislation.

We are all eager to put into place the highest form of technology possible so that we can have these early warnings and be able to give the warnings that are necessary to residents, to businesses, to everyone concerned, and thereby minimize the damage.

Since Agnes, we have formed a task force with the Susquehanna River Basin in which flood warning is the key element. So we are becoming more and more aware of the new science that can help in flood forecasting and also in the quick recovery from damage and flooding that may occur.

So I rise with great enthusiasm to support this legislation. If it is a matter of common sense, we ought to have a unanimous vote in the Chamber for this piece of legislation. It will reap numbers of thousands of dollars and millions of dollars in savings as we proceed down the line of preparing our populaces for natural disasters in the most scientific way possible.

Mr. HALL of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentlewoman from Houston, Texas (Ms. JACKSON-LEE).

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I thank the distinguished chairman and the distinguished ranking member of the full committee and the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. EHLERS) for their leadership and, of course, my friend and colleague from North Carolina, the distinguished Congressman who has come forward with an enormously important legislative initiative that deals with inland flooding forecasting and warning system.

Mr. Chairman, I think it is important with the changes, climatic changes that we are facing, so many of us who come from very warm climates are used to what the Northeast and the Midwest are facing now over the last couple of years with intense heat over the summer and, in fact, intense heat during some of the winter and fall months.

We know that the weather and prediction of such is coming upon a new turn. And this legislation will be an indicator, a predictor of saving lives and saving property and saving local government. Having come from a local government situation, being a member of the Houston city council, I am very close to our local officials, both county and city.

Mr. Chairman, if I can express to you a phenomenon that none of us expected to happen, that was the occurrence of June 10 approximately, 2001, where a few days of rain turned into the largest storm that we had ever seen and one that the Gulf Coast had never experienced. There were areas in our communities that were under the 500-year flood warning, under the 100-year flood warning and, unfortunately, received enormous amounts of water in the inner city and surrounding areas.

I remember that morning. It was a Saturday morning. I remember being here at the United States Congress earlier in the week, and as it began to rain and I checked on my constituents in Houston, all they said was, it was heavy rain and I am sure things will be well. It stopped and then started again on Friday night. And, lo and behold, when we arose early that morning, the medical center, hundreds of billions of dollars, under water. Millions and millions of dollars of research lost. Thousands upon thousands of research mice lost. Individuals in that medical center having to be or patients having to be, en masse, evacuated. Literally, the medical center was shut down. Universities shut down. Thousands of homes under water. Twenty plus deaths and all because of Tropical Storm Allison.

The concept of forecasting is imperative. It is imperative for saving dollars in the Federal Government. It is imperative for planning for local governments. It is imperative for helping in our local communities; and, yes, in causing or decreasing the amount of pain experienced by those impacted by these floods.

Right now, as we speak, we know that the Guadalupe River is overflowing in areas that many of the residents in that area never expected. This legislation will go throughout the country to not only areas that are used to flooding in some of the outlying areas, but in the inland areas.

My area happens to be 50 miles inland, but it is also 50 feet under sea level; and it is by a port, it is by waters that might overflow. The idea of forecasting is imperative. So I would ask my colleagues to be particularly sensitive to the importance of this legislation. I look forward to presenting an amendment that will complement this legislation in its structure. I will be looking for long-term forecasting as this legislation has short-term forecasting.

I am very delighted to be able to work with my colleague who had a brilliant idea in seeing this legislation come to fruition. I look forward again to discussing the proposal I have and would ask my colleagues to consider it as I will be giving my enthusiastic support to this legislation.

Mr. EHLERS. Mr. Chairman, I am delighted to yield such time as she may consume to the gentlewoman from Maryland (Mrs. MORELLA), the angel of NIST and NOAA.

Mrs. MORELLA. Mr. Chairman, I want to thank the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. EHLERS) for that wonderful introduction that I hardly deserve, but this has been a good week for the Committee on Science. It demonstrates again how we work together on both sides of the aisle to do what we believe is in the best interests of scientific research, development, education and what is best for the country.

It is with pleasure that I rise in support of H.R. 2486, the Inland Flood Forecasting and Warning System Development Act of 2002. Congratulations to the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. ETHERIDGE) for his leadership on the issue, his willingness to work with members of the Committee on Science. Congratulations to the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. EHLERS), chairman, the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. Boucher), the ranking member, as well as the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. BOEHLERT), chairman, and the gentleman from Texas (Mr. HALL), ranking member of the full committee, for having this piece of legislation come to the floor today.

Together we have expanded the focus of the original bill to take it beyond North Carolina and other hurricane-prone regions to include the protection of all regions subject to inland flooding due to severe weather events. The Committee on Science has a strong history of bipartisan collaboration, and this bill, as I have said, is yet again another example of how working together we can forge a bill that is much stronger than the original intent.

Each year hazardous weather causes thousands of fatalities and tens of billions of dollars in property damage, largely due to inland flooding. Moreover, the problem appears to be growing. Severe weather events, particularly hurricanes, appear to be cyclical, and we are recently coming off a period of low frequency. The Atlantic Ocean is beginning to enter another active period, and scientists tell us we can expect increasingly frequent events of greater and greater severity.

In addition, the capacity for damage has increased dramatically, as coastal development has continued to boom for the last 20 years. More and more people are living near coastal, estuarine or inland waters, creating a heightened potential for disaster and loss of life.

The improved ability to predict and prepare for severe storm events can have a substantial and immediate impact. Research dollars are desperately needed to protect both the lives and the livelihoods of the millions of Americans who live in regions susceptible to severe inland flooding.

The purpose of this bill is simply to develop, test and deploy an effective inland flood warning index for use by public and emergency management officials. Managing disasters by predicting their occurrence is much more effective than reacting to their results. It is a modest bill with modest goals that will have a huge impact. I urge my colleagues to support its passage.

Mr. HALL of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. WATT).

Mr. WATT of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding time.

I actually seldom come to the floor to speak on a bill that I have not had any personal involvement in before it comes to the floor, that does not come through a committee that I sit on, but I wanted to take the opportunity today to come and praise this bill and say that it is a wonderful bill for North Carolina and for the Nation and to say some nice things about the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. ETHERIDGE) who is the sponsor of this bill.

I have been following him for quite a while. We started out in the State legislature together and in the State legislature sometimes, people come up to a person and say, there are people in this body who are destined for other things in life, and we all knew at that time that the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. ETHERIDGE) was one of those people.

He went on, after serving in the State legislature, to serve as Superintendent of Public Construction in North Carolina and did an outstanding job there, and the thing that has been characteristic of him throughout this process is his ability to reach across party lines and understand that education and science and all of the issues that we deal with on an ongoing basis really are not Republican or Democrat, they are American issues, world issues, issues that are important to deal with on a bipartisan basis.

This bill is another example of that, where he has recognized a need based on the experiences that we observed in North Carolina as a result of hurricanes, and used that same kind of bipartisan approach and added to try to solve a problem that existed and addressed that need.

I want to applaud the chairman and ranking member of the Committee on Science for putting aside, as they always do, the partisanship that so often can pervade this institution, and recognizing the importance of this bill to the people of our country. The problem of inland flooding, I am not sure we were as much aware of until we had a series of floods in North Carolina.

I live in Charlotte, North Carolina, and that is about 150 miles from the coast. I grew up thinking that a hurricane was fed by the ocean and the water and that it really could not come that far inland to impact a community, until Hurricane Hugo came charging right through the center of the city that I lived in and did tremendous damage and devastation to the community.

If we had had better warning systems and research available to detect that possibility, I think we would all have been better served. We would have saved substantial amounts of money, and whatever amount is going to be expended for this important purpose, I think we will more than benefit from it over time, and I applaud the Committee on Science for the work that it has done on this bill in recognition of that fact.

I want to just thank my colleague again for the introduction of this bill, and I thank the gentleman for yielding time for me to say some nice things about my colleague and about the bill and about the Committee on Science.

Mr. EHLERS. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

First of all, I would observe that at one time my parents lived in Canada and the area north of Toronto suffered tremendously from a hurricane. So we are not safe from hurricanes almost anywhere inland.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. HALL of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. EHLERS. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume, and I will proceed to close.

The preamble to our Constitution specifies as one of the major duties of government to promote the general welfare of its people. This bill is an example of what we can do to promote the general welfare of our people.

This bill will save lives, it will save property, and it will cost very little. In fact, the cost per capita in this Nation of this bill is 10 cents per capita, and I think that is a good bargain. By developing an inland waterway and flooding bill of this nature, that will protect the people of this country, we will save undoubtedly at least 15, probably 100 lives per year and we pay only 10 cents apiece—that is a good deal.

So I strongly encourage this House to pass this bill.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. All time for general debate has expired.

Pursuant to the rule, the Committee amendment in the nature of a substitute printed in the bill shall be considered by sections as an original bill for the purpose of amendment, and each section is considered read.

During consideration of the bill for amendment, the Chair may accord priority in recognition to a Member offering an amendment that he has printed in the designated place in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. Those amendments will be considered read.

The Clerk will designate section 1.

The text of section 1 is as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Inland Flood Forecasting and Warning System Act of 2002".

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any amendments to section 1?

If not, the Clerk will designate section 2.

The text of section 2 is as follows:

SEC. 2. AUTHORIZED ACTIVITIES.

The National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration, through the United States Weather Research Program, shall—

(1) improve the capability to accurately forecast inland flooding (including inland flooding influenced by coastal and ocean storms) through research and modeling;

(2) develop, test, and deploy a new flood warning index that will give the public and emergency management officials fuller, clearer, and more accurate information about the risks and dangers posed by expected floods;

(3) train emergency management officials, National Weather Service personnel, meteorologists, and others as appropriate regarding improved forecasting techniques for inland flooding, risk management techniques, and use of the inland flood warning index developed under paragraph (2); and

(4) conduct outreach and education activities for local meteorologists and the public regarding the dangers and risks associated with inland flooding and the use and understanding of the inland flood warning index developed under paragraph (2).

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any amendments to section 2?

Mr. EHLERS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the remainder of the bill be printed in the RECORD and open to amendment at any point.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

The text of the remainder of the bill is as follows:

SEC. 3. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

There are authorized to be appropriated to the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration for carrying out this Act $1,150,000 for each of the fiscal years 2003 through 2007. Of the amounts authorized under this section, $250,000 for each fiscal year shall be available for competitive merit-reviewed grants to institutions of higher education (as defined in section 101 of the Higher Education Act of 1965 (20 U.S.C. 1001)) to develop models that can improve the ability to forecast the coastal and estuary-inland flooding that is influenced by tropical cyclones. The models should incorporate the interaction of such factors as storm surges, soil saturation, and other relevant phenomena.

SEC. 4. REPORT.

Not later than 90 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, and annually thereafter through fiscal year 2007, the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration shall transmit to the Committee on Science of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation of the Senate a report on its activities under this Act and the success and acceptance of the inland flood warning index developed under section 2(2) by the public and emergency management professionals.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MS. JACKSON-LEE OF TEXAS

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

(5) assess, through research and analysis of previous trends, among other activities—

(A) the long-term trends in frequency and severity of inland flooding; and

(B) how shifts in climate, development, and erosion patterns might make certain regions vulnerable to more continual or escalating flood damage in the future.

Page 3, lines 9 and 10, strike "$1,150,000 for each of the fiscal years 2003 through 2007" and insert "$1,250,000 for each of the fiscal years 2003 through 2005, of which $100,000 for each fiscal year shall be available for competitive merit-reviewed grants to institutions of higher education (as defined in section 101 of the Higher Education Act of 1965 (20 U.S.C. 1001)) to carry out the activities described in section 2(5), and $1,150,000 for each of the fiscal years 2006 and 2007".

Page 4, line 4, insert "The National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration shall also, not later than January 1, 2006, transmit to the Committee on Science of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation of the Senate a report on the likely long-term trends in inland flooding, the results of which shall be used in outreach activities conducted under section 2(4), especially to alert the public and builders to flood hazards." after "emergency management professionals."

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Ms. JACKSON-LEE. Mr. Chairman, again, let me rise, expressing my very strong support for H.R. 2486, the Inland Flood Forecasting and Warning System Development Act which will save lives and money by improving forecasting, education and by setting the stage to get timely and useful information to the people in the way of big storms and subsequent floods.

Let me also add again my appreciation to the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. EHLERS) and as well to the proponent of this bill, the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. ETHERIDGE), who has firsthand experienced the devastation of flooding and has taken this issue up and worked this issue in a way that will help all of America.

I thank the gentleman from Texas (Mr. HALL), the ranking member, for his support on this legislation and as well his leadership and knowledge about these issues as he has continued to serve on the House Committee on Science.

We come from an area, as I indicated earlier, that knows water and knows it in many ways. We enjoy it. We recreate in it. We make our livings from it in the Gulf Coast of Texas, but at the same time we know of its power. In Harris County, Texas, alone in the past 10 years, there have been five major flooding events, in 1992, 1994, mid-1998, late 1998 and the big one, Tropical Storm Allison of 2001, that individuals 80-years-plus had never seen a flood such as Tropical Storm Allison. Remember, I said a storm and not a hurricane.

Flood waters in Tropical Storm Allison reached heights known as hundred-year flood levels. These five storms damaged or destroyed thousands of homes and businesses, and so it is imperative that this legislation be passed and that I would offer this amendment that would, in fact, provide a long-term study for a period of 3 years, costing $100,000.

As it stands, the bill will improve short-term forecasting of cyclones and associated flooding and will provide for the development of a warning system to get minute-to-minute information to the public and to emergency management officials regarding flood dangers. These functions will operate on the time scales of days to weeks, for example, saying there will be a storm this weekend or evacuate our homes now.

My amendment will simply add a long-term component to this important project. This will enable officials to warn people what they might expect over the next 5 years or even the next decades. A small amount of money I am proposing to spend on this long-term component could save billions of dollars and save many lives in the future by providing information to help people make prudent decisions today.

We will have to look at other science in order to determine how we can provide a safe place for people to live and save lives prospectively, but as we move this legislation along, I think the idea of providing a long-term component will be very effective.

In my home district alone in the past 10 years, as I indicated, we have had several storms, and as I indicated as well, the Tropical Storm Allison, the big one, caused an estimated $5 billion in damage, flooded almost 100,000 homes and killed at least 20 people in our community. Right now, Mr. Chairman, I am still living with those who are suffering from the damages of the flood.

The questions I have are, after the first four floods, why are so many people and homes still in flood zones when the big one hit a year later?

It seems that the first four floods might have let us know that more may be coming soon and people should move to higher ground.

And, two, why have there been so many devastating 100-year floods in rapid succession? In other words, are floods, indeed, becoming more severe over recent years?

I have been asking these questions and cannot find anyone to give me an answer with even a modicum of confidence. It seems that no one knows exactly why this happens; and if they do, they have information that should be shared, whether it is simply a natural variation or if it is due to shifts in development or erosion patterns or climate. And no one knows whether there is a real long-term trend in such major flooding events.

Right now, people in Texas are getting over yet another flood, and they need to make informed decisions about whether to rebuild their homes. These are life-altering and costly decisions which can devastate communities, families, and neighborhoods, and also break down the spirit.

Some of these people right now are deciding what to do and how to do it after losing their precious resources. It was hearing of their struggles last week that inspired me to write this amendment. The proposed act, as it stands, would have helped those people protect their lives and property before and during the floods, but my amendment would be helping them make tough decisions now by giving them an indication of whether they should expect more frequent or severe floods in the future. It is about planning.

With this amendment, the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration would receive an additional $100,000 only during the first 3 years of the program. This money would fund grants for research at higher institutions to study the long-term trends in flooding to help predict future risk in flood zones.

May I first start by expressing my strong support for H.R. 2486. The Inland Flood Forecasting and Warning System Development Act will save lives and money by improving forecasting, and education, and by setting the stage to get timely and useful information to people in the way of big storms and subsequent floods. The Congressman from North Carolina has been a champion of this issue, and deserves great credit. I am pleased to have co-sponsored the proposed legislation with him.

As it stands, the bill will improve short-term forecasting of cyclones and associated flooding, and will provide for the development of a warning system to get minute-to-minute information to the public, and to emergency management officials regarding flood dangers. These functions will operate on the time-scales of days to weeks, for example saying "there will be a storm this weekend," or "evacuate your homes now."

My bill will simply add a long-term component to this important project. This will enable officials to warn people of what they might expect over the next five years, or even the next decades. The small amount of money I am proposing to spend on this long-term component could save billions of dollars and save many lives in the future, by providing information to help people make prudent decisions today.

In my home district alone, in the past 10 years there have been five major flooding events. In 1992, 1994, mid-98, late-98, and the big one—Tropical Storm Allison in 2001—flood waters reached heights known as "100 year flood levels." These 5 storms damaged or destroyed thousands of homes and businesses. The last storm, Allison, alone caused an estimated five billion dollars in damage, flooded almost 100,000 homes, and killed 41 people nationwide.

The questions I have are (1) After the first four floods, why were so many people and homes still in flood zones when the big one hit a year later? It seems that the first four floods might have let us know that more may be coming soon and people should move to higher ground. And (2) Why have there been so many devastating "100 year floods" in rapid succession? In other words, are floods indeed becoming more frequent and severe over the years?

I have been asking these questions, and cannot find anyone who can give me an answer with even a modicum of confidence. It seems that no one knows exactly why this happened—whether it is simply natural variation, or if it is due to shifts in development, or erosion patterns, or climate. And no one knows whether there is a real long-term trend in such major flooding events.

Right now people in Texas are getting over yet another flood, and they need to make informed decisions about whether to rebuild their homes or relocate to higher ground. These are life-altering and costly decisions, which can devastate neighborhoods or even entire towns.

It was hearing of their struggles last week that inspired me to write this amendment. The proposed Act as it stands would have helped these people protect their lives and property before and during the floods. But my amendment would be helping them make tough decisions now by giving them an indication of whether they should expect more frequent or severe floods in the future.

In my proposed amendment, the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration would receive an additional $100,000 per year, only during the first 3 years of the program. This money would fund grants for research at higher institutions, to study the long-term trends in flooding, to help predict future risk in flood zones.

At the end of the 3 years, a report will be written that will be sent to Congress to report its findings. More importantly, the findings will be disseminated to the public, through the educational outreach already planned in the original bill. This will enable citizens, builders, and planners to make better-informed decisions about where people should live, or stop living.

This amendment has quite a narrow scope. It is not a global warming amendment. It is small, and focuses only on the flooding associated with cyclones which affect a limited region of the country. However, my amendment has a very important target. The amendment is meant to get much-needed information to people who might be in continual danger from escalating flooding. It could also give assurance to those people whose risks of continual flooding might be low.

If insights gleaned from these studies lead to a smarter distribution of homes and businesses, and prevent a tiny fraction of the damage in the next five billion dollar flood—this amendment will earn its pay. I urge my colleagues to support this amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I want to applaud this legislation, as I close, because it has a great outreach provision, and this amendment will help with this outreach.

I ask my colleagues to support this amendment because it is narrow in scope.

Mr. EHLERS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment, and I thank the gentlewoman from Texas for it. This is something we have worked on together. It is something I had hoped that would happen anyway when this bill reached NOAA; that they would interpret it this way. But it is good of her to point out that this must be done. This makes things very specific, and we have reached agreement on this amendment, so I am pleased to accept it.

I would just comment that I will have to revise my cost estimate. I commented earlier this bill would cost us a grand total of 10 cents per person in this country. Because of this amendment I have to raise that to 11 cents per person in this country. But I should also make it clear, which I did not before, that that cost is spread over 5 years. So rounding off, it is still 2 cents per person per year for 5 years, and we are getting a lot for our money. But I am very pleased to accept this amendment.

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EHLERS. I yield to the gentlewoman from Texas.

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. First, let me thank the gentleman very much, Mr. Chairman, for working with our office and, of course, working with the champion of this legislation, the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. ETHERIDGE).

We come from different parts of the country, and I think it is important to note that Michigan, Texas, and North Carolina all worked together because these issues are far-reaching. And I would simply hope, as the gentleman has been so fiscally responsible, that they can see the amount of money that we will save in the future. Again, I thank the gentleman for supporting this amendment.

Mr. HALL of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I support this amendment and I support this gentlewoman. I think we have observed here representation at its very best. The gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. WATT) and the gentlewoman from Texas (Ms. JACKSON-LEE) personally testified to the tragedies that they had experienced in their own hometowns of Houston and Charlotte, and I think it was refreshing to hear the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. WATT) express his admiration for a long-time, fellow public servant.

This is the way it ought to be, and I certainly thank the gentlewoman from Texas (Ms. JACKSON-LEE) for going that extra mile, offering this study, a needed study, and I appreciate the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. EHLERS) accepting it. I urge the adoption of this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore (Mr. JEFF MILLER of Florida). The question is on the amendment offered by the gentlewoman from Texas (Ms. JACKSON-LEE).

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Are there any further amendments?

If not, the question is on the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute, as amended.

The committee amendment in the nature of a substitute, as amended, was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Under the rule, the committee rises.

Accordingly, the Committee rose; and the Speaker pro tempore (Mrs. BIGGERT) having assumed the chair, Mr. JEFF MILLER of Florida, Chairman pro tempore of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H.R. 2486), to authorize the National Weather Service to conduct research and development, training, and outreach activities relating to tropical cyclone inland forecasting improvement, and for other purposes, pursuant to House Resolution 473, he reported the bill back to the House with an amendment adopted by the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the rule, the previous question is ordered.

Is a separate vote demanded on the amendment to the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute adopted by the Committee of the Whole? If not, the question is on the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute.

The committee amendment in the nature of a substitute was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. EHLERS. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 8 of rule XX, further proceedings on this question will be postponed.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. EHLERS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks and to include extraneous material in the RECORD on the bill just considered, H.R. 2486.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

ENTERPRISE INTEGRATION ACT OF 2002

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to House Resolution 474 and rule XVIII, the Chair declares the House in the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill, H.R. 2733.

IN THE COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Accordingly, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 2733) to authorize the National Institute of Standards and Technology to work with major manufacturing industries on an initiative of standards development and implementation for electronic enterprise integration, with Mr. JEFF MILLER of Florida in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Pursuant to the rule, the bill is considered as having been read the first time.

Under the rule, the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. EHLERS) and the gentleman from Texas (Mr. HALL) each will control 30 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. EHLERS).

Mr. EHLERS. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume; and I rise in support of the Enterprise Integration Act of 2002.

Much has changed about the manufacturing industry during the past 30 years. In the 1970s and 1980s, our manufacturing sector was in trouble. Plagued by quality problems and inefficiency, our domestic manufacturing sector was on the decline, and it was costing U.S. workers their jobs. I saw this firsthand in my home State of Michigan, when one observer noted in a national column how much Michigan's auto manufacturing sector had fallen and asked for, in print, "The last person to leave the State to please turn off the lights."

This decline served as a wake-up call not only for State and Federal governments but especially for domestic manufacturers, and they have worked hard over the past three decades to become leaner and more competitive in the global marketplace. Automation, outsourcing, efficiency, and quality became the buzzwords of this effort, as manufacturers made fundamental changes to their business models. When these changes were coupled with the information technology revolution, manufacturers were able to unleash the untapped potential of American workers.

Over the past 10 years, our workers increased their productivity as never before in the modern era. These gains led to one of the greatest economic expansions in U.S. history and made a bold statement that U.S. domestic manufacturing was ready to compete in the global marketplace.

Domestic manufacturing industries are now beginning to undertake new steps to ensure that they stay globally competitive. Our manufacturing industries are moving away from the traditional models where products are mass produced and consumer preferences are aggregated at the end of a manufacturing chain. The new model is marked by a commitment to flexibility, networked supply chains, just-in-time inventories, and responsiveness to changes and customers' preferences. Underpinning all these elements is the need to be able to exchange information quickly, reliably, and without fear that the information contains errors or is incomplete.

The purpose of the legislation before us today is to support this critical component. H.R. 2733 will establish an enterprise integration initiative within the National Institute of Standards and Technology, better known as NIST. At the heart of this initiative is what modern manufacturing industry craves—the ability to exchange information up and down the supply chain without error or loss.

For example, with a fully integrated supply chain, if Ford were to design a change for a bumper, every one of the suppliers that contributes parts to Ford for that bumper would be able quickly and easily to see how the new specifications would affect the component they manufacture. Each supplier would be able to redesign the component knowing that the information used does not have errors and has not lost data along the way.

As I said earlier, the new manufacturing model requires industry to respond to consumer choices quickly and with a high degree of quality and reliability. This flexibility can only be achieved with a fully integrated supply chain.

Two of Michigan's key industries, automotive and furniture, can derive tremendous benefits from this legislation. A 1999 study by NIST found that General Motors, Ford and Chrysler together could save $1 billion per year if they fully integrated their supply chains. West Michigan's worldwide office furniture suppliers, Steelcase, Herman Miller, and Haworth, are facing significant challenges both as a result of the economic downturn and stiff foreign competition. Information technology is a powerful tool for bringing together the various elements of design, manufacturing, and delivery of furniture, and the U.S. furniture industry is beginning to utilize this tool to better integrate these elements.

All three firms, and others, can realize huge benefits through better linkage with their suppliers, which will lead to reductions in inventory, fewer manufacturing slow downs, lower purchasing costs, and higher quality.

Achieving this level of integration, however, is complex and requires a substantial amount of research regarding what information exchange standards need to be developed and implemented for different supply changes. H.R. 2733 will allow NIST to capitalize on its existing knowledge in this field by authorizing the agency to work with major manufacturing sectors, such as automotive, aerospace, electronics, shipbuilding, and furniture, to reach a consensus on what standards are needed to integrate supply chains, support the development of those standards, and help smaller businesses in those industries integrate fully into their respective supply chain.

Under this legislation, NIST will work with major manufacturing industries to identify current enterprise integration standardization and implementation activities within the United States and abroad and assess the current state of these activities within any given industry.

NIST will also work with individual industries to develop goals and milestones for fully integrating the industry's supply chains. Additionally, NIST will support the development, testing, promulgation, integration, adoption and upgrading of standards related to enterprise integration efforts.

I want to note that this legislation has strong bipartisan and industry support. The gentleman from Michigan (Mr. BARCIA) and I have introduced this legislation, and we have worked together every step of the way as it moved to the House floor. The legislation also unanimously passed the Committee on Science. In addition, industry groups such as the National Association of Manufacturers and the National Coalition for Advanced Manufacturing support the legislation.

If our manufacturing sector is to remain competitive in the global marketplace, and if it is going to continue to provide jobs for American workers, it must undertake the efforts envisioned by this legislation. I urge Members to support the Enterprise Integration Act so we can meet this goal.

Let me also comment to explain this in a very simple fashion, using the words that the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. GUTKNECHT) used earlier during discussion on the rule, and that is if we do not talk the same language with each other, we cannot communicate and we cannot get the job done. The whole purpose of this bill is to ensure that the computers and the officials of the companies involved can talk the same language using the Internet, and that through that common language the whole system will work much more efficiently, the manufacturers will benefit through increased profits, the workers of the companies will benefit through higher pay and more jobs. This is a good bill, and I urge all Members to support this bill.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. HALL of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the Enterprise Integration Act of 2002. I rise to commend the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. BARCIA) for his vision in creating this legislation, and I thank the gentleman from New York (Mr. BOEHLERT) and the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. EHLERS) for their efforts in moving this bill through the legislative process.

Manufacturing has been and must continue to be one of the pillars of the American economy. Federal Government support for U.S. small businesses engaged in manufacturing is not a new thing. It dates way back to the early days of our century when Alexander Hamilton led efforts to help United States manufacturers adjust to the industrial revolution. We understood even then, while we are first and foremost a Nation of free enterprise, that free enterprise works best when our manufacturers are equipped to compete on a level playing field and acceptable to American industry.

As H.R. 2733 clearly points out, we have entered a period that could be just as wrenching to today's manufacturers as the industrial revolution was to Alexander Hamilton's contemporaries. Even a decade ago, it was still possible to think of small manufacturers as independent businessmen and women who made products for consumers and other companies. Now the business environment is changing rapidly, with the advent of the Internet and business-to-business software. Companies which cannot function as close partners of other companies at every step of the manufacturing process risk being left behind.

Products are now designed in weeks rather than in months. Products become out of date in months rather than years. Suppliers now deliver what they call "just in time." In this new time frame, all waste time must be squeezed from the manufacturing process. Manufacturers and their suppliers must design products together. They must exchange manufacturing data electronically. The day when virtual manufacturing arrives and it becomes difficult to tell where one company ends and its suppliers begin seems just around the corner. Our job is to ensure we, the government, do not force them offshore like they have done to the chemical companies in Texas, Louisiana, and Arkansas.

Mr. Chairman, I just comment that both software and standards that are driving this process, advanced software that knows everything happening on a factory floor, are becoming more and more common; and as new Internet software will soon make it possible to transmit three-dimensional data anywhere in the world, this is helpful only if the receiving computer system can understand and use what is sent. Unfortunately, the millions of legacy computer systems are more like an electronic Tower of Babel than a seamless communication system.

This will change. Work on product data exchange international standards that will now solve this problem is ongoing in Europe as well as in the United States. However, the European Union is investing much more money and much more heavily than in the United States. It is funding product data exchange standards, industry by industry, from autos and aerospace to textiles and furniture. If we do not match these efforts, we run the risk of an international standard being promulgated that favors European manufacturers over our own.

I am pleased that the bill is supported by the trade associations for several of these manufacturing sectors, as well as the National Association of Manufacturers and the National Coalition for Advanced Manufacturing.

Mr. Chairman, we cannot afford to let our small businesses fall behind as the world moves toward Internet-based manufacturing. I urge Members to support America's smaller manufacturers, and their larger partners as well, by voting for H.R. 2733.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. EHLERS. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. CAMP).

Mr. CAMP. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the Enterprise Integration Act. This bill authorizes the National Institute of Standards and Technology to promote best practice standards and facilitate understanding between industry and government.

Approximately 90 percent of U.S. manufacturing companies are small and medium-sized businesses. Quick and easy access to information in the supply chain is critical for small businesses to be competitive. Suppliers without the capability to collect and exchange data electronically run the risk of being replaced by other suppliers who can.

The last decade has seen a dramatic shift in the way information and data are exchanged. This is due to the emergence of the Internet and the movement toward electronically integrated supply chains.

Enterprise integration permits a group of manufacturers and suppliers to operate as a single virtual company, without time delays and data loss or corruption. Manufacturers must be flexible, efficient, and responsive to changes in customer preference.

NIST will work with industry and small business to improve the way they share product and standard information. With over 20 years of experience in data integration, NIST has the experience to accelerate efforts to develop industry standards and integration techniques that are necessary to increase efficiency and lower costs. Connecting enterprise together will streamline the manufacturing process, break down communication barriers, improve knowledge sharing, and connect information systems.

In my home State of Michigan, small businesses are vital to the State economy. Over 45 percent of Michigan small businesses are in the manufacturing sector and enterprise integration is extremely important to ensure that the manufacturing industry in Michigan and around the Nation remain strong.

The investment in enterprise integration is essential for U.S. industry to remain competitive with overseas companies, many of which are already heavily investing in electronic standards development.

I thank the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. BARCIA) for developing this important legislation and the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. EHLERS) of the Committee on Science for bringing this to the floor. I appreciate their hard work on behalf of the small business community, and I urge Members to join me in supporting the Enterprise Integration Act.

Mr. HALL of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. BARCIA), the creator of this legislation.

Mr. BARCIA. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 2733, the Enterprise Integration Act of 2002; and I thank the chairman of the Committee on Science, the gentleman from New York (Mr. BOEHLERT), and ranking member, the gentleman from Texas (Mr. HALL), for recognizing the importance of this bill and taking the steps necessary for this bill to be considered here today. I also want to thank the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. EHLERS), the subcommittee chairman and lead cosponsor, for the gentleman's efforts over the past year. His suggested changes have enhanced the legislation, and his legislative efforts have contributed significantly to the progress we have made on this legislation.

I just want to take a couple of minutes to outline the need and purpose of the Enterprise Integration Act of 2002 and say I appreciate the comments of my colleagues who have spoken before me on the need for this legislation to become law, to not only help small and medium-sized businesses throughout the Midwest, but across the country.

And also to say that as impressive as the growth of Internet companies has been, its impact pales in significance to the impact that the Internet is having on how businesses work together. Changes already under way in the manufacturing sector will permit a manufacturer and its suppliers to function as one virtual company. Companies will be able to exchange information of all types with their suppliers at the speed of light.

This will dramatically shorten design-cycle times and reduce the costs of manufacturing complex products. Information on design flaws will be instantly transmitted from repair shops to manufacturers and their supply chains.

However, to exchange this information, each company's computers have to speak the same language. Sometimes the document can be converted, other times someone has to reenter the information. The problems get much more severe when the information being exchanged is three-dimensional engineering drawings or complex data from the manufacturing process. How companies address this basic question of data exchange will determine how quickly enterprise integration occurs in the United States.

This legislation tasks the National Institute of Standards and Technology to help nine key industries stay competitive in the electronic enterprise age, if those industries want the help. The legislation instructs the director of NIST, through various NIST programs, to support the auto, aerospace, furniture, shipbuilding, textile, apparel, electronics, home building, and major construction industries in the establishment of an industry-led effort on enterprise integration. If an industry has not yet begun an effort, NIST would be asked to help convene companies and trade associations in the industry to develop a strategy for developing and implementing a unified vision for supply chain integration.

If efforts are already under way and the industry wants NIST's help, NIST is to support the ongoing efforts. NIST is asked to look at the suite of standards now in place and to help fill the holes such as compatibility of older standards with emerging Internet standards.

With the continued assistance of the gentleman from New York (Mr. BOEHLERT), the gentleman from Texas (Mr. HALL), and the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. EHLERS), I am hopeful that this legislation will become the catalyst to allow American businesses to successfully compete with our European counterparts.

The bill authorizes appropriations of $10 million for fiscal year 2003 and $15 million for fiscal year 2004, and $20 million in fiscal year 2005.

Enterprise integration has the potential to be the most important innovation in manufacturing since Henry Ford's assembly line. I urge a "yes" vote on this bill because H.R. 2733 will give U.S. industry the opportunity to be a leader in this innovation.

Mr. EHLERS. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, I regret that my next speaker, the gentlewoman from Maryland, had to leave for the Committee on Government Reform to present an amendment there. I particularly regret it because she is such an outstanding Member of Congress and an extremely conscientious member of the committee and has worked very hard on this bill. But her comments will be entered into the RECORD.

Mr. Chairman, I also want to at this time thank the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. BARCIA) for his work on this bill and his work on the Committee on Science. He has been an outstanding ranking member to work with on this subcommittee and we have accomplished a great deal this year by sharing ideas and working together on bills.

I have shared a legislative career with the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. BARCIA) longer than most people in this Congress have. We served together in the State House of Michigan and the State Senate of Michigan. He preceded me to this Congress by 11 months and 7 days, but we have worked together since then in this Congress.

I am very sorry to see him leave this Congress, even though he will be returning to the State of Michigan and will continue to make his contributions there. But it has been an outstanding partnership on this committee. We have produced some really good work together with a minimum of strife because both of us are interested in results and not in seeking partisan advantage on an issue. I just want to publicly state how much I have enjoyed working with the gentleman, how much I appreciate his work and his person and his ethical standards, and just state my regret that he will be leaving us at the end of this year.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. HALL of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the gentlewoman from Michigan (Ms. RIVERS), a member of our committee.

Ms. RIVERS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the Enterprise Integration Act of 2002. This bill directs the National Institute of Standards and Technology, NIST, to establish a program to help major manufacturing industries, especially small businesses, standardize and better integrate exchange of data between manufacturers, assemblers and suppliers.

H.R. 2733 is a timely and smart piece of legislation. Small manufacturers are the backbone of our economy. However, they do not operate in a vacuum.

Manufacturers, large and small, work together along a vertical supply chain, making a seamless flow of information critical to their success.

Currently, many small businesses do not have the knowledge or ability to access the type of electronic media large manufacturers use to integrate purchases. In other cases, compatibility issues between different computer networks, software and hardware make it difficult, and sometimes impossible, for the full benefits of virtual manufacturing environments to be realized.

This lack of compatibility in computer hardware, software and their interfaces with machinery makes it difficult for these supply chain firms to supply the goods and services to their traditional clients in an efficient manner, and makes it even harder to develop relationships with new clients.

As we move forward into an international economy, our domestic producers must be able to keep up with suppliers and manufacturers overseas. The European Union is already investing substantially in ensuring that its companies will be able to perform in the emerging virtual business environment, where the Internet will permit companies anywhere in the world to exchange data and function as a single virtual company.

H.R. 2733 addresses this need and establishes an enterprise integration initiative at the National Institute of Standards and Technology. This will allow NIST to work with industry to develop road maps that outline the steps a given industry must take to become more integrated electronically and also help industry develop volunteer consensus standards and agreements on protocols for information exchange which will provide assistance to conduct pilot projects to support the initiative.

The Enterprise Integration Act of 2002 takes the necessary steps to get standards in place to create the first truly virtual companies. When industries become fully integrated electronically, information can flow freely along the entire supply chain without corruption or loss of important data. All types of manufacturers, from automobiles to furniture to shipbuilding, will stand to benefit from the efficiency gains that this legislation will help usher in. I stand in support of this legislation.

Mr. HALL of Texas. I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. EHLERS. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, I just want to conclude by saying that this is a very worthwhile bill which, even though I gave all the examples as benefiting Michigan industry, it will benefit the industry of every State in this Union, and, for that matter, every territory. It is a good thing for us to do, to help create more jobs and to make sure that we are more competitive in the world marketplace. I urge passage of this bill.

Mrs. MORELLA. Mr. Chairman, it is with great pleasure that I rise in support of H.R. 2733, the Enterprise Integration Act of 2002. I want to commend Chairman EHLERS and Ranking Member BARCIA for their bipartisan efforts in bringing this bill before us today.

Enterprise integration is quickly becoming one of the most important business concepts of the electronic age. Developing a seamless exchange of information along a vertical supply chain is essential to maintaining production in our new, fast-paced, just-in-time-manufacturing economy. Companies are increasingly interconnected and must rely on one another in ways never before imagined. Standardization of their means of communication is imperative for their continued success.

Enterprise integration allows a group of businesses to act as a single "virtual" company. Design or management changes are immediately transmitted throughout the supply chain, allowing real time integration into the various components. The result is a leaner and more efficient manufacturing process. Implementation of such a plan has been projected to save the auto industry over $1 billion/year. Similarly dramatic savings are possible in a host of other manufacturing industries as well. Any industry that relies on a series of companies efficiently working together would benefit.

However, there are significant challenges. Significant numbers of incompatible design, engineering and manufacturing systems abound within a typical supply chain. Various vendors have been selling management systems to individual companies for years without incorporating concern for future interconnectivity. Even new development causes problems. New software packages with greater functionality create difficulties for small companies at the bottom of the supply chain, since they can ill-afford to keep up with the latest technology.

One promising solution is in data exchange standards. The creation of standard protocols for the exchange of information between systems could alleviate the difficulties associated with inter-company communication. NIST has over 20 years experience in this critical area and is well positioned to take the lead for enterprising integration in the United States. NIST has a long track record and a close and trusted relationship among industry leaders. It has obtained this reputation by working with industry and including them in the standards setting process rather than imposing one on them. In addition, NIST already has a number of programs designed at improving the role of small businesses and is aware of their particular needs.

Standards are essential to enterprise integration and traditionally it has been the role of government to foster their development. NIST has all of the expertise and experience required and is the ideal agency to lead this effort. I want to thank the leadership for recognizing the importance of this issue to the small business community and I urge my colleagues to support this bill.

Mr. EHLERS. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. All time for general debate has expired.

Pursuant to the rule, the amendment in the nature of a substitute printed in the bill shall be considered by sections as an original bill for the purpose of amendment and each section is considered read.

During consideration of the bill for amendment, the Chair may accord priority in recognition to a Member offering an amendment that he has printed in the designated place in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. Those amendments will be considered read.

The Clerk will designate section 1.

The text of Section 1 is as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Enterprise Integration Act of 2002".

Mr. EHLERS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the remainder of the bill be printed in the RECORD and open to amendment at any point.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

The text of the remainder of the bill is as follows:

SEC. 2. FINDINGS.

The Congress makes the following findings:

(1) Over 90 percent of United States companies engaged in manufacturing are small and medium-sized businesses.

(2) Most of these manufacturers produce goods for assemblage into products of large companies.

(3) The emergence of the World Wide Web and the promulgation of international standards for product data exchange greatly accelerated the movement toward electronically integrated supply chains during the last half of the 1990's.

(4) European and Asian countries are investing heavily in electronic enterprise standards development, and in preparing their smaller manufacturers to do business in the new environment. European efforts are well advanced in the aerospace, automotive, and shipbuilding industries and are beginning in other industries including home building, furniture manufacturing, textiles, and apparel. This investment could give overseas companies a major competitive advantage.

(5) The National Institute of Standards and Technology, because of the electronic commerce expertise in its laboratories and quality program, its long history of working cooperatively with manufacturers, and the nationwide reach of its manufacturing extension program, is in a unique position to help United States large and smaller manufacturers alike in their responses to this challenge.

(6) It is, therefore, in the national interest for the National Institute of Standards and Technology to accelerate its efforts in helping industry develop standards and enterprise integration processes that are necessary to increase efficiency and lower costs.

SEC. 3. ENTERPRISE INTEGRATION INITIATIVE.

(a) ESTABLISHMENT.—The Director shall establish an initiative for advancing enterprise integration within the United States. In carrying out this section, the Director shall involve, as appropriate, the various units of the National Institute of Standards and Technology, including the National Institute of Standards and Technology laboratories (including the Building and Fire Research Laboratory), the Manufacturing Extension Partnership program established under sections 25 and 26 of the National Institute of Standards and Technology Act (15 U.S.C. 278k and 278l), and the Malcolm Baldrige National Quality Program. This initiative shall build upon ongoing efforts of the National Institute of Standards and Technology and of the private sector, shall involve consortia that include government and industry, and shall address the enterprise integration needs of each United States major manufacturing industry at the earliest possible date.

(b) ASSESSMENT.—For each major manufacturing industry, the Director may work with industry, trade associations, professional societies, and others as appropriate, to identify enterprise integration standardization and implementation activities underway in the United States and abroad that affect that industry and to assess the current state of enterprise integration within that industry. The Director may assist in the development of roadmaps to permit supply chains within the industry to operate as an integrated electronic enterprise. The roadmaps shall be based on voluntary consensus standards.

(c) REPORTS.—Within 180 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, and annually thereafter, the Director shall submit to the Committee on Science of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation of the Senate a report on the National Institute of Standards and Technology's activities under subsection (b).

(d) AUTHORIZED ACTIVITIES.—In order to carry out this Act, the Director may work with industry, trade associations, professional societies, and others as appropriate—

(1) to raise awareness in the United States of enterprise integration activities in the United States and abroad, including by the convening of conferences;

(2) on the development of enterprise integration roadmaps;

(3) to support the development, testing, promulgation, integration, adoption, and upgrading of standards related to enterprise integration including application protocols; and

(4) to provide technical assistance and, if necessary, financial support to small and medium-sized businesses that set up pilot projects in enterprise integration.

(e) MANUFACTURING EXTENSION PROGRAM.—The Director shall ensure that the Manufacturing Extension Program is prepared to advise small and medium-sized businesses on how to acquire the expertise, equipment, and training necessary to participate fully in supply chains using enterprise integration.

SEC. 4. DEFINITIONS.

For purposes of this Act—

(1) the term "automotive" means land-based engine-powered vehicles including automobiles, trucks, busses, trains, defense vehicles, farm equipment, and motorcycles;

(2) the term "Director" means the Director of the National Institute of Standards and Technology;

(3) the term "enterprise integration" means the electronic linkage of manufacturers, assemblers, suppliers, and customers to enable the electronic exchange of product, manufacturing, and other business data among all partners in a product supply chain, and such term includes related application protocols and other related standards;

(4) the term "major manufacturing industry" includes the aerospace, automotive, electronics, shipbuilding, construction, home building, furniture, textile, and apparel industries and such other industries as the Director designates; and

(5) the term "roadmap" means an assessment of manufacturing interoperability requirements developed by an industry describing that industry's goals related to enterprise integration, the knowledge and standards including application protocols necessary to achieve those goals, and the necessary steps, timetable, and assignment of responsibilities for acquiring the knowledge and developing the standards and protocols.

SEC. 5. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

There are authorized to be appropriated to the Director to carry out functions under this Act—

- (1) $2,000,000 for fiscal year 2002;
- (2) $10,000,000 for fiscal year 2003;
- (3) $15,000,000 for fiscal year 2004; and
- (4) $20,000,000 for fiscal year 2005.

AMENDMENT NO. 1 OFFERED BY MS. JACKSON-LEE OF TEXAS

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will designate the amendment.

The text of the amendment is as follows:

Page 5, line 6, insert "including awareness by businesses that are majority owned by women, minorities, or both," after "in the United States".

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. As a Member of the House Committee on Science, I remember having the pleasure of joining this committee when I first was elected and I started out by saying science is the work of the 21st century. This legislation epitomizes that thought.

I want to thank the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. BARCIA) for his long-standing leadership on this issue to recognize that it is our job in this Congress to help create jobs and to make a better pathway for those jobs to be created and for the products to be the best product that you can produce here in the United States. This legislation does that. I do thank him for that.

I thank the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. EHLERS) again for his leadership and the bipartisan spirit that this legislation has moved, and the ranking member, the gentleman from Texas (Mr. HALL), and the gentleman from New York (Mr. BOEHLERT), the chairman of the committee, for putting forward H.R. 2733, the Enterprise Integration Act of 2002.

I believe that this country loses when we lose the opportunity to manufacture. We lose the opportunity to have that kind of technology and expertise, because I agree with the chairman of this subcommittee and, of course, the ranking member, that computers are very important in allowing their language to be the same. We speak now in computers. We use computers almost for everything that we can think of. We use it in our consumer life and in our nonbusiness life, but we certainly do use it in our business life, and it is important for computers of all companies, of all size companies, to be able to communicate. That means that the language must be the same, the whole system must be integrated and they must understand each other.

I believe that manufacturers in the United States will benefit, and I have a particular area in my district where there are small manufacturers and small businesses, and they depend upon producing a product that large manufacturers will buy. They need to have the right language to produce the safest and best product. I believe the workers will benefit because that small company will benefit, and, as well, I believe that we will have a better and more diverse product.

With that, Mr. Chairman, I am now submitting this amendment, as I said, in order to ensure that our women-owned and minority-owned businesses are likewise involved; that they have the same outreach, the same capacity, the same language, the same computer technology.

We said some few years ago, and it seems like it was a long time ago, that we must close the digital divide. The Committee on Science has worked diligently with many members of the Committee on Science to make sure the digital divide is closed and our schools are linked, our small businesses are linked, our communities are linked.

I might say there is work to be done in our rural areas and our urban areas and some of the schools across the Nation, I would say a large number. This is a step in the direction of ensuring that the manufacturing system, large and small, is integrated together. I know the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. BARCIA) has worked very long on this, and again I would like to say this is where Texas and Michigan are working together, because even though we are in different regions, we know that automation, technology and manufacturing speak in one voice and one language.

I would like to make sure that when we talk about these issues, we talk about the richness of the diversity of America and all businesses, small businesses, minority-owned businesses and women-owned businesses, have the ability to access H.R. 2733.

With that, Mr. Chairman, I would ask my colleagues to support this amendment.

Mr. Chairman, from the dawn of the computer age, integrated automation has been the Holy Grail of computing. Achieving full integrated automation remains elusive, despite huge investments in a wide array of technologies that promise integration—from database technologies to single-vendor application suites. The integration challenge is fundamentally twofold: (1) business process assets (programs and documentation) and (2) information assets (databases and files). A complete enterprise integration strategy must encompass both of these critically important asset classes.

The guiding philosophy behind integration at the data layer is that the real currency of the enterprise is its data and that the best path to this data is usually not through the original application. Additionally, the implied business logic in the data and metadata can be easily manipulated directly by applications in the new architecture of the enterprise. This premise is underscored by the fact that in both application integration and data integration, business logic is transferred and/or rewritten outside the original applications. The challenge is in actually getting to the data. Current business processes are critical to initiatives focused on the improved automation of internal workflow as well as interactions with suppliers, partners and distributors. Reusing the existing application packages is reasonable, because the focus is on improving the delivery mechanism or extending the system-level interfaces of the current processes. Data asset integration is critical to the success of externally focused initiatives that are driven by new business processes. For example, self-service initiatives are driven by the needs of new audiences to access existing information.

Today's U.S. economy depends more than ever on the talents of skilled, high-tech workers. To sustain America's preeminence we must take drastic steps to change the way we develop our technology landscape. The continually evolving nature of every business's application landscape drives the need for easy-to-use automated information integration between application platforms. While the ideal is a single database infrastructure that supports all applications within a business, the evolutionary nature of technology investments makes this an unattainable goal for most.

To address these challenges, companies are devising integration architectures designed to leverage their data assets while insulating themselves from ongoing changes in technology. Unfortunately, there is no single strategy or product that addresses all the diverse integration challenges faced by most enterprises. Therefore, enterprise integration is not a one-size-fits-all problem, and there is no one-size-fits-all solution. The businesses need that drive to search for integration solutions that demand a mix of technologies. Understanding the dynamics of application-driven and data-driven integration solutions empowers technology to implement the right solution for the problem at hand.

By not tapping into the potential of all our groups, we are losing ground by not tapping into the potential of all our groups. We must take some bold steps today, for the rewards to our country and our citizens will be great. Many minority people feel it's an impossible field to get into because they have had little or no knowledge about career choices in the field.

Changes are sweeping our computer-intertwined real lives in many different directions and our society is being further fragmented, not only by levels of education, financial status, and ethnic background, but also by accessibility to and knowledge of the world of the artificial. The world of interactions with computers has extended from programming to dialogs and navigation in virtual and simulated worlds of information that will further divide our children and adults into "haves and have-nots." The underrepresented minority population in the United States, while increasing in numbers, is decreasing in numbers of people entering the computer field at a time when the bounty of new opportunities seems to be rising without end in sight. Large segments of the population, on the basis of ethnicity and gender, are not participating in proportional numbers in supplying the information technology needs of the nation.

The lack of diversity of science, engineering and technology education and careers is nothing new. Stereotypes based on race, ethnicity, gender, and disability have long discouraged inquisitive minds whose bodies do not match the public image. This is why I have proposed these amendments, I believe that women and minorities should be included in this technology revolution. They should not be left behind.

I urge support of the amendments to H.R. 2733.

Mr. EHLERS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. Chairman, it is a pleasure to rise and indicate my willingness to accept this amendment, just as we did in the previous bill.

Mr. Chairman, I have worked with the gentlewoman from Texas on many issues relating to this. I am very familiar with NIST and their work, and, I suspect, in fact, I believe it is correct to say that they are as color-blind and gender-blind as anyone I have known, largely because on issues such as this they are working primarily on the computer language rather than on other issues.

But, nevertheless, given the past history of our Nation and of some business practices, it never hurts to add the language that the gentlewoman from Texas has included in her amendment, and it certainly enhances the bill, does not detract from it, and I am very pleased to accept this amendment.

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EHLERS. I yield to the gentlewoman from Texas.

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Chairman, let me thank the gentleman very much as well, because we have worked on the Committee on Science for a number of years and I believe he has consistently joined in on issues dealing with outreach to minorities and women. I thank the gentleman for accepting this particular amendment that adds to this very excellent bill on this issue.

Mr. HALL of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, this is a good amendment, and I want to thank the gentlewoman from Houston, Texas. It is an upgrading amendment. It is in the area of a housekeeping amendment, but it is much more than that.

This amendment actually accentuates awareness, delineates the requirement that all sectors are addressed. The gentlewoman included all businesses, including women and minorities. It is a good amendment. It certainly helps to close the digital divide, and I support the amendment and ask for its passage.

Mr. BARCIA. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I simply want to thank the gentlewoman from Texas for her amendment, which strengthens the bill and sends the right signal that we all recognize here in Congress and across the country that the major growth of small- and medium-sized businesses in this country is at the behest of women entrepreneurs, as well as minority entrepreneurs. Certainly it is the intent of this legislation to include all of those risk-takers who create jobs and create growth in our economy. Obviously I think the bill is a better bill with the amendment offered by the gentlewoman from Texas (Ms. JACKSON-LEE). I am fully supportive of the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I also want to thank the gentleman from Michigan (Chairman EHLERS) for his kind remarks and say that I have enjoyed serving on our subcommittee thoroughly with each and every member of that subcommittee who worked so diligently and in a bipartisan fashion each and every week throughout the year we are in session to produce a great quality of legislation and measures that will enhance competitiveness for our domestic business community, as well as strengthen science in business and our environmental regulations.

I am proud as a member of that subcommittee to say that we always approached these issues with a bipartisan approach, and I am very grateful to the chairman of the subcommittee as well as the members of the subcommittee and the full committee, along with the ranking member, the gentleman from Texas (Mr. HALL), and the gentleman from New York (Chairman BOEHLERT), for moving this legislation so expeditiously.

It will help, and I am grateful for their support.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentlewoman from Texas (Ms. JACKSON-LEE). The amendment was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 2 OFFERED BY MS. JACKSON-LEE OF TEXAS

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will designate the amendment.

The text of the amendment is as follows:

Amendment No. 2 offered by Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas:

OFFERED BY: MS. JACKSON-LEE OF TEXAS

AMENDMENT NO. 2: Page 5, after line 25, insert the following new subsection:

(f) WOMEN AND MINORITY AWARENESS STUDIES.—

(1) BASELINE STUDY.—Not later than 1 year after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Director shall transmit to the Congress a report describing the extent of awareness of, and participation in, enterprise integration development activities by businesses that are majority owned by women, minorities, or both.

(2) PROGRAM EVALUATION.—Not later than 3 years after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Director shall transmit to the Congress a report evaluating the extent to which activities under this section, especially under subsection (d)(1), have increased the awareness of, and participation in, enterprise integration development activities by businesses that are majority owned by women, minorities, or both.

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Chairman, let me frame my interest in this amendment, and that is that I believe to sustain America's preeminence we must take drastic steps to change the way we develop our technology landscape. The continually evolving nature of every business's application landscape drives the need for easy-to-use automated integration between application platforms.

This is an excellent legislative initiative that we are now discussing. And I wanted to make sure that as we implemented this legislation, I encourage my colleagues to vote enthusiastically for H.R. 2733, that we would put in place a women-and-minority awareness study to ensure that we are reaching out to women-owned businesses as we do to all businesses and to minority businesses all over this country.

But I have had the opportunity to discuss with the distinguished ranking member of the subcommittee, the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. BARCIA), and I am very pleased with both the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. EHLERS) and his commitment to this issue, and I would like to work with them with the idea of working this legislation through its process as it works its will to ensure that these aspects of the legislation are included, and we will work together on that. And in that vein, Mr. Chairman, I am going to ask unanimous consent to withdraw this amendment.

Mr. BARCIA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentlewoman yield?

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. BARCIA. I would like to thank the gentlewoman for withdrawing this amendment, but also pledge my support in work with her and other members of the subcommittee and Chairman EHLERS, as well as those officials at NIST, to accomplish the goals of this amendment, and I appreciate again the intent of what she is trying to accomplish. It certainly will enhance the mission that we are attempting to achieve with this bill, and I want to thank the gentlewoman for the amendment which was just adopted which strengthens the bill, but also agreeing today to work further on this issue as the process moves forward.

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. I thank very much the distinguished ranking member. We are going to miss him very much as he goes on to other great opportunities in his great State, and we appreciate very much his leadership on this issue.

Mr. EHLERS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentlewoman yield?

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. EHLERS. I thank the gentlewoman for yielding, and I thank her for offering the amendment that once again raises an issue that deserves to be raised. But I also appreciate her withdrawing this because it would be inappropriate in this bill at this time simply because it would likely detract from the central goal and slow it down, and it is very important to get this into action soon. But once again, this is something we would pursue down the line, I am sure, if there is a problem that has to be followed. So I appreciate her offering it, and I appreciate her willingness to withdraw it at this time.

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. I look forward to working with the gentleman from Michigan on this.

Mr. Chairman, with the acknowledgment of the great work of our respective ranking member, the gentleman from Texas (Mr. HALL), and the gentleman from New York (Chairman BOEHLERT) and the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. EHLERS) and the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. BARCIA) on this matter, I look forward to working with them on this. More importantly, I am delighted that this legislation will bear the gentleman's name and so many lives will be improved by this legislation. Mr. Chairman, with that I will work on this matter with my colleagues.

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment is withdrawn.

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute, as amended.

The committee amendment in the nature of a substituted, as amended, was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the Committee rises.

Accordingly, the Committee rose; and the Speaker pro tempore (Mr. HASTINGS of Washington) having assumed the chair, Mr. JEFF MILLER of Florida, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H.R. 2733) to authorize the National Institute of Standards and Technology to work with major manufacturing industries on an initiative of standards development and implementation for electronic enterprise integration, pursuant to House Resolution 474, he reported the bill back to the House with an amendment adopted by the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the rule, the previous question is ordered.

Is a separate vote demanded on the amendment to the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute adopted by the Committee of the Whole? If not, the question is on the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute.

The committee amendment in the nature of a substitute was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. EHLERS. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 8 of rule XX, the Chair announces that this vote will be followed by a 5-minute vote on the passage of H.R. 2486.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 397, nays 22, not voting 15, as follows:

So the bill was passed.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The title of the bill was amended so as to read: "A bill to authorize the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration, through the United States Weather Research Program, to conduct research and development, training, and outreach activities relating to inland flood forecasting improvement, and for other purposes."

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Stated for:

Mr. BALDACCI. Mr. Speaker, on the last recorded vote, I was unable to get to the recorded vote. I would have voted "yea" if I had an opportunity to do that.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Ms. DUNN. Mr. Speaker, on Thursday, July 11, 2002, I was unable to be present for roll-call votes No. 293 and No. 294.

Had I been present, I would have voted "yea" on rollcall No. 293, in favor of H.R. 2733, the Enterprise Integration Act of 2002, and "yea" on rollcall No. 294, in favor of H.R. 2486, the Tropical Cyclone Inland Forecasting Improvement and Warning System Development Act of 2002.

COMMUNICATION FROM THE HON. EDOLPHUS TOWNS, MEMBER OF CONGRESS

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following communication from the Honorable EDOLPHUS TOWNS, Member of Congress:

CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, DC, July 1, 2002.

Hon. J. DENNIS HASTERT,
Speaker, House of Representatives, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. SPEAKER: This is to formally notify you, pursuant to Rule VIII of the Rules of the House, that I have been served with a grand jury subpoena for documents issued by the U.S. District Court for the Eastern District of New York.

After consultation with the Office of General Counsel, I have determined that it is consistent with the precedents and privileges of the House to comply with the subpoena.

Sincerely,

EDOLPHUS TOWNS,
Member of Congress.

COMMUNICATION FROM WASHINGTON OPERATIONS DIRECTOR, OFFICE OF HON. TOM LATHAM, MEMBER OF CONGRESS

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following communication from James D. Carstensen, Washington Operations Director, Office of the Honorable TOM LATHAM, Member of Congress:

CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, DC, July 10, 2002.

Hon. J. DENNIS HASTERT,
Speaker, House of Representatives, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. SPEAKER: This is to formally notify you, pursuant to Rule VIII of the Rules of the House, that I have been served with a grand jury subpoena for testimony issued by the Superior Court of the District of Columbia.

After consultation with the Office of General Counsel, I have determined that compliance with the subpoena is consistent with the precedents and privileges of the House.

JAMES D. CARSTENSEN,
Washington Operations
Director, Office of Congressman
Tom Latham (IA-05).

GENERAL LEAVE

Mrs. BIGGERT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks and include extraneous material on H.R. 2733.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

SPECIAL ORDERS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the Speaker's announced policy of January 3, 2001, and under a previous order of the House, the following Members will be recognized for 5 minutes each.

RECONSTRUCTIVE SURGERY ACT OF 2002

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Arkansas (Mr. ROSS) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. ROSS. Mr. Speaker, I rise this afternoon to share with my colleagues the heartbreaking story of a constituent of mine. After hearing of the challenges she has faced and still faces today in order to try and live a normal life, I introduced the Reconstructive Surgery Act of 2002, H.R. 4959.

This bill requires health insurance plans to cover medically necessary reconstructive surgery for congenital defects, developmental abnormalities, infection, trauma or disease.

As an infant, Wendelyn Osborne was diagnosed with a rare, congenital bone disease, craniometaphysial dysplasia, or CMD, which involves an overgrowth of facial bone that never deteriorates.

At the time of her diagnosis, she was the sixteenth CMD case in the world in medical history. Doctors told her parents that she would not live past the age of 10. After many surgeries, starting at the age of 6, Wendelyn has lived to be 36 years old. But she is not free of the harmful effects of her disease. Her facial muscles are paralyzed. Her optic nerve is damaged, and she must wear a hearing aid in order to hear properly. The severity of her abnormalities requires further orthognathic surgeries so she may continue to be able to eat properly. Yet, Mrs. Osborne's insurance company will not cover this procedure because it is considered cosmetic.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have my colleague from Arkansas (Mr. BERRY) as a cosponsor on this legislation with me. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BERRY. Mr. Speaker, I want to thank my colleague from the Fourth District of Arkansas (Mr. ROSS) for his leadership on this matter. Clearly, the bill that he has introduced and I cosponsored, H.R. 4959, that requires health insurance to cover medically necessary reconstructive surgery for congenital defects, developmental abnormalities, trauma or disease is the right thing to do.

People that are so unfortunate that they would be faced with a situation like this and desperately need insurance coverage should be respected by the insurance companies that choose to take advantage of a situation and refuse to pay for the care that these people need.

My colleague from the 4th District has already referred to Ms. Osborne, an Arkansas resident who was diagnosed with a rare, life-threatening congenital bone disease as a child. This should not be something that the insurance companies are allowed to take advantage of. It is time that this House does the right thing. It is time that we make it possible for Ms. Osborne and others that have been unfortunate enough to need this kind of treatment, that they will be allowed and that they will have the opportunity and that the insurance companies will provide the necessary coverage for their treatment.

Mr. ROSS. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the gentleman from Arkansas (Mr. BERRY) for joining me here today in our fight in trying to correct the wrong by the big insurance companies.

They covered the surgeries that Wendelyn needed until she was about 18, maybe 21. Then it is like they are saying she was not supposed to live this long so we will not cover her operations any more. That is wrong.

The Reconstructive Surgery Act that we have written defines medically necessary reconstructive surgery as surgery performed to correct or repair abnormal structures of the body caused by congenital defects, developmental abnormalities, trauma, infection, tumors or disease. The surgery must be designed to improve functions or to give the patient a normal appearance to the extent possible in the judgment of the physician performing the surgery.

It specifically excludes cosmetic procedures defined as surgery that is performed to alter or reshape the normal structures of the body in order to improve appearance.

This bill draws a line between improving looks and improving life, oftentimes, as in Wendelyn's case, perhaps saving a life. Several States have a law requiring insurance coverage of medically necessary reconstructive surgery up to the age of 18. The Reconstructive Surgery Act is an effort to build upon what the States have started as well as address the apparent arbitrary decision-making of some big insurance plans that refuse coverage and question physicians' judgments when patients like Wendelyn Osborne try to get coverage under the plan for which they pay premiums every month.

The Reconstructive Surgery Act is endorsed by the National Organization for Rare Disorders, National Foundation for Facial Reconstruction, Easter Seals and the March of Dimes.

I am going to fight to move this legislation forward, to help people like Wendelyn Osborne get the reconstructive surgeries that they must have to stay alive and to live as normal and healthy a life as possible, and I urge my colleagues to join me in this fight.

According to one Harvard researcher, there have been CMD sufferers in their 50's and 60's who continue to need surgery to prevent conditions such as this, procedures that will allow them to continue eating and breathing, yet orthognathic surgery is considered cosmetic.

Many of you remember the movie "Mask" in which Cher played the mother of a boy named Rocky who died from a disease similar to CMD. That movie was based on a true story. Rocky died because his mother couldn't afford the life-saving reconstructive surgeries he needed.

Ms. Osborne has never met another person who suffers from CMD, but she has met countless people who struggle with trying to get the reconstructive surgeries they need. People born with cleft lips and palates, with missing pectoral muscles that cause chest deformities, even burn victims—all cases where reconstructive surgery is considered merely cosmetic.

For these people, falling into the wrong category means denial of coverage for their medical needs.

REMOVAL OF NAME OF MEMBER AS COSPONSOR OF H.R. 4600

Mr. FATTAH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have my name removed as a cosponsor of H.R. 4600.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SHIMKUS). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

SECURITIES AND EXCHANGE COMMISSION

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Oregon (Mr. DEFAZIO) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. DEFAZIO. Mr. Speaker, the President gave a stunning speech the other day and talked about corporate responsibility. This is the new face of corporate responsibility, the chief law enforcement officer of the Securities and Exchange Commission. His name is Harvey Pitt. He is a former lobbyist for securities firms and accounting firms, and as a lobbyist, he opposed all reforms and tightening of regulations.

He was not there at the President's speech and some would say, well, the President's trying to kind of hide this guy because he is an embarrassment. Well, no, despite the fact that some of us think there is a crisis in corporate ethics and the meltdown and the bankruptcies and the pension losses and the tanking of the stock market and all the basic outright thievery that was going on, he was at the beach on vacation, but it really does not matter much because Harvey Pitt is so conflicted he cannot vote as the chief law enforcement officer of the Securities and Exchange Commission.

They were recently undertaking an enforcement action against an accounting firm. There were three commissioners present. They heard the evidence of the staff. It was compelling. They wanted to prosecute that firm, but Mr. Pitt had to say, oh, excuse me, they are my former clients, I represent them, I cannot vote. The other woman commissioner there said, gee, actually, I represented them, too; I cannot vote. So there was one commissioner left who could vote, a Clinton appointee, who did not have a conflict of interest. He voted to prosecute them, but then they appealed to an administrative law judge and said, hey, you cannot convict us with one vote, and in fact, the administrative law judge said you are right.

So here we have the new push for corporate accountability and responsibility, and we have a Securities and Exchange Commission that cannot prosecute anybody because two of the three sitting members named by President Bush are so conflicted because these are their former clients and their future clients when they leave their so-called public service they cannot vote.

So this is wonderful. We can talk about getting tough, but nobody is going to be prosecuted, fined or go to jail. It is a very interesting sort of turn of events.

Mr. Pitt has had and said some pretty interesting things. Here is his philosophy as the chief law enforcement officer of the Securities and Exchange Commission. In general, Mr. Pitt said in November, My preferred approach to any regulatory issue is one in which the government's participation is as limited as reasonably possible.

Well, he is at the beach and he cannot vote so I guess he is following his own provisos here.

Then we have his other famous statement when he was first sworn in. He went up to his buddies on Wall Street, had lunch, had a great time, lot of champagne and stuff. They are celebrating his becoming their regulator because they knew they would not have to worry much, and he said and promised, "a kinder and gentler place for accountants." The crooks could come to Harvey, share lunch, and it would be a kinder and gentler SEC.

If my colleagues saw the President's speech, there was this wonderful back-drop. Corporate responsibility, it said time and time and time again so one would not miss the message, even though, of course, the President was not advocating anything new or anything stringent or anything that might really jeopardize any of his corporate friends and contributors. Actually, what most people in the public do not know is actually that was the punishment. There was already very stiff punishment levied on those Wall Street tycoons. They had had to write 1,000 times on the wall "corporate responsibility" before the President's speech. That was their punishment, and that is about the only punishment they are going to get out of this administration.

RESTRICTION ON OCEAN DUMPING OFF NEW JERSEY COAST

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. PALLONE) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. PALLONE. Mr. Speaker, I just wanted to mention that I just introduced H.R. 5092 along with my cosponsors, the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. ANDREWS) and the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. HOLT), and the purpose of this legislation is to put in place as a matter of law a restriction on ocean dumping off the coast of New Jersey, actually at a site about 6 miles off the coast of my hometown in the 6th Congressional District, where several years ago myself and the two senators from New Jersey, Mr. TORRICELLI played a major role in this as well, worked out an agreement with the Federal Environmental Protection Agency that ocean dumping of toxic dredge materials would cease being dumped at this site called the mud dump site off the Jersey shore and that henceforth the site would be closed and the only thing that could be placed there would be clean fill material in order to remediate the site and serve as a cap for the toxic dredge materials that had been dumped there for so many years.

I was very disappointed last week when the EPA announced they were going to allow dredging once again of toxic materials from the Earl Naval Weapons Depot in my district in Leonardo, New Jersey, to be dumped at this site, contrary to this agreement that had been worked out. The agreement specifically said that nothing could be used as remediation material and dumped at the mud dump site that exceeded what was called a standard or guideline of 113 parts per billion in terms of PCBs.

We know that PCBs are very damaging to human health, particularly when they get into the marine life, and they ultimately pass up through the food chain, and we had all agreed pursuant to this understanding several years ago that this standard or guideline of 113 would be the standard for any kind of materials that would have to be placed at the mud dump site.

Unfortunately, last week the EPA decided to give a waiver so that the Navy at Earl could dump materials that exceeded the 113 at the site, and yesterday, pursuant to a court action that was taken by U.S. Gypsum Company, the Federal court in New York ruled that because the EPA had not properly promulgated the 113 standard, that it could not be applied any more for ocean dumping, and now there is some concern about whether U.S. Gypsum and other companies would be able to dump again off the coast of New Jersey.

So this legislation is necessary in order to guarantee that ocean dumping does not continue. Myself, the two Senators from New Jersey and other Members of Congress have called upon the administrator of the EPA, Mrs. Whitman, our former governor, to put the 113 standard into regulation as a matter of law, and hopefully she will do that, but at the same time, in order to back that up, I think it is necessary for us to introduce legislation in the House that would accomplish the same goal, and that is what this legislation would attempt to do.

Mr. Speaker, I do not have to tell my colleagues how important it is that we not continue to dump any kind of toxic material off the coast of New Jersey or anywhere else in the country. New Jersey's number one industry is tourism, and particularly now in July, after the July 4 holiday, there are so many people using the beaches, coming down to the Jersey Shore, both from New Jersey as well as New York and the State of Pennsylvania and even other States. If people do not feel or do not have the guarantee that the ocean water will be clean, obviously they are not going to swim and they should not swim.

The issue of ocean dumping does not just affect bathers. It affects marine life. It affects people who eat fish. It affects so many things along the coast of New Jersey and around the country, and I think it really is imperative that we stick to this standard of 113 parts per billion to make sure that human health is safeguarded and that we do not go back into the trend that we had so many years ago of continuing to dump everything in the ocean with the theory that somehow nobody would know about it and it would not make a difference.

It does make a difference. We have to have clean water, and this legislation hopefully will move quickly.

It is being sponsored and introduced in the Senate today by Senators Torricelli and Corzine from New Jersey, and hopefully we will get a lot more support for it and we can move it quickly so that it becomes law.

REPORT ON H.R. 5093, DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR AND RELATED AGENCIES APPROPRIATIONS ACT, 2003

Mr. KOLBE, from the Committee on Appropriations, submitted a privileged report (Rept. No. 107-564) on the bill (H.R. 5093) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior and related agencies for the fiscal year ending September 30, 2003, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Union Calendar and ordered to be printed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 1 of rule XXI, all points of order are reserved on the bill.

RESOLUTION OF CONFLICT BETWEEN ETHIOPIA AND ERITREA

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from New York (Mr. MEEKS) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. MEEKS of New York. Mr. Speaker, today I would like to discuss an important issue in the Horn of Africa, a final and binding resolution of the conflict between Ethiopia and Eritrea.

The Horn of Africa is one of the poorest regions in the world but also one of the most strategic. It is a region plagued by years of war and conflict, some of which were caused by colonial legacies, the Cold War, and border disputes, but now with the help of the international community, the nations of Eritrea and Ethiopia sit at the cusp of permanently breaking a cycle of conflict.

One of my top priorities when I came to this House was to help end conflict on the continent of Africa by serving as a member on the Subcommittee on Africa. There have been many wars in Africa. Some were just wars where African peoples fought to overthrow the yokes of colonialism and systems of racism. However, other wars in Africa fall into the category of unjust or senseless wars.

In the category of senseless wars in Africa, very few would top the 2-year border war between Eritrea and Ethiopia, two former brothers-in-arms who once fought together for over 30 years against dictatorships and for the right to self-determination.

The conflict that erupted in 1998 between the two countries was the result of a dispute over land in a barren, roadless area of shrubs and desert, and subsequent claims of military incursions. Two years of fighting left tens of thousands of people dead and more than a million refugees on both sides of the border displaced. What made this war even more destructive was that these nations, two of the poorest nations in the world and dependent upon foreign aid, were able to spend $3 billion to purchase weapons to wage this war.

Mr. Speaker, during the war, I always kept my doors open to officials from both nations. The only side I ever chose during the conflict was to stand on the side of all Ethiopians and all Eritreans who were committed to peace and who opposed the voices of militarism on either side.

On December 12, 2000, the two countries signed a United Nations-backed peace treaty, resulting in the end of hostilities and the creation of an independent commission to study and demarcate the disputed border area. According to the treaty, the border demarcation by the Hague Commission was to be final and binding. At the time, both countries stated their commitment to peace by vowing to fully implement the commission's ruling no matter what the outcome.

Mr. Speaker, on April 13 of this year, the Hague Commission released its decision on the demarcation of the Eritrean and Ethiopian border. Their decision reiterated the senselessness of the war by leaving the border substantially unaltered. Hence, what was this war about? Why did thousands of Ethiopians and Eritrean men and women have to die to resolve a border dispute?

Following the decision by the Hague Commission on May 13, 2002, the Ethiopian Government requested an interpretation of the commission's decision and order to implement the border demarcation process. While the original peace agreement gave no room for appeals by either party, the Hague Commission decided to accept the request by Ethiopia and pledged to provide a response within 30 days. This is why I wanted to speak on this issue today.

On June 24, the Hague Commission released its clarification report in response to Ethiopia's request. While the commission reviewed each of the points in Ethiopia's clarification request, it concluded by saying, "The Ethiopian request for clarification and interpretation appears to be founded on a misapprehension regarding the scope and effect of the Boundary Commission's Rules of Procedure. The commission does not find in any of the items that appear in section 2, 3 or 4 of the Ethiopian request anything that identifies an uncertainty in the commission's decision that could be resolved by interpretation at this time. Accordingly, the commission concludes that the Ethiopian request is inadmissible and no further action will be taken upon it."

With this decision, it is high time for a newly created African Union, the United States, and the entire international community to emphasize the following points to the leaders of both Eritrea and Ethiopia:

One, that the Hague Commission's decision and reply to Ethiopia's clarification request must be adopted by both parties as the final decision, once and for all; that both countries must abide by the Hague Commission's ruling, and the international community should offer support to both nations to fully implement the decision.

Two, both societies should learn the lessons of the history of this war so that its causes are not repeated in the future. Conflicts over boundaries using extreme forms of nationalism or ethnic exaggerations are senseless struggles.

Finally, I would like to urge the leaders of both nations to have the courage to place the will of their citizens over the interests of their power and outdated ideas about security.

Neither society won anything from the war and both sides lost. Previous progress was set back and both Ethiopia and Eritrea wasted human and financial resources. The only winners in unjust wars, are international arms sellers and traders.

I am confident that the peoples of both nations are tired of war. It is up to the leadership of both nations to serve the will of their citizens and demonstrate the vision to chart an irreversible course towards a permanent peace. I would like to challenge the leaders of both nations to understand that real power comes from leading a strong and prosperous society in a nation that is respected and able to assume its rightful place and responsibilities in the global community.

More importantly, real security and sustainable processes of peace are not attainable simply by having defined borders and territorial integrity. In this era of globalization, well defined borders and territorial integrity do not and can not always guarantee security.

Yes borders and territorial integrity are important, but they can't prevent instability and insecurity in any nation whose citizens face poverty, health crises and other forms of violence. Real security for any nation or society in the 21st century is linked to the degree of the political, social and economic conditions, rights, and opportunities of its citizens.

So I say to the Governments of Ethiopia and Eritrea: Accept the principle contained in OAU's framework for peace agreement which calls for both sides to: "Reject the use of force as a means of proposing solutions to disputes." Recognize that it is in your national security interests to accept the ruling as final and binding. Recognize that it is in your national strategic interests to put a senseless war behind you once and for all, because you have real wars to wage.

A war against poverty and HIV-AIDS which demand that both governments shift the focus of your energies and your scarce resources to not only to rebuild your economies to help those hurt most by the war, your citizens. But to also face the challenges of transforming the public and private institutions and structures in the economy for the development of your societies in the 21st century.

These are the wars which must be waged if the vision of a strong and vibrant African Union is going to be realized. An African Union which needs the Horn of Africa to be stable. I will work in this Congress to support new forms of broad based US engagement with both nations, as long as both nations demonstrate their commitment to fighting for peace, development, health care, education and democracy.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SHIMKUS). The Chair announces that at 2 p.m. we will cut off 5-minute special orders, and so we will expeditiously move forward.

HIV-AIDS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentlewoman from Texas (Ms. JACKSON-LEE) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Speaker, the brutality of the corporate scandal that has occurred here in this Nation is one that clearly we should all be concerned about. But the idea of ignoring the crisis of HIV-AIDS should be one that we abhor.

When I refer to the tragedy of the corporate scandal here in the United States, it is to the loss that so many have suffered and so many millions and billions of dollars that have been lost. It is my belief that those billions of dollars could be vitally used for the tragedy of what is going on in HIV-AIDS.

It is important to note that the World Conference on AIDS has said progress has been made. But in addition to progress being made, we also find that there is much work to be done, particularly as it relates to the infection of HIV-AIDS, to the issues dealing with immune systems and the kinds of infections that are now becoming immune to the various drugs that are being utilized, the lack of monies for developing nations, the lack of dollars for helping with the mother-to-child infection transmission. We have found that where you have the circumstance of mother-to-child transmission and you have intervention, you will find that it works to save lives.

The increase of HIV-infected persons is enormous. The increase in countries like India and Bangladesh and China is enormous. The number of HIV-infected people who do not know that they are infected is enormous. The key thing we must do is to be able to find a way to address this question.

The Millennium Project has been announced. There has been a request for $1 billion. There has been an additional request for $2 billion. Mr. Speaker, let me suggest that that is not enough. We are being tortured in this country by our own increase in HIV-AIDS, particularly among African American women, and I believe it is important for us to be able to focus our concern on many issues.

Corporate accountability is particularly important, as is corporate responsibility. Accountability is particularly important. So, too, are the concerns regarding HIV-AIDS infection, as has been indicated by the World Conference on AIDS.

I am delighted to have this opportunity to address the House on this very important issue because we cannot forget. As we parallel our track on the issues of corporate accountability and recognizing the billions of dollars that have been lost in insider trading and the need to provide security for our own employees with pension reform and protections as relates to bankruptcy issues, we cannot afford to lose sight of the devastation of HIV-AIDS.

I am looking forward to working on the increase in funds coming from this House and this body, and the President signing legislation to intervene internationally on the tremendous costs of HIV-AIDS. We lose people, we lose the ability for nations to thrive and grow, we undermine their economy, and they simply cannot thrive. They cannot feed the malnourished, they cannot provide affordable housing, and they cannot provide education because large percentages of their budget are taken up with issues such as HIV-AIDS.

We need to do proactive things, and one of them is to increase the relief or the forgiving of the debt that our Third World developing nations have so they can use those resources to provide health care for those in need. South Africa has been a leader, Zimbabwe; Zambia has been a leader, and now it is important that we find our way to emphasize HIV-AIDS intervention and protection thereof.

This is an important issue. It is important for this Nation, and I cannot leave, Mr. Speaker, without acknowledging that each is our brother's keeper. We are our brothers' and sisters' keepers, and as we need to help those in this country, we must help those who are seeking our aid in fighting HIV-AIDS and the intervention of such.

FARM SUBSIDIES

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. SMITH) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, today the Committee on Appropriations marked up and passed out the agricultural appropriations bill. That will be on the House floor next week.

In that effort this morning, there was an attempt to put language into that appropriations bill that would have the effect of having limits on the payments that go out to some of the very, very, big, big farmers. That amendment was squelched. A tremendous amount of pressure.

In the House, where we attempted to instruct conferees when the farm bill went through, that vote was overwhelming in giving the will of this House, this body, that we should have some kind of payment limits for farmers on farm price supports.

Let me just briefly, Mr. Speaker, explain the problem. We sort of hoodwink a lot of the American people by saying there are limits on what a farmer can receive. Not so. Because there is a loophole in the law. It is called generic certificates. After a farmer reaches the $75,000 limit that is allocated in the bill as a limit, from that point on there is a gimmick called generic certificates, that the government will sell the farmer the generic certificate to pay for the commodity. The farmer ends up getting the same kind of benefit as what is limited under the $75,000 limitation.

I would call to my colleagues' attention that next week we are trying to get language in the agricultural appropriations bill that will have some kind of a limit. So some of the farmers that are huge, that are big, are not getting million dollar payments that put the smaller farmer at a very distinct disadvantage, and that is good policy.

We should not have programs that wipe the small farmer out, and that is what is happening. Because the farm program is capitalized on land values, land values have gone up because of this last farm bill, and that means that it is harder for a small farmer to survive.

Let me just ask my colleagues to seriously look at this issue in the next several days and consider the amendment that we intend to offer on the floor.

Mr. BACA. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I yield to the gentleman from California.

VIDEO GAME BILL

Mr. BACA. Mr. Speaker, while our Nation is defending ourselves from attacks from abroad, we are facing another battle here at home. We are in a battle for the hearts and the minds and souls of our children. We must address the cultural issues that are influencing the behavior of our children.

They are being drowned by the flood of sex and violence from the video game industry. When four out of five kids walk into the neighborhood stores and buy video games that show people having sex with prostitutes, killing police officers, using drugs, and attacking our senior citizens, it is time to take action. These games are brainwashing our children. They teach them the skills and the will to kill.

I am a parent, a grandparent, and I have had enough of violence that we are experiencing amongst our youth. From Columbine, from Texas, to Germany we have seen the tragic consequences of youth violence.

The video game industry is a $9 billion industry. But it is not about money, it is about our children. As an adult, you can shoot a gun, you can drink a beer, you can smoke a cigar. But if you are giving these substances to a child, you are a criminal. When it comes to video games with violent or sexual content, the same should be true.

The pornography industry, the gun industry, the tobacco industry, and the alcohol industry all accept regulations on their products when it comes to kids. And so must the video industry do the same.

We, as parents, need to take responsibility for our children. We have to monitor where and what they are learning and the type of behavior. We are the first and last line of defense. But stores also have a responsibility. Parents cannot be undermined by stores that are only looking to make a profit.

□ 1400

Nine out of 10 parents want the stores to prevent our children from buying these games. The fact is that these stores are not enforcing their own policies. When stores have to decide whether to sell a game or make it quick, they do not enforce the policies. That is why, Mr. Speaker, I have introduced H.R. 4645, the Protect Children from Video Game Sex and Violence Act.

RECESS

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SHIMKUS). Pursuant to clause 12 of rule I, the Chair declares the House in recess subject to the call of the Chair.

Accordingly (at 2 p.m.), the House stood in recess subject to the call of the Chair.

AFTER RECESS

The recess having expired, the House was called to order by the Speaker pro tempore (Mr. JEFF MILLER of Florida) at 4 o'clock and 43 minutes p.m.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. BISHOP. Mr. Speaker, on roll-calls 288 and 291, I inadvertently voted "no" when I intended and should have voted "yes."

THE 14TH INTERNATIONAL AIDS
CONFERENCE FOR KNOWLEDGE AND COMMITMENT TO ACTION

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from California (Ms. LEE) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Ms. LEE. Mr. Speaker, this weekend in Barcelona, Spain, 15,000 people came together for the 14th International AIDS Conference for Knowledge and Commitment for Action.

I had the privilege to participate in this very important conference and can say with certainty that while Congress and the administration are waking up to the desperate call of millions of individuals living with HIV and AIDS, and those yet to be born to this scourge, we are still not doing enough.

Let me bring the Members up to date on this global pandemic. In 2001, there were 5 million new AIDS infections across the globe. Today there are 40 million people living with AIDS worldwide, and there are 14 million AIDS orphans.

In the United States, 950,000 have been diagnosed with AIDS. African Americans make up only 13 percent of the total United States population, but 54 percent of new infections and 82 percent of women who are newly infected with HIV are African American and Hispanic.

In my district in Oakland, California, we declared a state of emergency in order to focus attention on this tragic, tragic crisis. The latest statistics indicate that the number of new infections is slowing in Alameda County; yet we must do more.

AIDS is a disease that affects the entire human family. It has impacted every corner of the Earth. Therefore, we must discuss this problem in a global context. We must address prevention, treatment, vaccines, access, and funding in a comprehensive fashion.

At the conference, I heard repeated over and over again that while developing a vaccine we must help developing countries develop the required health care delivery systems and infrastructure to ensure equal access. We cannot repeat the pattern we have seen on the African continent where access to anti-retroviral drugs and AIDS treatment are far from equal. Currently in Africa more than 28 million people are living with HIV and AIDS. However, only 30,000 are in treatment. In comparison to the United States, nearly 100 percent of people who are infected are in treatment and they need it and they receive it.

At the conference we again engaged the ongoing debate over prevention versus treatment. Most concluded, and rightfully so, that it must not be an either/or dilemma. Working to prevent the mother-to-child transmission must not exclude keeping the mother, father and child alive. Once again, there is no way we should buy into an either/or strategy.

While I am pleased that President Bush has acknowledged the need for drugs to reduce mother-to-child transmissions, that is only one component of what should be a multifaceted approach to tackling this pandemic. In Barcelona at a remarkable AIDS march for life, thousands came together to call for treatment now and presented the Barcelona Declaration, which was read into the opening session of the conference.

This declaration called for securing donations of $10 billion per year for global AIDS; antiretroviral treatment for at least 2 million people with HIV/AIDS in the developing world by 2004; lower affordable drug prices and universal access to generics in the developing world; and a new global partnership between government and NGOs.

Mr. Speaker, the entire Barcelona Declaration is as follows:

BARCELONA DECLARATION
$10 BILLION FOR AIDS TREATMENT
2 MILLION PEOPLE WORLDWIDE IN TREATMENT
BY 2004

Whereas every single day AIDS claims 8,500 lives, or the equivalent of three World Trade Center disasters daily;

Whereas by December 2001, 40 million people were living with HIV/AIDS, and by 2005 an estimated 100 million will be infected;

Whereas more than 40 million children—most of them in developing nations—will be orphaned by AIDS by 2010;

Whereas the World Health Organization this year has stated that anti-retroviral treatment is medically essential and has issued specific treatment guidelines, monitoring standards and regimen recommendations;

Whereas those on treatment represent less than 2% of all those infected with HIV because such treatment is almost completely unavailable in developing nations;

Whereas over 500 non-governmental organizations globally have endorsed the Barcelona March for Life, which demands treatment access to at least 2 million individuals in the developing world by the time of the 2004 International Conference on AIDS in Bangkok;

Whereas these organizations represent AIDS activists from Africa, Asia and the Pacific Islands, Australia, Europe, Central and South America, and North America

Therefore, we declare as activists pledged to life for all persons with HIV/AIDS that we are committed to the following goals:

1. Securing donation of $10 billion dollars per year for global AIDS;

2. Antiretroviral (ARV) treatment for at least two million people with HIV/AIDS in the developing world by the 2004 Bangkok AIDS conference;

3. Lower, affordable ARV drug prices in the developed world and universal access to generics in the developing world by Bangkok, 2004; and

4. A new global partnership between government and NGOs recognizing the primary role of NGOs in the global fight against AIDS.

We call on the delegates of the Barcelona International AIDS Conference to pledge themselves to these goals.

Now, I must mention a very disappointing turn of events leading up to the Barcelona conference. Many African delegates, especially those living with HIV and AIDS, were singled out and denied visas by Spain for questionable reasons. Therefore, the conference did not benefit from the insights of those living with this disease at its epicenter in Africa. We lost the voices we heard at the 13th conference in Durban, South Africa, in 2000.

In Barcelona we heard many strategies and staggering statistics of lives destroyed, but we also heard models of hope. In Uganda, Thailand and Senegal, for example, strong national leadership partnered with community-wide response are reducing new HIV infections and AIDS diagnoses and focusing on treatment measures for their people.

We must continue to support these efforts by increasing U.S. bilateral and multilateral funding for vital AIDS, tuberculosis and malaria programs. I am even more convinced that the United States must put at least, and this is a minimum, just at least $1 billion into the global trust fund for starters. Dr. Peter Piot, the director of UNAIDS, said that a $10 billion effort will only begin to make a dent in this crisis. We will never see a favorable result in a crisis of this magnitude if we continue to nickel and dime our efforts.

I agree that we must streamline bureaucracies and facilitate better coordination, but that should happen while we ramp up our response. Together in a bipartisan effort we must now move forward with appropriate significant resources for this life-and-death effort. It is time to put our money where our mouth is.

Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. HYDE) and his very diligent staff, and the ranking member, the gentleman from California (Mr. LANTOS), and his staff, the gentleman from Iowa (Mr. LEACH) and Mary Andrus of his staff, and the gentlewoman from the Virgin Islands (Mrs. CHRISTENSEN), the gentlewoman from California (Ms. MILLENDER-MCDONALD), and Michael Riggs of my staff for making HIV/AIDS a priority of the Committee on International Relations.

THEORY OF THE ORIGIN OF MAN

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. JEFF MILLER of Florida). Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. PENCE) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. PENCE. Mr. Speaker, I have always been interested in origins. Even though my training is in the law and in history, it has ever been an avocation of mine to contemplate and to study the origins of man and of life here on Earth.

Many theories of origins have been propounded throughout our Nation's history. In 1859, a sincere biologist returned from the Galapagos Islands and wrote a book entitled "The Origins of Species," in which Charles Darwin offered a theory of the origin of species which we have come to know as evolution. Charles Darwin never thought of evolution as anything other than a theory. He hoped that some day it would be proven by the fossil record but did not live to see that, nor have we.

In 1925 in the famous Scopes Monkey Trial, this theory made its way through litigation into the classrooms of America, and we have all seen the consequences over the last 77 years: evolution not taught as a sincere theory of a biologist, but rather, Mr. Speaker, taught as fact. Unless anyone listening in would doubt that, we can all see in our mind's eye that grade school classroom that we all grew up in with the linear depiction of evolution just above the chalkboard. There is the monkey crawling on the grass. There is the Neanderthal dragging his knuckles and then there is Mel Gibson standing in all of his glory.

It is what we have been taught, that man proceeded and evolved along linear lines. But now comes a new find by paleontologists. In the newspapers all across America, a new study in "Nature" magazine, 6- to 7-million-year-old skull has been unearthed, the Toumai skull and it suggests that human evolution was actually, according to a new theory, human evolution was taking place, and I am quoting now, "all across Africa and the Earth," and the Earth was once truly, and I quote, "a planet of the apes on which nature was experimenting with many human-like creatures."

Paleontologists are excited about this, Mr. Speaker. But no one is pointing out that the textbooks will need to be changed because the old theory of evolution taught for 77 years in the classrooms of America as fact is suddenly replaced by a new theory, or I hasten to add, I am sure we will be told a new fact.

The truth is it always was a theory, Mr. Speaker. And now that we have recognized evolution as a theory, I would simply and humbly ask, can we teach it as such and can we also consider teaching other theories of the origin of species? Like the theory that was believed in by every signer of the Declaration of Independence. Every signer of the Declaration of Independence believed that men and women were created and were endowed by that same Creator with certain unalienable rights. The Bible tells us that God created man in his own image, male and female. He created them. And I believe that, Mr. Speaker.

I believe that God created the known universe, the Earth and everything in it, including man. And I also believe that someday scientists will come to see that only the theory of intelligent design provides even a remotely rationale explanation for the known universe. But until that day comes, and I have no fear of science, I believe that the more we study the science, the more the truth of faith will become apparent. I would just humbly ask as new theories of evolution find their ways into the newspapers and into the textbooks, let us demand that educators around America teach evolution not as fact, but as theory, and an interesting theory to boot. But let us also bring into the minds of all of our children all of the theories about the unknowable that some bright day in the future through science and perhaps through faith we will find the truth from whence we come.

14TH INTERNATIONAL AIDS CONFERENCE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentlewoman from the Virgin Islands (Mrs. CHRISTENSEN) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mrs. CHRISTENSEN. Mr. Speaker, I too recently had the privilege of attending the 14th International AIDS Conference in Barcelona, Spain. I want to thank the House leadership for making it possible for me to join the gentlewoman from California (Ms. LEE). AIDS experts, activists and government representatives from all over the world assembled to share their invaluable knowledge and expertise in fighting the global HIV/AIDS pandemic and issuing a call to action.

This is a critically important conference happening at a very important time. UNAIDS and the World Health Organization recently released an updated report of where we are today. The most important thing to realize is that we are still at the beginning, the beginning of this terrible scourge. Yet there are already over 40 million people estimated to be living with HIV/AIDS around the world today and an estimated 28 million who have died. At this incipient stage of the pandemic, there are already 13.4 million children orphaned by this disease. More than a third of those living with HIV and AIDS are under the age of 25.

There are 5 million new infections each year, 6,000 new every day; and young people ages 15 to 24 account for half of all new infections. Even in developed nations such as the United States, young people continue to represent half of all new infections; and yet this is only the beginning. What lies ahead, the future course of this pandemic is in large measure in the hands of this body and our government.

Mr. Speaker, we are at a critical stage in this pandemic. A major crossroads where our decision to act or not to act, or not to act fully, will determine the course of our own and world history from this time forward.

Several things became increasingly clear even in the few days I was able to attend the conference. First, we have wasted a lot of time arguing over prevention versus treatment, and with that many lives have been lost and others changed forever. We have made dangerous and deadly assumptions that have kept life-saving treatments out of the hands of those who could otherwise have been saved. We have provided but token funding; and because we are falling short, the needed infrastructure is not in place to allow programs that began in homes, churches and community meeting places to expand across the infected countries so that they could save more lives and get on with the work of nation building.

We, the United States, have the power to make the difference, to dramatically change the course of this dreaded disease by meeting our commitment to the global trust fund and by exerting our influence on the other industrialized nations to meet theirs. Yet the United States, the richest country in the world, despite the fanfare surrounding recent increases in our contributions, ranks last in those who have pledged for the global trust fund.

To continue to fund this epidemic in drips and drabbles would be unconscionable because our delays and the delays of other nations have already caused it to spiral completely out of control on a global scale.

Today, at home, our ADAP program needs an additional $80 million and the minority AIDS initiative needs $450 million. Globally, 10 billion dollars is what is needed every year; and we must commit and act to contribute at least our full share, not over a period of time, but now.

It should be exceedingly clear that we cannot continue to fall short of providing the required level of funding. If we continue at the present level, we can anticipate another 45 million new infected persons within the next 20 years. It would also mean that there would be 20 million new children left without a mother or father, alone to grow up as orphans, denied of love and nurturing and probably education since the teachers too are among the dying. This portends a serious and ever-increasing threat to the national security of the most effected countries and, unless we think otherwise, also to ours.

Mr. Speaker, clearly the time for arguing over what must come first must be behind us. We must have treatment and prevention. We must find ways in this dire emergency to put life-saving medication within the reach of all who need it. Neither should research be pitted against prevention and treatment, because the need for vaccine, which may be just a few years ahead and which is where hope truly lies, must be given all the resources it needs to go forward. As we approach its availability, we must begin to work even now to avoid the gaps in access that we are still working to address in the case of medication.

Lastly, we can not tie the hands of health professionals, community organizations, and workers as they work on the front lines of this epidemic. Family planning funding or population funding provides much of the first line of defense. Continuing to impose the values of a minority of Americans on countries where there are people just fighting to live by denying them the basic staff and supplies is not befitting a country that is built on Christian values and principles.

I join my colleagues today to call on the leadership of this body and our President to provide the funding, to lift the gag, release the funding for all international family planning programs and provide the leadership which has always been our hallmark by making the full contribution to the global trust fund and influencing all of our allies to do the same.

WHERE'S THE MONEY?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. JEFF MILLER of Florida). Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. JONES) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. JONES of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take my time that I am allotted tonight to talk a little bit about the loss of $17.3 billion.

On June 6 of this year I wrote a letter to the Secretary of the Treasury, and the reason that I wrote this letter is because I had been back in North Carolina during the break and I was listening to a talk show and they were quoting from the New York Post, and I want to read the first two paragraphs of this article.

It says, May 28, 2002, Washington complains about deceptive corporate accounting, but the government last year misplaced an incredible $17.3 billion because of shoddy bookkeeping or worse. Again, the article says, Let me put that into numbers so that you can fully appreciate the amount. It is $17.3 billion, the price of a few dozen urban renewal projects, a nice size fleet of warships or about half the tax cut that everyone made such a fuss about last year.

In addition, the London Times also wrote an article on the fact that we in this Nation, that our accounting system for this government, that we have lost or misplaced $17.3 billion.

I share with my colleagues on both sides of the political aisle my frustration and disgust with what happened with Enron and also with WorldCom, but I do want to make the point, Mr. Speaker, that as sad as that is, and it is terribly sad, that the investors had a choice to make an investment. The taxpayers do not have a choice. They are mandated by law to pay their taxes.

So, therefore, we collect their taxes and yet in the year 2001, we have, and this is the term used, unreconciled transactions in the amount of $17.3 billion.

So this is about my third or fourth week of coming to the floor, and I actually on June 6, I wrote Secretary O'Neill a letter, and I am just going to read two paragraphs. I said, The report provides minimal data and information regarding these unreconciled transactions. Not only is the Federal Government missing $17.3 billion but there is no reason given for this loss. While I appreciate the Department of Treasury's statement, the identification and accurate reporting of these unreconciled transactions is a priority. The fact remains, the public nor the Congress has the information on how this loss occurred, what agencies were responsible for this unreconciled transactional; would these transactions eventually be reconciled; if so, what is the time line for this reconciliation; what agency or agencies will be responsible for the reconciliation; will this reconciliation be available to the public when completed.

Mr. Speaker, the reason I am down here on the floor, I realize the Secretary is a very busy man, but I did write this letter on June 6 of this year, and I have not received a response. I am going to give the Secretary the benefit of the doubt, that like many of us here in the Congress, we have wonderful assistants that sometimes get the mail and they go through the letters before we see them. So I am going to give him the benefit of the doubt. I did write on June 27 a letter to the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. BURTON), and I have asked that the oversight committee hold a hearing on this issue of where we have misplaced the $17.3 billion.

Again, Mr. Speaker, I will continue to come to the floor. Next week, I will have a chart that I will hold up before me as I speak, reminding the American people that we in Congress, on both sides of the political aisle, want to find out where that $17.3 billion of the taxpayers' money has gone, and if it has been misspent or misplaced, somebody needs to answer for it.

HONORING ANDREA FOX

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentlewoman from California (Ms. WOOLSEY) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Ms. WOOLSEY. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor Andrea Fox of San Rafael, California, a talented professional planner, community volunteer, athlete and breast cancer activist, and an inspiration to everyone who knew her.

Andrea Fox lost her life in a battle against breast cancer on July 2 at the age of 35, leaving a legacy of extraordinary courage and compassion. A beautiful young woman with incredible grace and dignity, Annie Fox was dedicated to finding a cure for breast cancer. Diagnosed with a particularly aggressive cancer in 1998, the former triathlete, who ate organically and exercised regularly, had none of the traditional risk factors for cancer.

Undergoing a lumpectomy, she continued her athletic training and stage IV cancer seemed to disappear. But in April 2000, the cancer came back, and pursuing every treatment she could find, including non-Western, nontraditional methods, Annie appeared to have beaten it back again.

Andrea focused her considerable energies on increasing public awareness and getting national attention for this serious epidemic of breast cancer in Marin County, joining the board of Marin Breast Cancer Watch. "Annie was one of our angels," said board president Roni Mentzer.

Whether lobbying in Sacramento for breast cancer research or educating the community about the dangerously high rates of cancer in Marin County, Annie made a difference. She made history.

Never daunted, she participated in athletic events such as the renowned Dipsea race and the human race, and she organized new events like the July 20, 2002 foot race from Mill Valley to the Mountain Theater on Mount Tamalpais to increase public knowledge and raise much-needed funds for research.

In October 2001, only 2 months after her engagement to long-time partner and soulmate Chris Stewart, the cancer came back and Annie mounted still another heroic campaign. Not one to seek sympathy, she was driven to passionately lead the fight for all women to find a cause for this insidious disease.

Despite increasing pain, she continued her work at the Marin Civic Center. "Annie was a special person," Stewart said, "bringing a wonderful happiness to all those who knew her. She was passionate about her work and about preserving the environment."

A woman of uncommon positive spirit, Andrea Fox lost her courageous battle with breast cancer surrounded by friends and family, leaving her devoted fiancé, her mother, her brother and a grieving community.

We are all more fortunate to have been graced by the presence of Andrea Fox, her beauty, her wisdom and her strength. Her love, resolve and remarkable will are cornerstones for the legacy of courage she has left so that we might continue the fight.

While Annie is gone, the spirit of this angel of our community will forever be with us.

STATUS REPORT ON CURRENT SPENDING LEVELS OF ON-BUDGET SPENDING AND REVENUES FOR FY 2003 AND THE 5-YEAR PERIOD FY 2003 THROUGH FY 2007

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Iowa (Mr. NUSSLE) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. NUSSLE. Mr. Speaker, I am transmitting a status report on the current levels of on-budget spending and revenues for fiscal year 2003 and for the five-year period of fiscal years 2003 through 2007. This report is necessary to facilitate the application of sections 302 and 311 of the Congressional Budget Act and section 301 of House Concurrent Resolution 353, which is currently in effect as a concurrent resolution on the budget in the House. This status report is current through July 11, 2002.

The term "current level" refers to the amounts of spending and revenues estimated for each fiscal year based on laws enacted or awaiting the President's signature.

The first table in the report compares the current levels of total budget authority, outlays, and revenues with the aggregate levels set forth by H. Con. Res. 353. This comparison is needed to enforce section 311(a) of the Budget Act, which creates a point of order against measures that would breach the budget resolution's aggregate levels. The table does not show budget authority and outlays for years after fiscal year 2003 because appropriations for those years have not yet been considered.

The second table compares the current levels of budget authority and outlays for discretionary action by each authorizing committee with the "section 302(a)" allocations made under H. Con. Res. 353 for fiscal year 2003 and fiscal years 2003 through 2007. "Discretionary action" refers to legislation enacted after the adoption of the budget resolution. A separate allocation for the Medicare program, as established under section 213(d) of the budget resolution, is shown for fiscal year 2003 and fiscal years 2003 through 2012. This comparison is needed to enforce section 302(f) of the Budget Act, which creates a point of order against measures that would breach the section 302(a) discretionary action allocation of new budget authority for the committee that reported the measure. It is also needed to implement section 311(b), which exempts committees that comply with their allocations from the point of order under section 311(a).

The third table compares the current levels of discretionary appropriations for fiscal year 2003 with the "section 302(b)" suballocations of discretionary budget authority and outlays among Appropriations subcommittees. The comparison is also needed to enforce section 302(f) of the Budget Act because the point of order under that section equally applies to measures that would breach the applicable section 302(b) suballocation.

The fourth table gives the current level for 2004 of accounts identified for advance appropriations under section 301 of H. Con. Res. 353 printed in the Congressional Record on May 22, 2002. This list is needed to enforce section 301 of the budget resolution, which creates a point of order against appropriation bills that contain advance appropriations that are: (i) not identified in the statement of managers or (ii) would cause the aggregate amount of such appropriations to exceed the level specified in the resolution.

n.a. = Not applicable because annual appropriations Acts for fiscal year 2003 through 2007 will not be considered until future sessions of Congress.

Budget Authority.—Enactment of measures providing new budget authority for FY 2003 in excess of $738,901,000,000 (if not already included in the current level estimate) would cause FY 2003 budget authority to exceed the appropriate level set by H. Con. Res. 353.

Outlays.—Enactment of measures providing new outlays for FY 2003 in excess of $462,441,000,000 (if not already included in the current level estimate) would cause FY 2003 outlays to exceed the appropriate level set by H. Con. Res. 353.

Revenues.—Enactment of measures that would result in revenue reduction for FY 2003 in excess of $4,431,000,000 (if not already included in the current level estimate) would cause revenues to fall below the appropriate level set by H. Con. Res. 353.

Enactment of measures resulting in revenue reduction for the period FY 2003 through 2007 in excess of $27,860,000,000 (if not already included in the current level estimate) would cause revenues to fall below the appropriate levels set by H. Con. Res. 353.

U.S. CONGRESS,
CONGRESSIONAL BUDGET OFFICE,
Washington, DC, July 12, 2002.

Hon. JIM NUSSLE,
Chairman, Committee on the Budget, House of Representatives, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR CHAIRMAN: The enclosed report shows the effects of Congressional action on the fiscal year 2003 budget and is current through July 11, 2002. This report is submitted under section 308(b) and in aid of section 311 of the Congressional Budget Act, as amended. This is my first letter for fiscal year 2003.

The estimates of budget authority, outlays, and revenues are consistent with the technical and economic assumptions of H. Con. Res. 353, the Concurrent Resolution on the Budget for Fiscal Year 2003. The budget resolution figures incorporate revisions submitted by the Committee on the Budget to the House to reflect funding for emergency requirements. These revisions are required by section 314 of the Congressional Budget Act, as amended.

Since the beginning of the second session of the 107th Congress, the Congress has cleared and the President has signed the following acts that changed budget authority and outlays for 2003: the Job Creation and Worker Assistance Act of 2003 (Public Law 107–147), the Farm Security and Rural Investment Act of 2002 (Public Law 107–171), the Public Health Security and Bioterrorism Preparedness and Response Act of 2002 (Public Law 107–188), and the Auction Reform Act of 2002 (Public Law 107–195). The effects of these new laws are identified in the enclosed table.

Sincerely,

BARRY B. ANDERSON
(For Dan L. Crippen, Director).

Enclosure.

Notes: P.L.—Public Law.

Section 314 of the Congressional Budget Act, as amended, requires that the House Budget Committee revise the budget resolution to reflect funding provided in bills reported by the House for emergency requirements. To date, the Budget Committee has increased the outlay allocation in the budget resolution by $10,714 million for this purpose. This amount is not included in the current level because the funding has not yet been enacted.

GLOBAL HIV, TUBERCULOSIS AND MALARIA

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentlewoman from California (Ms. SOLIS) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Ms. SOLIS. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to be here tonight, and I want to especially thank my good friend, the gentlewoman from California (Ms. LEE) and applaud her for her work in bringing us together here tonight to talk about the HIV pandemic. We have all been closely following the happenings this week at the 14th International AIDS Conference in Barcelona, Spain, and although it is exciting to hear about the new research breakthroughs and findings, it is also disheartening to hear about the sheer number of people who are infected and affected by this disease throughout the world.

More than 40 million people are living with HIV worldwide, and nearly 5 million of those people were diagnosed with HIV just last year alone. Ninety-six percent of those people living with HIV reside in developing countries, Third World countries and, for example, 1.5 million children and adults in Latin America alone are living with HIV. About 130,000 of these were diagnosed just last year.

Unfortunately, many HIV-positive individuals do not even know they have the deadly disease. We still have a long way to go to raise awareness about the disease and to ensure that Nations have the resources to implement proven prevention and treatment programs. We must do more to help our global neighbors combat this deadly disease.

UNAIDS has estimated that between $7 billion and $10 billion is needed each year to effectively respond to the global HIV/AIDS epidemic, but during this last fiscal year, the United States only contributed an estimated $1 billion to HIV and AIDS research. This includes a $200 million of contribution to the Global Fund to Fight AIDS, Tuberculosis and Malaria, and I think that is great, but we can do a lot better.

It is important to note that aid for global HIV effort is more than a moral responsibility. It is an economic and political necessity. Countries with AIDS face economic and social threats as governments struggle with the burden of trying to pay for HIV treatment and prevention, and often the populations most affected by HIV are the key to the economic stability of these nations.

As an example, these people are the ones between the age of 15 and 24 years old. They represent 42 percent of the newest HIV infections and make up about one-third of the global total of people living with AIDS. When these people face the threat of AIDS, their families and communities are devastated and, of course, HIV also has a particularly devastating impact on the youngest of our global population.

Worldwide, an estimated 14 million children under the age of 15 have lost one or both parents from AIDS. The stories of children who are orphaned by AIDS are heartbreaking to all of us. We cannot afford to ignore the AIDS crisis. We must commit ourselves to doing more, and I hope that this Congress can make that commitment, and I certainly urge and strongly urge the President of the United States to do the same.

CALLING FOR U.S. ACTION ON GLOBAL HIV AND AIDS PANDEMIC

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentlewoman from North Carolina (Mrs. CLAYTON) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mrs. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, it is with a heavy heart that I rise today to talk about the global AIDS pandemic and the catastrophic consequences of doing so little, too little to combat it here at home and around the world.

Here at home, HIV and AIDS is the number one killer of young black men. Here in the United States, where most are able to afford or have access to the standard of care for this disease, the instance of mortality has declined sharply, thanks to antiretroviral combination therapy. But make no mistake about it, HIV is a clever, still lethal virus, and the emphasis of these drugs is limited.

For many who have developed resistance to these drugs, the treatment is called salvage therapy. Think about the term, salvage therapy. It is shocking and sad that the two words are used in the same breath, but it is true.

The pharmaceutical industry, often with substantial government funding and research support from NIH and CDC, has made great strides, and it will have to do so again because many of the newest HIV cases are diagnosed resistant to one or more of the existing drugs. I call on the pharmaceutical industry to redouble its effort to consider spending much less on public relations and marketing and much more on research and development.

I would ask this Congress to take up and pass the legislation authored by the gentleman from New York (Mr. NADLER), who has long advocated for an anti-AIDS effort similar to the Manhattan Project.

Twenty million people have died from AIDS in the last two decades. According to the United Nations AIDS agency, 70 million more people could perish in the next 20 years.

Looking internationally, the picture is bleak and in danger of becoming a world destabilizing force, a holocaust due to woefully inadequate resources. The problem is not limited to African nations, which currently have the greatest share of the infection. Other developing countries, as well as Russia and China, are only just coming to grips with the severity of the HIV and AIDS epidemic.

The devastation of vast percentages of populations in African nations will create national security concerns for the United States and other nations within the near future unless we act now to arrest and eradicate this scourge.

Sub-Saharan Africa represents 77 percent of AIDS deaths, 70 percent of HIV-infected people and nearly 70 percent of all new infections and 90 percent of children infected with the virus.

These are truly, truly grim statistics.

We will not begin to change these numbers until we begin to invest as though HIV-AIDS were a profound threat to the public health worldwide and a threat to national security as well. We cannot afford to be penny-wise and pound-foolish. Eight thousand five hundred people die each day from AIDS, more than twice as many as perished on September 11. Another sobering statistic.

I want to thank my colleague, the gentlewoman from California, for her continuous leadership on the complex issues involved with HIV and AIDS. I share her concern that support for another $1 billion contribution by the United States to the Global Trust Fund is needed. We are obligated to do that. We are morally challenged to do that. We need to do that to support comprehensive prevention and treatment efforts, and, ultimately, to find a cure.

HIV/AIDS PANDEMIC

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentlewoman from Texas (Ms. EDDIE BERNICE JOHNSON) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Ms. EDDIE BERNICE JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I rise today with my colleagues to draw attention to the ongoing HIV/AIDS pandemic.

This week, the 16th Annual International AIDS Conference was held in Barcelona, Spain. The conference highlighted the fact that, contrary to previous beliefs, the global AIDS crisis has not peaked and is only getting worse. According to UNAIDS, 40 million people live with HIV/AIDS in the world today; 28.5 million of them are in sub-Saharan Africa. Three million of those infected are children younger than 15. Last year, five million people were newly infected with HIV, and three million died of AIDS.

In Botswana, almost 44 percent of pregnant women visiting clinics in urban areas are HIV positive. In several countries in West Africa—such as Burkina Faso and Cameroon—the adult prevalence rate surpassed 5 percent, a level that many experts agree precedes a larger scale epidemic. This devastating disease is erasing decades of development and cutting life expectancy by nearly half in the most affected areas.

These statistics are staggering, but they also obscure the human cost of the epidemic. Infected teachers pass away and are unable to transmit knowledge to the next generation. Business owners die and their enterprises die with them. The deaths of trained professionals, such as nurses, civil servants, and lawyers mean that their skills disappear from their country. By 2010, UNAIDS believes that twenty million children in sub-Saharan Africa will have lost at least one of their parents to AIDS. Mr. Speaker, entire societies are being destroyed by this terrible virus.

There are a few—very few—signs of hope. Some countries, such as Uganda, have stemmed the rate of infection and have averted a wider catastrophe. Other countries are finally acknowledging that HIV/AIDS poses a serious risk to their stability and are beginning to remove the stigma associated with the disease. Last week, the government of Nigeria announced that it had ordered free HIV/AIDS test for half a million of its citizens. And programs that seek to prevent the transmission of the virus from mothers to children are proving to be effective and are being implemented on a larger scale.

But Mr. Speaker, there is more that we as the sole superpower can do to stop the spread of this scourge that threatens the stability of many parts of the globe. We can increase assistance for education and prevention efforts and involve more sectors of societies in such prevention campaigns. We can continue to lower the cost of life-saving anti-retroviral drugs so that people in developing countries have the hope of treatment and are more willing to learn their HIV status. We can support the research and development of an effective, practical vaccine for HIV. And we can increase the United States' contributions for the Global Fund to Fight AIDS, Tuberculosis, and Malaria.

What we are doing simply is not enough to stem this global massacre. As a world leader, we must step up our efforts and contributions in this global struggle.

GLOBAL AIDS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentlewoman from California (Ms. WATERS) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Ms. WATERS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank my colleague, Congresswoman BARBARA LEE, for organizing today's Special Orders on Global AIDS.

Over the past 5 days, the 14th International AIDS Conference has been meeting in Barcelona, Spain. The statistics that have been reported at the Conference are devastating. More than one in five adults in seven sub-Saharan African countries are already infected with HIV. In Botswana, Lesotho, Swaziland and Zimbabwe, the rate is one in three.

The AIDS pandemic will cause a decline in life expectancy in 51 countries over the next two decades. This demographic effect is without precedent in modern times. Seven countries in sub-Saharan Africa now have average life expectancies of less than 40 years. By the end of this decade, 11 African countries will have life expectancies of less than 40 years. This is a level they have not experienced since the end of the 1800s. Sub-Saharan countries could lose 25 percent of their labor forces by 2002.

At the Conference, there was overwhelming support for a $7–10 billion annual commitment to fight global AIDS. This worldwide commitment should begin with a commitment of $2.5 billion from the United States in fiscal year 2003. Unfortunately, the countries that attended the recent G–8 Summit offered only empty promises of more development assistance for Africa. We need to do more.

On March 12, 2002, I sent a letter to the Chairman and Ranking Member of the House Budget Committee requesting a total of $2.5 billion in the fiscal year 2003 budget for bilateral and multilateral HIV/AIDS programs. Sixty-eight Members of Congress signed this letter, but our letter was ignored.

I call on this Congress to provide $2.5 billion for the fight against global AIDS in fiscal year 2003.

U.S. ROLE IN HIV-AIDS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Washington (Mr. McDERMOTT) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. McDERMOTT. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate my colleague, the gentlewoman from California (Ms. LEE) for bringing this issue and for taking the time to take the trip to Barcelona and go to the conference.

One of the striking things this morning was looking at the newspaper clips and finding that the Secretary of Health and Human Services of the United States of America was booed off the stage. When you look at that, you ask yourself, why is it that we, the strongest, the most wealthy, the most advanced, the most scientifically creative country in the world is booed off the stage of an international conference on a world plague?

I think that it is important for us to think about what role we in this country have played. We have not taken our rightful leadership. There has not been an international conference in the United States since this Congress passed the Helms-Burton amendment some years ago, which excluded from this country anybody who has AIDS. If you have AIDS, you are not supposed to be able to get into this country.

Now, the statement we made to the world with that particular amendment from this Congress was that somehow coming in here you are bringing something that is not already here. AIDS is in this country. As we have already heard from previous speakers, like my friend from North Carolina, it is the leading cause of death among young black men in this country, and it is a leading illness among Hispanic women in this country.

We in this country have a problem that we have not dealt with. This Congress has not put money into the kind of prevention and education programs that we ought to be doing for young people in this country. But that statement of the Helms-Burton amendment said to the world, you have got the problem, do not bring it over here. Clearly, this was not looking at our own position.

Now, the reason that conference in Barcelona was so important is that it is starting to talk about more and more advances of treatment and more and more complicated illnesses being found. There is all kinds of research there, but one must not lose sight of the fact that education and prevention still are the best hope for the world. We can have retroviral therapy, and we want that, and we should push the drug companies, and we should do everything possible, but administering those drugs and monitoring them, and it is as somebody described it, savage therapy. It is tough treatment. It is not an easy regimen. It has only so much effectiveness.

The real thing we have to get is people educated and aware of their own status. That is not expensive. If we would spend the money for the diagnostic tools that we have available and developed in this United States by USAID, we could make it possible for everyone to know their status. So at least they would know whether or not they were passing it on to their partner. But we do not put our money where our mouth is.

We say we want to do things for the world. We go and we make speeches, we put up a little bit of money, and then we double-count it so it looks like more. But the fact is, the United States is not putting up their fair share. Kofi Annan asked for an enormous contribution, said how much would be necessary, and the United States put up a pitiful amount.

Our contribution is something like 0.1 percent of our gross domestic product. The Norwegians, the Swedes, the Danes, the Dutch put up 0.2, 0.3 percent. Why can these little countries do that and we, the country with all the resources in the world, not put the money into the Global AIDS Fund that Kofi Annan has set up, or through our USAID? Or there are many ways in which we could put that money out there, but it requires a commitment.

Now, thanks to the work of people like the gentlewoman from California (Ms. LEE) and the gentlewoman from California (Ms. MILLENDER-MCDONALD) and other Members of the Congress, the devastation that is occurring in Africa is now much better understood than it was 10 years ago.

I remember in 1991 having lunch with the President of Zambia, Mr. Kaunda, who said, what will I do with 500,000 orphans? Today, we are dealing with those orphans worldwide. And if we do not do something about it, it will not be 500,000, it will be millions and millions and millions of orphans. We must do more.

HIV AND AIDS IN AFRICA

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. PAYNE) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, let me begin by commending the gentlewoman from California (Ms. LEE) for the outstanding work that she has done in her tireless efforts to bring to the attention of America, the Congress, and the world the need for us to do much more as relates to the HIV and AIDS pandemic; and also the gentlewoman from the Virgin Islands (Mrs. CHRISTENSEN), a physician, who also has been spearheading this. Let me commend them for attending the 14th International Conference on AIDS where the question of HIV and AIDS, of course, was the center of discussion.

It has been indicated that AIDS will kill at least 68 million people by 2020 unless rich nations invest far more in global prevention, says a report that was released last week. It is now clear to me that we have only seen the beginning of the worst epidemic in human history, says Peter Piot, Director of the joint United Nations program for HIV and AIDS, UNAIDS. He said that the disease will not only destabilize Africa but it will affect economic and political stability worldwide, particularly when the epidemic begins to peak in the most populated countries, such as China, India, and Russia.

The UNAIDS update, released ahead of the planned meeting that started on July 7 in Barcelona, indicates the number will grow to 40 million people worldwide, there has been a jump of 6 million cases, new cases, in 2 years, and that the infection rate continues to steadily rise in India, China, Russia, and Eastern Europe.

So we have a very, very serious situation. This terrorism is far more deadly than anything we could ever imagine. As we have indicated, the numbers are staggering, and AIDS is ripping through every continent destroying everything in its path. But let me concentrate a bit on Africa.

Botswana is currently experiencing the worst of the pandemic, with over 30 percent of its population affected. South Africa has also been hard hit. It is estimated that one out of three adults are infected. We have seen, to date, with President Mbeki, that there currently is really no national agenda to deal with the problem. We have seen statistics from Zimbabwe which say that 35 percent of that population has been infected with HIV and AIDS.

In many instances, the largest number of victims are from the public service sector: teachers, civil servants. So we can imagine what that will mean for most of the developed world when we are losing the leaders in those countries, with 14 percent of the teachers in South Africa infected. The rate is expected to increase to 30 percent in 10 years. So we have a very, very serious problem.

What we need to do, though, is to increase the amount of funds that are available. On the eve of the G8 meeting, President Bush announced a new initiative to address the pandemic through a pledge of an additional $500 million over 3 years to help prevent mother-to-child transmission in parts of Africa and the Caribbean. As little as a single dose of medication to mother and child at birth is reported to prevent transmission 50 percent of the time.

While this is a positive step, it does not address the problem itself. The disease many times is transmitted through sexual activity, but this initiative focuses on the least politically sensitive aspect of care and treatment. U.S. AIDS programs, through the Agency for International Development, focus on education and do not offer treatment. Fewer than 2 percent of the people living with AIDS in sub-Saharan Africa have access to antiretroviral drugs that are saving lives and improving the quality of life for those who are fortunate enough to receive them.

So focusing primarily on the innocent newborns, Bush's pledge leaves out women and children and communities and families. So I urge that we push and stress that the U.S. House of Representatives step up to the plate and offer additional funding.

BARCELONA CONFERENCE ON HIV-AIDS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Ohio (Mrs. JONES) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mrs. JONES of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I stand here, along with my colleagues, to commend the gentlewoman from California (Ms. LEE) for her leadership on the issue of the AIDS pandemic internationally. My colleague already read the declaration from the Barcelona conference. I am going to read the whereas clauses, because I think they set forth specifically the status of this AIDS pandemic internationally.

"Whereas every single day AIDS claims 8,500 lives, or the equivalent of three World Trade Center disasters daily;

Whereas by December 2001, 40 million people were living with HIV-AIDS, and by 2005 an estimated 100 million will be infected;

Whereas more than 40 million children, most of them in developing nations, will be orphaned by AIDS by 2010;

Whereas the World Health Organization this year has stated that the antiretroviral treatment is medically essential and has issued specific treatment guidelines, monitoring standards, and regimen recommendations;

Whereas those on treatment represent less than 2 percent of all those infected with HIV because such treatment is almost completely unavailable in developing nations;

Whereas, over 500 nongovernmental organizations globally have endorsed the Barcelona March for Life, which demands treatment access to at least 2 million people in the developing world by the time of the 2004 International Conference on AIDS in Bangkok;

Whereas these organizations represent AIDS activists from Africa, Asia and the Pacific Islands, Australia, Europe, Central and South America, and North America, therefore, we declare as activists pledged to life for all persons with HIV/AIDS that we are committed to the following goals, which the gentlewoman from California (Ms. LEE) has set forth.

Mr. Speaker, I had an opportunity to represent the gentlewoman from California (Ms. LEE) at World AIDS Day in Seattle 2 years ago during the WTO, and it was my pleasure to sit on her behalf. What was most interesting to me was the fact that an epidemiologist came and testified before the organization that there were hundreds and thousands of grandparents raising grandchildren because the parents of these children have been infected with the HIV/AIDS virus and, therefore, were unable to take care of their own children. So grandparents are taking care of as many as 25 of their grandchildren.

I think we need to pay attention to, as the United States of America, and when we start thinking about the companies and corporations that are doing business in these developing countries, that they will not have available to them the workers to do the work in these countries. We need to pay attention to the HIV/AIDS virus and pay attention not only in developing countries, but in our own Nation.

In the United States, 950,000 have been diagnosed with AIDS. African Americans make up 13 percent of the total U.S. population, but 54 percent of the new infections, 82 percent of the women who are newly infected with HIV/AIDS are African American and Latino.

The time is up for us to sit back and believe the HIV/AIDS virus is affecting people other than Americans and we can just think about it being in another country and not deal with the issue.

I stand here in support of the Barcelona Declaration. I stand here in support of it on behalf of all the people of the world, but particularly on behalf of the people of the 11th Congressional District of Ohio, and I salute the gentlewoman from California (Ms. LEE) for her work in this area.

PRESIDENT BUSH REFUSES TO SUPPORT REAL REFORM

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. KIRK). Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. BROWN) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, on Tuesday of this week, President Bush gave a major speech on his administration's plan to curb executive greed and corporate misgovernance in America.

Why was the President's speech so poorly received? Why did the markets drop by several hundred points in the 2 days following the speech? Why did so many Wall Street workers who attended the speech ask, How much of this speech was politics, and how much of it is about real change?

Because despite his calls for corporate America to clean its act, President Bush, at the behest of his corporate sponsors, his major contributors, his political base, his political friends, continues to oppose real reform on Capitol Hill. He has refused to support pension and accounting reform and takes millions of dollars from the securities and accounting professions. He will not support legislation to halt offshore tax avoidance, while receiving contributions from many major companies who have moved offshore to avoid paying those taxes. His budget severely underfunds the Securities and Exchange Commission.

To make matters worse, the President has pushed to turn the public program of Medicare over to the health insurance industry and to HMOs, again while receiving millions of dollars from that health industry for his campaign and for Republican campaigns in the House and Senate.

The President also advocates turning Social Security over to the same Wall Street banks that advised American investors to buy WorldCom, Enron, Adelphia, and Bristol-Myers, and all those others companies over the last few years, while their analysts have privately ridiculed these companies and investors.

More recently, the President endorsed a prescription drug plan that would be administered by the health insurance industry and would make no provision for dealing with the skyrocketing prices American seniors pay for prescription drugs, simply because the President and Republican leaders in this Congress do not want to upset the prescription drug industry.

Apparently, the President has been convinced by the brand-name drug industry that prices simply are not a problem. The plan would undercut seniors' purchasing power and enable the drug industry to sustain its outrageous drug prices by permitting the continued abuse and manipulation of drug patent laws. Three weeks ago in the Committee on Energy and Commerce as we were marking up the drug bill, the chairman notified us that we would be quitting at 5 p.m., even though we had 20 more hours of work to do, because all of the Republican Members trooped off to a $30 million fundraiser headlined by President Bush and Vice President CHENEY, and underwritten by the prescription drug industry.

The Chair of this fundraiser was the CEO of Glaxo, a British drug company which donated $250,000 to that event. The next day when we returned to business and our committee continued its markup on the prescription drug bill, amendment after amendment after amendment that was pro consumer was defeated because the drug companies wanted those amendments defeated.

The insurance industry has written legislation for the White House and the Republican leadership on Medicare privatization. The chemical industry has written legislation for the Republican leadership and the White House on environmental policy. The oil industry has written for Republican leadership and the White House legislation on energy. Wall Street has written for the White House and Republican leadership legislation on privatizing Social Security; and the prescription drug industry has written legislation dealing with pharmaceuticals for the White House and Republican leadership.

Coincidentally, Mr. Speaker, the most recent example of the President taking industry's side comes from today's headlines and also concerns prescription drugs. To avoid more questions about corporate accountability, President Bush left town today to give a speech in Minnesota on prescription drugs, and of course to headline a Republican fundraiser, his 34th this year, while we fight the war on terrorism.

The speech is timed to coincide with the release of an administration report, which conveniently concludes that the drug industry, America's most profitable industry year after year after year over the last 20 years, and an industry which enjoys the lowest tax rate of any industry year after year, his report concludes that the drug industry will be harmed by additional regulatory burdens, by lower prices imposed in part by this Congress.

Democrats are more concerned about the burden on seniors and their families who are being gouged by the predatory pricing of the pharmaceutical industry. That is why we support a direct prescription drug benefit with guaranteed coverage inside Medicare, not an insurance policy plan written by the drug industry.

Mr. Speaker, when will the administration do work in the public interest rather than on corporate interests?

CORPORATE ACCOUNTABILITY

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the Speaker's announced policy of January 3, 2001, the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. GREENWOOD) is recognized for 60 minutes as the designee of the majority leader.

Mr. GREENWOOD. Mr. Speaker, it is fitting that this new hour follows that last 5-minute presentation which was a perfectly classic example of partisan rhetoric aimed more to gain political favor than to shed light on an issue.

What we are going to do for the next hour is exactly the opposite, that is, my colleagues from the Committee on Energy and Commerce are going to talk about how we can, in bipartisan fashion, deal with the corporate malaise, the corporate scandals that have rocked our country to make sure that American investors are in better shape and enjoy more confidence in the market in the future.

We are here to talk about the best way to ensure corporate accountability, restore investor confidence in our markets, and build a 21st-century model of corporate governance that will give us an honest, open, transparent and efficient marketplace.

Before I am joined by my other colleagues, I want to describe the challenges we in Congress, the administration, and the overwhelming number of honest men and women who run our country's publicly traded companies face in this effort. I want to begin by placing our work in the larger context of the remarkable events that have occurred in the executive suites of some of America's largest corporations and the unsettling erosion in corporate accountability.

What we have been witness to this year with the collapse of WorldCom, Adelphia Corporation, Tyco International, ImClone, Enron, and Global Crossing is almost beyond comprehension. Certainly the markets themselves remain confused. The Standards & Poor stock index is down 17 percent since the year began, and as Business Week reported, "The inability of investors to distinguish honest companies from dishonest ones have caused them to sit on the sidelines. They are not buying."

More disturbing, however, is the behavior of overseas investors. They are getting out. They are selling off their holdings and driving down the dollar, which has slipped 9 percent against the Euro since February.

Clearly we need in bipartisan fashion to take every reasonable and prudent step to restore confidence in our markets. But in doing that, we need to remember that this decline in the character of corporate governance did not occur overnight. What we are now experiencing are the terrible costs of the 1990s corporate culture that placed too high a premium on the effort to do well at the expense of doing what is right.

Look at the evidence. While there will probably be nearly 250 corporate earnings restatements this year, the number has been mounting since the mid-1990s. For example, while there were 157 financial restatements last year, there were nearly 200 in 1999, and 100 in 1998. The cost to investors has been high. It is estimated in a just-released study that these restatements resulted in total market value losses of $31.2 billion in 2000, but 1998 and 1999 restatements which accounted for market value losses of roughly $18 billion and $24 billion respectively were disturbing as well.

This brings me to a remark of one of our witnesses, Professor Bala Dharan of Rice University. He made it 2 weeks ago at our first hearing on the reform of the Financial Standards Accounting Board. When I asked if perhaps the boards of directors of our largest companies were too busy at the shrimp bowl to pay attention to their duties, his reply was that they were either "snoring or ignoring."

Then he went on to make what I believe was a chilling and sobering observation. Commenting on the events that led to the unraveling of firms like WorldCom, Tyco, and Enron he said, "What is going on is that this is a case that involves an enormous number of people, and that is why I refer to them as financial engineering rather than just accounting. In order to do this, you also have to have the compliance of lawyers and investment bankers from the outside."

He then concluded, "We are witnessing a comprehensive approach to financial engineering that has been going on for the last 5-10 years."

This is what we are confronting in our markets and in too many executive suites, a complex web of self-dealing and private arrangements which were conceived in a culture poisoned by a downward spiral in corporate ethics and management character.

This spectacular explosion of the Enron supernova brought all this to light in a dramatic fashion, but it did not happen overnight, nor can we hope to restore the integrity of our markets and the character of the men and women who run America's publicly traded companies without a long-term commitment to comprehensive reform in a wide array of areas.

We believe that our Republican approach both in the Congress and the White House embraces nearly all of the steps needed to accomplish our goal. We also believe that there is broad agreement by the members of both parties on nearly all the critical issues that need to be addressed.

I would be remiss if I did not mention that there will be a temptation in this political year to play up partisan differences by Members on both sides of the aisle. The heated rhetoric of the past few days has convinced me, and no doubt many others, that there are some in this body who are more interested in acquiring political capital than in protecting the financial capital of America's investors.

As we are a political body, nobody should be surprised at this. But I am asking my colleagues to remember this: what we are dealing with is very large, and it is about so much more than money or crime or greed, although there has been plenty of that. We must restore investor confidence and market integrity in the most potent weapon in democracy's arsenal, free markets directed by a free people. This is a sobering task, and my hope is that each of us will bring the level of seriousness and cooperation to it that allows us to achieve our common goal.

Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from New Hampshire (Mr. BASS).

Mr. BASS. Mr. Speaker, I thank my friend from Pennsylvania for yielding to me.

I have to say in the 8 years I have been here, at no time has it been more painful for me to listen to partisan rhetoric associated with an issue than has been the case in this debate. The issue of corporate governance is not a Republican issue or a Democratic issue; it is not the fault of one administration or another. Certainly the problems arose and occurred during the previous administration, but I do not blame the previous administration, any more than I blame this administration.

We will not solve these problems, we will not address these problems proactively and effectively, by pointing fingers at each other and trying to accuse each other and make political hay out of a situation that demands calm, pragmatic and cooperative work on the part of everybody in this body to come up with a solution that restores confidence and creates growth and begins the process of growth again in our economy.

Mr. Speaker, I want to commend the work that has been done by our President and the speech that he made earlier this week in New York City. I want to pay particular attention to the exhaustive hearings that have been held by both the Subcommittee on Oversight and Investigations and the Subcommittee on Commerce, Trade, and Consumer Protection over the past 6 months.

Some of these hearings were held well before the crisis erupted to the point where it is today and may have in their content given regulators significant assistance and information and a prodding, quite honestly, to move forward and to make changes that may be way overdue.

Let me just say from the outset that the problem we face in corporate America is that there are a few very bad apples that have broken the law, and, as our distinguished committee chairman has said on a number of different occasions, these individuals should be prosecuted to the fullest extent of the law and they should be sent to jail, just like any other common criminal in this country. There is no difference between stealing money from investors and robbing a bank and stealing money or shoplifting in a store, except it is more serious, and they ought to go to jail for it.

Secondly, as I alluded to in the beginning of my comments, the solution to this problem should be bipartisan, bipartisan. The more we talk about whether it is a Republican's fault or a Democrat's fault, the harder it is going to be to come to a good, quick, effective solution, and the only people who are going to suffer from that are going to be consumers, investors, retirees, parents and families. So it is time we got together and cut out this partisan discussion.

Thirdly, I think we should direct regulators to move expeditiously to clean up the problems that we face and provide recommendations, which we have done in two pieces of legislation, one that was marked up by the Subcommittee on Commerce, Trade, and Consumer Protection yesterday and another one passed earlier by the committee.

But what we should not do, in my opinion, is put into statute what should be done by regulators, because when you place ideas into statute, they are there forever, effectively, for a long time, and conditions in the financial world change and you have to have flexibility to deal with problems as they arise and change things over time. We run the risk by forcing regulators to do things that we want or by passing laws that set regulations in statute that we will create problems in the economy that were unintended.

Thirdly, we should be very careful not to stifle capitalism in this country, that we should not stifle the ability of the hundreds of thousands of honest entrepreneurs in this country and hard-working Americans who are trying to make a go of it and are doing it honestly.

We do not want to turn every CPA in this country into a Federal bureaucrat. We do not want to have chief financial officers and executives answerable to the Federal Government instead of to their shareholders and to their boards of directors. We want to have a system of regulations in place that is flexible, accountable, transparent; no more, no less.

The fact is, we cannot in Congress legislate honesty. We never have and we never will. But we can work together as Republicans and Democrats to assure that the rule of law applies to all and that corporate America is held accountable. If we do this, we will get out of this problem quickly and we will look at a bright and prosperous period of economic growth in the years to come.

Mr. GREENWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman.

I yield to the chairman of the Committee on Energy and Commerce, the man who has been leading us in all of these investigations, the gentleman from Louisiana (Mr. TAUZIN).

Mr. TAUZIN. Mr. Speaker, let me first thank the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Chairman GREENWOOD) for the extraordinary job he has done and the members of the Subcommittee on Oversight and Investigations of the Committee on Energy and Commerce in the now many-month-long series of investigations beginning with the Enron scandal and the series of hearings we had, exposing what we found to be massive, in our opinion, fraud and massive cooking of the books at that corporation, and the subsequent investigations that are ongoing even today in the failure of other corporate managers and boards of directors which have led to much of what we see, the carnage on Wall Street and the loss of millions and billions of dollars, in fact, in investor funds over the last year or so.

Those hearings and those investigations began as we learned of the serious problems at Enron. Our investigative staff, as you know, began working throughout over the Christmas holidays gathering information that was available to us. We uncovered the fact that Arthur Andersen employees were shredding documents, and we had to have hearings in advance of our hearings on Enron to expose that problem. That, as you know, has led to a Federal indictment and now a conviction.

We had to literally examine thousands and thousands of documents, and in those documents we found indeed the whistleblower memo that told us an awful lot about what had happened and what was going on at Enron that caused it to collapse and why, in fact, all the special partnerships and the outside special entities that were created were designed, not for economic reasons, but simply to hide debts and inflate income.

We have seen that replicated now in a number of different cases that the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Chairman GREENWOOD) has already mentioned and that most of us know about now, including with the latest criminal investigation announced of Quest Communications and the collapse of WorldCom on the world stage.

The one thing that we have learned out of all of these hearings is that when greed is unchecked by the fear of discovery, a lot of bad things happen. I suppose it is a little bit like having a lot of great laws against bank robbing, but then leaving the doors open and telling the policeman to go home, and then being surprised when somebody robs the bank.

Banks get robbed and laws can be as strong as we want to make them, but we still need good policemen on the beat and still need good laws to ensure that vaults are secure at night and managers of banks take care of the money in the bank on behalf of those who put their trust and their confidence and money in those banks.

So is it true with corporate America. More and more Americans are invested now in publicly traded companies. More and more Americans, without even knowing it sometimes, have their pension funds invested in corporate America and public funds. More and more Americans directly now invest over the Internet and trade stocks every day in the stock market. More and more millions of Americans, in fact, are now owners of American corporations, instead of just the few who might have owned them in years past. So more and more millions of Americans have a great stake in the way corporate America behaves.

The notion that corporate governance in the cases of these massive failures has now let these Americans down and that workers have been put out of their jobs and that pension funds have been devastated, not simply at the companies where those workers have their pension funds, but all the pension funds around America that were invested in these companies, the notion that that is happening in America at a time when we should have indeed a strong protective system at the SEC, we should have indeed strong enforcement of our laws, we should have boards of directors who carefully are representing the interests of those millions of American owners of American corporations, the notion that that could happen has literally shaken, I think, American investor confidence in this system, and we need to restore it quickly.

Now let me say something, Mr. Speaker, that I think needs to get said. The reason why our committee has been so passionate about what we have found and what we are learning about the failures in corporate America is that our committee is the Committee on Interstate Commerce. It is the oldest committee in this Congress. It is the only one mentioned in the United States Constitution.

Our Committee on Interstate Commerce has been for many, many years the committee that literally bears responsibility for making sure that the commerce of our country is conducted properly, that the economy of our country is strong, that its laws and regulations and the institutions that guide our economy are well-funded and operate well. To the extent this is happening on our watch, we have a responsibility to fix what is wrong and to make better laws and regulations to make sure it does not happen again.

But it also offends us more than anyone else. As defenders of the free market system, as people who have fought to make sure that free enterprise and the capital markets were allowed to flourish in America, as opposed to those who would like to strangle them with regulations and socialize many conditions in this country, we are the most offended when bad players, when corporate criminals mess it up for all the good players in this country, the thousands upon thousands of small business corporations and medium-sized corporations and even the large corporations in this country who do it right.

That is why we become so offended when some in the accounting industry violate their trust with so-called aggressive accounting and cook the books in a sense in collaboration with crooked executives to make it look like the companies are doing better than they should be, and then to take off with the stock and to sell it, where the pension holders cannot sell their stock, or while the rest of America who is invested in the company finds out they have lost so much of their savings.

That is why we are so passionately angry about what has occurred and why our committee is so desperate to get all the facts and to understand what is wrong with this system and to fix it so it does not happen again.

We are engaged today at our committee level in an investigation of 13 companies who have seen similar failure like Enron, who have gone through some efforts to either hide debt or inflate income beyond that which really existed, some effort to convince investors they were doing a lot better than they really were, and have now collapsed, and we have seen the loss of millions and billions of dollars to those investors.

We are investigating those 13 companies right now and looking particularly at the boards of directors. We are very interested in knowing who those boards of directors were, how were they selected. Were they selected to represent the interests of the investors, or were they selected to represent the interests of the managers? Were they selected to be the CEO's men and women on the board of directors, or were they selected to represent the interests of the real owners of the corporation, the American investors who put their hard-earned dollars into a belief that those companies were being run properly?

It shocked us in the Enron hearings to see how little the boards of director members who testified before our committee knew about what was going on, how much they took at faith the statements of the executives in that company that everything was okay and they were doing everything correctly and they should not ask any hard questions. It shocked us at how little the audit committees had done in reviewing those special partnerships in those entities created to hide debts and inflate income. It shocked us to think that those people who were serving on some of the most prestigious boards in America knew so little about what was really going on in their corporations, or at least claimed to.

So we are going after that issue. We are going to find out what is happening in the boardrooms of America.

There is some good news out of all of this. The good news in the face of all this carnage is that changes are occurring in corporate boardrooms of America. CEOs no longer have a friendly visit to their boards, they tell me. Boards are beginning to ask tougher questions. CEOs are having to answer the tough, hard questions about how their accounting is done. Accounting firms are beginning to have to answer hard questions by the audit committees and the finance committees of boards across America.

There is a sea change going on. On Wall Street, reforms are being recommended to separate those analysts who work for the investment houses, to separate them so people are not putting lipstick on ugly pigs and selling them to us as beauty queens.

We are beginning to see that change is being made at the SEC as they are recommending independent boards, and legislation is moving through Congress as a result of our hearings. Not only did this House, but the Senate now is taking up bills to deal with some of the issues of accounting misuse and abuses and to deal with the issues of independence of accounting and independence of corporate governance.

Just this week our committee produced a bill to reform the accounting standards at the FASB, the board under our jurisdiction that sets accounting standards for America. In addition, a committee of this House passed through this Congress a bill to protect the pension funds of America to make sure that corporate executives could not sell their stock while the pensioners were stuck holding theirs. That legislation is now in the Senate waiting for final action.

The bottom line is, we are beginning to see legislative action. We are beginning to see executive action, as the President himself has now issued an executive order. We are beginning to see reforms in corporate boardrooms across America and at the Wall Street offices in New York and around the country. We are beginning to see turnaround.

So the outrage that we have seen in our committee, the ugly picture we have seen in our committee of corporate misbehavior, corporate criminal conduct, is at least beginning to produce some good results. People are beginning to take it seriously. As my friends have said, the Justice Department and others are beginning to look seriously at indictments and, hopefully, convictions of those corporate criminals, and reforms are literally in the wind.

So it will take a little while for investors to really feel like things have changed, that they can put their money into an American corporation again and really believe that the boards of directors are going to represent them instead of someone else; who can really believe that corporate managers are going to be looking after their interests and not their own golden parachutes. Things are changing. The result of these hearings, the result of our ongoing investigations, I think, are going to build a better market for this country and beginning to have the investor confidence that really means something again.

But if anyone in this country owes an obligation to protect this free market system and the capital markets and how they are structured, a free market by which this American economy has led the world, it is those of us in Congress who serve on the Committee on Energy and Commerce, who have been responsible for over 200 years of protecting the interstate commerce of this country. Our committee will continue to do its work, and we will do it in a bipartisan fashion. We will ask our friends on the other side of the aisle, as we have always done in our committee and who have joined us in our FASB reforms, to join us as we go through these reforms and investigations until all the truth is known and all the reforms are in. This is great work we do. I hope we do it well.

I want to commend the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. GREENWOOD) and the members of his Subcommittee on Oversight and Investigations for the incredible work they have done so far and, believe me, we have much work yet to do.

Mr. GREENWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I thank the chairman of the full committee for his remarkable remarks.

I recognize and yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Florida (Mr. STEARNS), the chairman of the Subcommittee on Commerce, Trade and Consumer Protection.

Mr. STEARNS. Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleague, and I am glad to be here and commend him for his special order on this issue.

As the gentleman knows, we marked up in the subcommittee that I chair H.R. 5058, which is the Financial Accounting Standards Board Act, which was introduced and passed by bipartisan support out of my subcommittee, which attempts to bring some of these financial accounting standards up-to-date and modern.

Mr. Speaker, in the roaring 1990s, investors were all caught in a spiral of ever-increasing optimism about the outlook for economic growth and stock valuations. It seemed the increase in stock valuations would never end, but of course, it did end. History teaches us they always do. In 2000, the so-called Internet bubble burst, and many investors lost money, not only monies invested in an Internet company, but also investments in leading, established blue chip companies. All of us remember when Alan Greenspan aptly characterized the phenomena of the stock market as "irrational exuberance." All of us had sort of a special sense of spiraling optimism.

Unfortunately, something that even Alan Greenspan did not predict has happened. In the wake of the roaring 1990s, we have witnessed corporate failures, bankruptcies, earnings restatements at unprecedented levels. Established companies that may have been overvalued were expected to weather these difficult times as business slowed, but they did not. The culture of the 1990s created something far worse: the race to up the earnings at all costs. Hype, hype, hype.

Of course, the first to fall was Enron. Amid its ashes, we discovered a host of problems involving corporate governance, audit independence, accounting fraud, and accounting standards. It would have been easier to accept the collapse of Enron were it an aberration. That no longer, of course, appears to be the case, given the recent news of Tyco, Global Crossing, and WorldCom, just to name a few. There is one every week.

These failures have put a strain on market recovery. Investors do not trust financial statements and that undermines their trust of all companies, good or bad. To stabilize our markets, accounting and corporate governance systems must be improved. We on the Committee on Commerce are committed to do that. This committee will do its part by acting on that which falls within our jurisdiction, which is accounting standards.

Now, the President just recently offered additional steps to stem the tide of investor mistrust of the capital markets. The markets themselves have taken significant steps in that direction, as seen in the new rules that have been proposed by the New York Stock Exchange. Of course, on the legislative front, the House has already passed legislation out of the Committee on Financial Services to reform the corporate governance and the audit system. The Senate, as we speak, is moving towards legislation as well.

Mr. Speaker, all of these efforts have primarily been focused on corporate and auditor governance. I believe changes to accounting standards and the process of setting those standards is another critical component of complete reform. I think that in addition to procedural reforms addressing governance issues, we must also carefully study and address substantive reform, which means that the content of the GAAP principles of accounting must be reexamined in light of Enron-like accounting scandals.

So that is why our bill, H.R. 5058, which passed out of my subcommittee, the Financial Accounting Standards Board Act, is just an important first step for improving the transparency and reliability of financial accounting.

Now, I thought I would review just briefly what the bill does. The bill does simply four main things. First, it gives FASB standards Federal recognition for the first time.

Second, it directs FASB to promulgate rules in areas in which our investigations have revealed current standards need improvement: specifically, off-balance sheet accounting, revenue recognition, and mark-to-market accounting.

Third, it requires FASB to promulgate a primary standard that must be used to ensure the application of accounting rules complies with principles of transparency and comprehensibility. This will go a long way to preventing the abuse of accounting standards like those that have been revealed in the oversight committee investigations, as the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. GREENWOOD) is involved in with Enron and Global Crossing.

Fourth and finally, the bill requires the GAO and FASB to report on FASB's compliance with the act and other issues relevant to the standard-setting process.

Again, Mr. Speaker, this was within our jurisdiction and this is the only thing that we could attack. I had an amendment in the bill which would also create a blue ribbon commission to study accounting standards and standard-setting processes. Specifically, the commission will evaluate FASB's 30-year record, evaluate the role of accounting standards, how they played in recent accounting failures, and explore alternative standard-setting mechanisms. This commission is not involved with governance. It is all involved with accounting standards and the standard-setting process. The commission, of course, will then present its findings and recommendations to our full committee.

I would like to just mention one of the witnesses that we had in our hearing dealing with financial accounting standards, a Professor Coffee, who is an expert; and he testified that "Reasonable people can disagree about the appropriate reforms that are needed to improve the regulation of the accounting profession and, not surprisingly, quite different proposals are currently pending in the House and Senate. But while reasonable, and sometimes even heated, disagreement is possible on many questions, there should be consensus on one fundamental point: our current substantive system of accounting principles, rule-based and hyper-technical, has shown itself to be vulnerable to exploitation by those willing to game the system."

So I think our passage of H.R. 5058 will move forward, and when it moves to the full committee in the House and hopefully, to the conference, we will be able to add, expand, and make it more comprehensive.

Mr. Speaker, I just wanted to conclude by bringing to the attention of my colleagues some comments from the former president of Arthur Andersen, who gave an editorial in the Wall Street Journal, Mr. Berardino. He was managing partner and CEO of Andersen and, of course, we know Andersen was found by the Justice Department to be guilty of shredding documents. But sometimes when you go to somebody who has seen the failure intimately they can sometimes bring to bear some very important points, so I would share with my colleagues some of his points.

He admits we need to rethink some of our accounting standards. Heaven knows, the Tax Code has gotten so complex. Likewise, our accounting standards have gotten complex and technical. Enron used sophisticated financing vehicles known as special purpose entities and other off-balance-sheet structures to hide debt, and they did it in such a way that no one could even understand them. In fact, the management's discussion and analysis in their profit and loss statement was 16 pages of footnotes. That was in its 2000 annual report.

Now, some of them, institutional investors as well as sophisticated investors, they all studied these 16 pages. Some sold short and made profits, but others who were also sophisticated analysts and fund managers said, well, I may be confused, but they went ahead and bought the shares anyway of Enron, and, of course, they lost money.

So if these people, institutional investors, fund managers, cannot understand these 16 pages of footnotes, how can the common investor understand them? We need to change that. We need to fix this problem. We cannot maintain trust in our capital markets with a financial reporting system that delivers volumes and volumes of complex information about what happened in the past, but leaves some investors with limited understanding of what is happening in the present and, more importantly, what is likely to occur in the future.

So the current financial reporting system has to be changed, and I would say to my colleagues, it was developed in the 1930s. It was developed for the Industrial Age. That was during times when assets were very tangible and everybody understood them. The investors who were involved at that time were very sophisticated, but they were few. There were no derivatives, the derivatives at Enron and all of these organizations used to hedge their bets; none of that was happening in the 1930s. There was no structured off-balance-sheet financing, no instant stock quotes or mutual funds, no First Call estimates and, of course, there was no Lou Dobbs on CNBC.

So we need to move quickly here in Congress to establish and rethink our accounting standards and to modernize them, because I think the public is right, they have lost credibility, and this can be changed.

The other area that I would like to discuss is the patchwork of regulatory environment we have here. We have an alphabet soup of institutions, from the American Institute of Certified Public Accountants to the Securities and Exchange Commission to the Auditing Standards Boards to the Emerging Issues Task Force to the Financial Accounting Standards Board, FASB, to the Public Oversight Board. All of these have important roles in our profession, in the accounting profession, of regulation, and they are made up of very smart, very diligent, competent people.

But the problem, I submit, is all of these alphabetized, this alphabet soup of institutions, there are too many of them, there are too many cross-purposes. Somehow we need to bring them all together so they are focused better. And so the process, the whole process of oversight of all of these different institutions I talked about, needs to be redesigned. I do not think we should eliminate them, but I think somehow we have to get them more flexible and more suitable for the modern world.

Lastly, I would say improving accountability across our capital system. Two years ago, scores of new-economy companies soared. They came out of nowhere. Of course, they had public offerings, initial public offerings, and they went up and they collapsed in dust. A lot of investors questioned their business model and prospects. The dot-com bubble cost investors trillions of dollars.

So I think if we come together in a bipartisan fashion and look how to increase the market's integrity, I think we can do it. I think some of the comments from the former managing partner and CEO of Andersen are some ideas we should think about, and I think some of the things we have started in my bill, H.R. 5058, that came out of my subcommittee, is another good start for reforming the accounting standards in this country. I look forward to continuing this process.

Mr. GREENWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Florida for his contributions in this Special Order, as well as his very excellent contributions in the leadership of his subcommittee.

Mr. Speaker, to underscore the importance of this issue, I would like to make a few more remarks.

America's place in the world, our leadership place in the world, is derived in many respects from the character of our people. It is derived in large measure from the nature and the beauty of our Constitution; but it is also derived in no small manner from our wealth, from our economy, the strength of our economy.

Our wealth as a Nation is the wealth that produced the military apparatus that fought wars and preserved democracy, that overcame Communism, that just liberated Afghanistan. Our wealth as a Nation is the wealth that is used to pull people from poverty into middle-class luxuries. Our wealth as a Nation is the wealth that enables us to find cures for diseases.

Also, our wealth is derived from our marketplace. Our wealth is derived because our marketplace is extraordinary in its ability to allow Americans to use their savings, and we are not good at savings in this country. Compared to the rest of the world, we save very little. But our marketplace is so efficient that the relatively meager savings of America can be used in the marketplace so that investment goes to the most productive companies and to the brightest ideas. That has enabled us to create a level of productivity that is unrivaled in the world, even by those nations that save far more money than we do, because we have this efficient market.

Now, the efficiency of that market is completely dependent upon the notion that investors can, on a regular basis, look at the independently audited financial statements of companies and make a decision about where they want to make their investments.

They want to make their investments in companies that are doing well, that are showing progress, that are showing profit, that are showing promise. They get to make a decision. They get to decide if they want to take a lot of risk in the marketplace. If they think they have analyzed a company and it has a promising product, if it has not made it yet, but may emerge and may solve a problem in this country; or they may take a high risk; or they may decide to take a little bit of risk and invest more modestly. But they do that based on their ability to trust the audited financial statements that these companies put out pursuant to law.

Now, what has happened? What has created this problem? What has created this problem is that the companies that we have seen in the headlines of America's newspapers are companies who refused to abide by the simple premise that they have a responsibility to issue audited financial statements that can be believed.

They have decided to do what is called "managing revenues," not just reporting their revenues, not just saying to their auditing committee, how much money did we make this year, what were our revenues, but saying to their auditors and accountants, how can we boost those revenues above what they really were? How can we phony up the numbers?

Why did they do this? They did this because, particularly in a market which was heavily invested and experiencing this bubble, they did it because they knew if their revenues began to fall, if they did not meet expectations, investors might take their money and go elsewhere. That is one reason they did it.

Another reason they did it in some of the worst cases is because corporate executives had stock options, and they knew if they could push the revenues up way beyond where they really were, if they could report revenues way beyond the actual revenues of the company, that the stock prices would follow, and then they could cash out, sell their stock at a very high price, and yet leave a company or leave the rest of the investors with a company that really was a phony company and a false company and a company that did not have the value that they had reported in their own financial statements.

This is not the first time that this kind of thing has happened in our history. We went through a savings and loan debacle which cost the American taxpayers and investors billions of dollars. We went through problems with junk bonds.

I was reading a book over the last week called "Financial Shenanigans." There was a story, a true story, about a man whose business was vegetable oil. He was bringing in, or allegedly bringing in, boatloads of vegetable oil to this repository. He would impress his investors with all of the vegetable oil that he had accumulated; and they were investing in this product, in this market that he had.

What they did not know was that he had a vast system of underground piping that pumped water into the tanks. The vegetable oil was just a thin veneer that sat on the top of the water. So the researchers and analysts and underwriters would come, and he would take the tops off of his tanks and say, Look how much vegetable oil I have, millions of gallons of vegetable oil, when in fact it was all a phony scheme.

This is not unlike what we have seen in the marketplace here. The kind of reforms that we take here in a bipartisan fashion are going to have to have the effect on this corporate greed that ultimately happened when they let the water out of the tanks on this gentleman's vegetable oil barrels.

Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Louisiana (Mr. TAUZIN), the chairman of the full committee.

Mr. TAUZIN. Mr. Speaker, I wanted to cite another example of how the gentleman's committee has worked on a problem in America that was awful, the Firestone tire failure problem just last year.

When the Subcommittee on Oversight and Investigations of the Committee on Energy and Commerce did the deep investigations of Firestone and followed through in the current cycle of Congress, through to a point where not only did Firestone itself begin to fix its own problems, but it is reestablishing its name, it is beginning to hire back its people, its products are beginning to find their way back into the marketplace with confidence again; and it has now realized that it cannot have a defective product out there.

It is doing much better today, I should report to the American public; but we in Congress, after those very extensive hearings, those awful hearings where we looked at so many people who had died on the highway because of the failure of tires on the traveling roads of our country, we in Congress acted swiftly. We amended for the first time in 30 years the highway safety laws of our country. NHTSA, our National Highway Safety Administration, was empowered to gather much more information about the safety of tires. It was empowered to do much deeper testing. It was empowered to require the companies to build better tires and to test them more efficiently and effectively.

It is now going through a rulemaking that is going to give all of us a chance to know, in the new automobiles we buy, just what our tire pressure looks like and whether or not we are losing tire pressure so our tires become more dangerous again. The work the Subcommittee on Oversight and Investigations of the Committee on Commerce produced is now producing stronger regulations, legislation which mandated stronger tires, safer automobiles; and therefore we are saving lives because of what we did with that extensive investigation and the subsequent legislation.

We are in the same position here, except the lives we are trying to save are the financial lives of the citizens of our country; the financial life of Wall Street, to try to restore its confidence again; the financial life of corporations that are suffering.

I bleed today for the workers at Enron. I bleed for the good accountants who worked for Arthur Andersen who have lost their jobs, who have seen their company come under such disastrous publicity and indictment and conviction for what occurred in the shredding. I bleed for the folks at WorldCom today, who are suffering through layoffs because their corporate executives participated in an apparent scheme to cook the books, and now their company is on the verge of bankruptcy.

We should bleed for those workers, but we also bleed for the American public who invested in those companies and who trusted them.

So what is the work product we have to come out with? We have to come out with a work product that literally strengthens our regulations, strengthens our laws, strengthens the enforcement agencies, but also does something the President called upon, and that is reinstills in corporate America, in those companies who may have lost their way, an understanding that character counts and that truth-telling is important. When they sign on the dotted line what the value of their company is, it should be a true value.

It says to accountants, when they go and audit the books, they ought to do a fair auditing. They ought not hide debt and inflate income, and they ought to give people the truth about how well their corporation is doing.

The good news is that most American corporations, the vast majority of American corporations, are not experiencing these problems. They have good boards and good managers, and the American public can have faith in them. But for those who have violated the trust of the American investors and the laws of our land, there are laws to punish them today, without us passing a single new law. There is justice coming, and there is reform in the wind.

Again, I think the Firestone story tells the truth about this situation. When we shed light on the problem honestly, faithfully, get all the facts on the table, put the witnesses in front of the American public, let them tell their stories, when we do that, Congress acts, the regulatory agencies act, and the American public responds.

Corporate America is waking up, I believe, to their responsibilities. I believe they are going to learn out of this horrible experience how important it is to keep, not just to build and to have, but to keep the trust of the folks who put their money into those corporations; who fund them, essentially, in their businesses through their investments and their pensions and 401(k)s, and the daily buying and selling of stock in our major markets.

Mr. Speaker, again I want to thank the gentleman for the great work that the Subcommittee on Oversight and Investigations has done. The Committee on Financial Services, led by the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. OXLEY), is doing a good job; and the combination of that and the work the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. BOEHNER) is doing in the Committee on Education and the Workforce on pension reform, I think that work together with what the Senate will do on the Sarbanes bill and what may happen yet on our FASB legislation and other bills that may make it through in terms of strengthening the criminal penalties against bad behavior.

All that work will complement, I hope, the good work that is going on in corporate America now to clean up their act, and the good work that is going on in the accounting field to make sure that aggressive accounting is a thing of the past and that honest accounting is the way of the future.

Mr. GREENWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Louisiana (Mr. TAUZIN), the chairman, for joining us again on this Special Order.

Mr. Speaker, there has been a fear, a nervousness, that if we continued these investigations, if we brought these corporate moguls before our Subcommittee on Oversight and Investigations, that somehow that would rock the markets and it would shake the confidence of the investors and make things worse instead of better.

We thought long and hard about that in our subcommittee, but we decided to continue on with our investigations and to continue to pursue these matters because we cannot, we cannot get the reforms that are required to protect the investor in this country until we lance the boil. We have to pick the scab. We have to open the wound, look at it, allow it to be seen by the American people, to show the American people that the United States Congress understands that this cannot stand and it will not stand, and that we will move to make reforms.

There are those who want to do too little. I think, frankly, some of the most conservative Members of the Congress want to do too little. They are afraid that these reforms are too much of an invasion into the private sector. They are not.

The marketplace of this country that drives our economy, that provides our wealth and provides our greatness, does not spring up like Topsy. It is the result of the laws and the regulations that we impose on the marketplace to keep it honest, to maintain its integrity so that investors can make smart decisions, so money can move efficiently to smart ideas and efficient companies and products, and make us wealthy as a result.

There are those who would do too much. There are those who would create a new Department of Auditing and make sure that every auditor in every company was a Federal employee. That would be bureaucratic and costly and invasive and wrong.

So we do have to find the middle way. We do have to find that which separates the most liberal Members of Congress from the most conservative Members of Congress, and I think we are well on our way.

I think the legislation that we passed in this House in April, the bill of the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. OXLEY), was the middle way. I think what Mr. SARBANES did yesterday with 100 percent support in the Senate represents the middle way. I think the President's bold remarks of 2 days ago were right on and illustrated the things that the executive branch particularly needs to do to bring us these reforms.

The only thing we need to worry about now is what we began this Special Order with, and that is the fear of partisanship. If Members of Congress and if political consultants and if leaders in political parties decide that, rather than solve this problem, rather than do the things that we need to do in a bipartisan fashion to restore confidence in the marketplace, they want to exploit this issue, create fear among the American people, try to cast false blame on particular individuals in the Congress or in the White House or elsewhere, then we will fail.

Then we will fail to meet our obligation to the American people and solve this problem. When this Congress, the 107th Congress of this country's history, concludes its work at the end of this year, I think two things must occur. We must be able, as we wish each other well for the holidays, clap each other on the back and say I think, number one, we have done everything we could in a bipartisan fashion to win the war on terrorism and provide security for America's people, and, secondly, we must say, as we leave this body for our Christmas holidays, I think that we have done everything we possibly could in bipartisan fashion to restore the confidence in the marketplace that this country so relies upon, that we did that in bipartisan fashion and that we can feel good about beginning a new year with growth in the economy and with security for the American people, not only physical security but economic security as well.

UNINSURED AMERICANS

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. REHBERG). Under the Speaker's announced policy of January 3, 2001, the gentlewoman from Wisconsin (Ms. BALDWIN) is recognized for 60 minutes as the designee of the minority leader.

Ms. BALDWIN. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the next hour on the floor to discuss with my colleagues a grave situation in our country, the issue of the uninsured. I would like to set the stage on this topic before calling on a number of my colleagues who are equally committed and tenacious about fighting to bring this issue back to the forefront.

We are facing an extremely serious health crisis. I listen carefully to those that I represent in Congress. I hear from constituents every day who have lost their health insurance and have nowhere to turn. I hear from mothers and fathers who are afraid that their healthcare premiums will become so expensive that they simply cannot afford them any more. I hear from small business owners who are facing skyrocketing premium increases and may not be able to offer health care coverage to their employees any more.

I believe that it is time once again to bring the issue of the uninsured and health care for all back to this House floor. I believe we need to act soon if we are going to save those families teetering on the edge of losing their health insurance, and I believe that it is unconscionable that in our country, the richest country on earth, that almost 40 million Americans have no health care coverage at all.

During 1999, about 15 percent of our population was uninsured. The Government defines being uninsured as being uninsured for a full year, but almost three out of every 10 Americans, more than 70 million people, were uninsured for at least a month over a 3-year period between 1993 and 1996. Although the uninsured population decreased slightly in 1999, the long-term trend has been growing of uninsured people. Without substantial restructuring of the opportunities for coverage, this trend is likely to continue. It is clear that the time to take action to solve this crisis is now.

I am sure many are aware of the recent reports issued by the Institute of Medicine of the National Academy of Sciences regarding the uninsured in America. The Institute of Medicine is in the process of conducting a 3-year study on the uninsured. It has two major objectives. The first is that the study will assess and consolidate evidence about the health and economic consequences of being uninsured for persons without health insurance and their families, for health care systems and institutions, and for communities as a whole.

Secondly, the study will raise awareness and improve understanding for the public and the policymakers about the magnitude and nature of the consequences of lacking health insurance.

The 16-member committee on the consequences of the uninsured has already issued two reports and plans to issue four more by September of next year. The first report, Coverage Matters: Insurance and Health Care, concluded, and I should mention not surprisingly, that the high cost of health insurance along with public policies prevent tens of millions of Americans from obtaining health care coverage. The Institute on Medicine report also found that there are persistent misperceptions about the uninsured that present obstacles to addressing the issue constructively.

I would like to talk briefly about some of these misconceptions. First, many people may think that the number of uninsured in the United States is not large and that it might not have increased in the recent years. But despite a very modest dip at the end of the 1990s and in 2000 following an obviously extended period of economic prosperity and growth and low unemployment in our country, the number of uninsured people has grown over the long term.

According to the Institute of Medicine report, the number of uninsured people is greater than the combined population of Texas, Florida and Connecticut.

In 1992 Congress debated health care reform and a plan that would guarantee every American the health care they needed. That vision was never realized. And now we have more Americans who are uninsured than we did back in 1992.

The second misperception is that it is assumed that the people who are uninsured do not live in families that work. This is incorrect. According to the Institute on Medicine study, 80 percent of the uninsured children and adults live in working families. Included among the uninsured are parents who are working two, sometimes three, jobs just to make ends meet. But increasingly they work in sectors of our economy like small business, family farms, the service sector or maybe part-time employment that do not offer health insurance coverage to their employees or that require them to pay so much of it that they simply cannot afford it and do not take the coverage. Even families with two full-time wage earners have a one-in-ten chance of being uninsured.

The third myth is that it is improper to assume that the uninsured get adequate medical attention. A report by the Kaiser Commission on Medicaid and the Uninsured found that the uninsured receive less preventative care and are diagnosed at more advanced stages of diseases. The uninsured are less likely to see a doctor within any given year and have fewer visits annually, and they are less likely to have a regular source of medical care. Uninsured persons receive fewer preventative services and less care for chronic conditions than those who have health insurance. This ultimately adds to the costs because in many cases their medical conditions become much more serious, producing adverse outcomes that will need extensive follow-up care.

It is clear that the costs associated with the delay of care for the uninsured could be prevented if they had access to affordable coverage.

Another problem we are facing in our system is that the cost of health care services and insurance premiums have been steadily increasing and more employers and consumers are viewing coverage as prohibitively expensive. A gap in the ability to purchase health care coverage has been growing ever since the growth in the cost of health insurance has outpaced real income. This gap has added almost 1 million people to the ranks of the uninsured every year.

Now many employers absorbed premium increases during the economic boom of the 1990s, but they cannot be expected to continue this practice in our current economy. Many lower wage workers pass up on coverage because they cannot afford their share of the premium. On average, workers pay 14 percent of the costs of individual coverage and 27 percent of family coverage. Over the past 20 years, private sector employers have become less likely to cover part-time workers or new employees. And small businesses are faced with hurdles such as higher group premium rates and frequently do not offer coverage these days to their employees.

A business owner in my district could no longer provide health insurance to her employees because of the high costs of the premiums. Nancy Potter owned a bakery in New Glaris, Wisconsin for 25 years. Her health insurer left the region, and when she sought coverage from other companies, the quotes she received represented a 180 percent increase in premiums. She would have had to pay an additional $50,000 each year to continue offering coverage. Unfortunately, she had to tell her 20 employees that she could no longer provide health insurance to them and their families. Even more devastating to her was the knowledge that one of her employees had recently been diagnosed with cancer and was undergoing treatment. This tragic state of affairs is not isolated and it is simply wrong.

On that note I would like to recognize one of my colleagues who has been a champion of the uninsured and of health care for all. We have worked very closely together and it is my privilege to yield to the gentlewoman from California (Ms. LEE).

Ms. LEE. Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the gentlewoman from Wisconsin (Ms. BALDWIN) for her leadership on health issues as well as on each and every issue that affects Americans on a daily basis, and also I want to just thank the gentlewoman for organizing this special order, because oftentimes health care remains under the radar, and I thank the gentlewoman for raising the level of awareness of this issue for all Americans, because for the wealthiest country in the world which claims liberty and justice for all, the fact that there are 44 million people without health insurance is really a shame and disgrace.

The fact that the bulk of the uninsured are low income and people of color is really no surprise. Although our Nation has a record low unemployment level, we still have one in six Americans who do not have health insurance. How fair and how just is that? Most Americans receive health insurance through their employers, but millions lack coverage because their employers do not offer insurance or simply cannot afford to pay it. Medicaid covers 40 million low income individuals, but millions more do not meet its limiting income and eligibility requirements because of really, quite frankly, savage welfare reform restrictions, leaving the most vulnerable uninsured.

Although State Children's Health Insurance Program is supposed to cover all low income children, 16 million low income children still remain uninsured. Who are the uninsured? The uninsured are predominantly workers and their families, low income people, and oftentimes people of color. Fifty-six percent of the uninsured population is low income and nearly one in five of the uninsured are low income children.

Although people of color comprise only 34 percent of the population, over half of the Nation's uninsured are minorities. Twenty percent of those uninsured are African-Americans and 34 percent are Hispanic. In my own district we have one of the only organizations studying the disparities in the minority community. The Ethnic Health Institute is a community service of Summit Medical Center engaged in coordinating health education, research, health provider training and community outreach and awareness for the entire community with a very special focus on the underserved and community of color.

We must correct this imbalance in access which results in racial and ethnic disparities in care, and I am very proud that the Ethnic Health Institute is a wonderful example of an organization committed to this goal. People of color and the underserved bear a real disproportionate burden of mortality and morbidity rates across a wide range of health conditions. Mortality is a cruel indicator of health status and demonstrates how critical these disparities are for minorities. For African-Americans and Latinos, these disparities begin early in life and they persist. African-American infant mortality rates are more than double those of whites, 14 percent versus 6 percent; and the rate for Latinos is 9 percent compared to 6 percent for whites. The death rate for African-Americans is 55 percent higher for whites, with AIDS being the sixth leading cause of death for African American males.

I could go on and on with the multitude of statistics that clearly illustrates the stark disparities that exist for people of color. Yet the point remains that these disparities are the result of a lack of insurance, lack of access to health care, and, of course, still we are dealing with the economic divide.

Health insurance is important because it impacts health outcomes. Nearly 40 percent of the uninsured have no regular source of health care and use emergency care more due to avoiding higher costs of regular business. This situation creates an ongoing cycle of adults and children skipping routine checkups for common conditions, recommended tests, and treatments because of the financial burden resulting in serious illnesses that are, of course, more costly. The uninsured are more likely than those with insurance to be hospitalized for conditions that could have been avoided such as the flu.

I would ask my colleagues, are the people dying who have no access to health care, are they really important to you? Is it because mainly that they are maybe children or poorer people of color or the working class that really blinds us all to their importance?

I do not believe that this is the message that any of us want to send, but that is the message that is being communicated.

The message that we must have then, however, is that universal health care, which provides high quality health care, should be provided without discrimination.

This challenges us as Americans to take another look at the fundamental role of government. We must do this if we are ever to achieve an equitable health care system, and I am totally convinced that sooner or later we must really come to grips with the fact that as long as the profit motive is central to our own health care system, and as long as health care remains big business, an industry, we will never have equal access to health care.

Universal health care is the only way we can provide equal access and fairness to our health care system. The uninsured are suffering, and if we do not acknowledge health care, sooner or later, as a basic human right, our society's most vulnerable will continue to grow.

Our Nation is the only industrialized nation that does not have a health insurance program for everyone and our health care system is truly failing. So we should make health care accessible. We should make health care affordable. We should really make health care a guarantee, and I want to once again thank my colleague from Wisconsin for continuing to beat the drum on health care and for calling us all down here tonight so we can ensure that our country knows that there are many Members of Congress who are going to insist that this be part of our legislative agenda.

Ms. BALDWIN. Mr. Speaker, I would next like to recognize a physician Member of this House of Representatives, and a distinguished member of the Committee on Ways and Means, and a champion for universal health care, the gentleman from Washington (Mr. McDERMOTT).

Mr. McDERMOTT. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentlewoman very much for yielding to me. I am pleased that she has called this special order today. Of the lady from Wisconsin, from the day she ran, do not, they told her, do not run on universal health care. She ran on it, anyway, and she is here. That tells us something about what is out there in this country. The American people know that there is really no excuse for what is going on in this country, and my colleague from California (Ms. LEE) just gave us the statistics about the unfairness and the inadequacy of our health care system in this country.

I think the fact that we are the richest country in the world and that 72 percent of the uninsured are from a family where somebody works full time, and, in fact, 13 million or 16 percent are in a family where two people work full-time and still do not have health insurance is simply a disgrace to this country.

I know there are people out there who say, well, it is going to cost so much money and we cannot handle it. Let me tell my colleagues what the real facts are, because a lot of what we will hear and see in advertisements is simply misleading.

Today, the United States spends $1.2 trillion on health care. That averages out to $4,350 a person. The average in the next 29 industrialized countries in the world, Sweden, Norway, France, Japan, Australia and so forth and so on, the average is $1,760. We spend $4,350. They spend an average of $1,760.

Switzerland, which is the next one below us in amount of expenditure, only spends $2,853, about 60 percent of what we spend, and none of those people have the problem we have in the United States that a person can be bankrupted by an illness or an injury at any time because we do not have health assurance of insurance.

We take care of people, oh, yes, we do. We take care of them in the emergency room, in the absolutely most inefficient way, when they have had a major catastrophe, no prevention, in an attempt to deal with it when it is a small problem. But when it is a catastrophe, they come into the emergency room. We see the strokes, the heart attacks. We see all of the things that could have been dealt with by medication for blood pressure or heart medication, a variety of other things.

Low birthweight children in this country. We spend a quarter of a million dollars on a child that is born at two or three pounds. If we had taken care of that young woman during the time the child was being developed, we would have had a normal child without the expenditure of a quarter of a million dollars. We could have done it for nickels and dimes.

So it is simply not that we do not have enough money in our health care system, it is that we spend it inefficiently and very wastefully.

A recent article in Health Affairs highlighted that most of the money for health care comes from, where do my colleagues suppose? Government spending. Either through direct expenditures of Medicare and Medicaid, but also through public employees' health benefits and tax breaks offered to businesses that give insurance.

That means that $720 billion out of the $1.2 trillion that we spend every year, remember that, $1.2 trillion, and $720 billion of it is tax-financed. That is about 60 percent. More than half is presently paid for by the government. $213 billion comes from Medicare. That is about 18 percent of the spending. $186 billion is for Medicaid, which is 15 percent of the spending. $65 billion is spent on public employee benefits between Federal and State and local people, and then there is $110 billion worth of tax subsidies to businesses to provide health insurance for those companies that do it for their employees. If they do not, of course they do not get the benefit.

When we take that, that is over $2,600 that we spend on average in this country from the government. The average, remember, in industrialized countries is only $1,760. So we already spend more money in our country from the government than they spend in any country in the world.

So then the question we ask ourselves is, why, if we spend that much money and we still have forty some million people without insurance, how can this be? What is going on? We have the best technology in the world, the best physician training. Doctors come from all over the world to train here. We have the most advanced services in the world. Those are good things. So we have good things for our money, and then what do we pay for it? Well, we pay for the profit of a myriad of health care companies and two groups, I think, deserve special attention.

One is insurance companies. Every time there is an attempt to deal with a health insurance program for the country, we suddenly see the insurance companies throwing millions of dollars out there as they did when Mrs. CLINTON in 1993 and 1994 tried, they spent $110 million advertising at the American people that you do not want the government to get into your health care. We are in health care. We are paying 60 percent of the bill right now.

The insurance companies get 15 percent or more for their overhead costs. Medicare, for example, the government program, gets 1 percent, 1 percent; insurance companies, 15 percent. So right there we have got heaps of dough. We have got way more than $100 billion right there that we waste on insurance company overheads, and then they have to take away a profit, of course. So we have got all kinds of ways.

The argument that they help control costs may have worked in the mid-1990s, but they do not hold up today. Premiums have increased 50 percent in the last 5 years and are projected to go up as much as 15 to 20 percent per year in the foreseeable future. So the insurance companies, everybody says, well, oh, they are so efficient and they are so creative and the private sector can do all this. They are not doing a thing. It is totally out of control.

The second place that we spend more money than we need to is with drug companies. They are the single most profitable industry in this country. We have seen recently two companies that have had to go back and kind of recalculate because they were playing with the numbers a little bit, but the profit margin as an industry has been 16 percent. If we put money into the drug industry, we can get 16 percent a year. That has been the average over the last few years. On revenues of about $200 billion a year, they make money. Do not ever listen to their crying.

They are right out there. They had a fundraiser for the Republicans the other day. The president of a British company, his pharmaceutical company came in, laid down a quarter of a million dollars, and they said, well, if you are going to lay down that much, why do you not be chairman. They raised $30 million. If my colleagues do not think that affects what goes on the floor of this House, they do not understand how this place works.

The argument that they need these profits to continue research into new drugs is very questionable, not when so much money for the development of the drugs has been done by the Federal Government itself through the National Institutes of Health and the government pays for the trials and everything else.

They spend three times as much on marketing as they do on research and development. Every time a person opens the newspaper and there is a full-page ad that says if you feel this in your stomach, you should go to your doctor and get X, Y, Z drug, that is where that advertising is going. They are direct-advertising to the American people. The people then go to the doctor and say, well, I should have that drug I saw in the newspaper, it is right there, here is the ad, doctor.

That costs us money. Whether that is necessary or not, they are doing advertising just like selling cars and Coca-Cola and new clothes and whatever. They are just like every other company and they are using three times as much. Do not forget that, three times as much for advertising as they spend on research. They always say, well, if we clamp down on our profits, we will not have any money to develop any more new magic drugs. Nonsense. They are taking us for a ride.

I think it is time, and I think the gentlewoman from Wisconsin (Ms. BALDWIN) is absolutely correct in bringing up the issue again of a universal health care plan for this country. We should have health insurance that can never be taken away. We can do it a lot of different ways.

I have one plan that I have been pushing for 10 years, but there are other ways to do it. Why do we not say in Medicare, if you are 50 years old, between 50 and 65, you can buy into Medicare. If you get laid off by your company or you get an early out for retirement or whatever, you can buy into Medicare. It is a good deal and you have guaranteed coverage. My brother is, I forget, 56 or 57. He is at Boeing. Boeing's laid off 30,000 people. My brother's 57 years old and he is going to go out and he is going to find insurance as an individual? How? Do my colleagues know how much it costs? Most people cannot afford it even when they are working to buy an individual policy. That is why we buy group policies, but to do it on an individual policy, on our own, when a person is unemployed, is simply not possible.

So why not let my brother buy into Social Security early or buy into Medicare early? Or we could say, let us start with all the children and we could work our way up. There are many ways to do it. It is simply what is lacking in this House is the will to do it.

We know it can be done. It is done all over the world, and yet when it comes to this issue, we will not look over and see how the Germans do it or how the Canadians do it or how the British do it or how the Australians do it or the Japanese. We say no, our way is the best way, and we have got 44 million people without health insurance and we have got people bankrupted all the time. It is a disgrace, and we must begin to work on this, and I commend the gentlewoman for bringing this issue to the floor.

Ms. BALDWIN. Mr. Speaker, next I would like to recognize the gentlewoman from Indiana (Ms. CARSON), a colleague who has been a tremendous champion on advocating for the uninsured and advocating for universal health care.

Ms. CARSON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, let me first and foremost enthusiastically and with a great deal of appreciation commend the gentlewoman from Wisconsin (Ms. BALDWIN) for her leadership in bringing this issue to the fore, to the United States House of Representatives, and certainly to the United States of America.

It is unconscionable, I believe, that there are over 40 million people in the country who are living without insurance. That is over 14 percent of the population of the most advanced nation of the world.

I am a Member of the Democratic Party. This House represents, for the most part, a two-party system, and of course, we have a list of sundry Independents and Libertarians, et cetera, but it is like the mathematical axiom that the whole equals the sum of its parts, and there is not a Member in this House who does not have universal health care.

We pay a pittance of a fee on an annual basis and we have top-drawer medical care, emergency care, we get all kinds of physical examinations, and it is just wonderful. So if anyone wonders why we stay here sometimes until 2 a.m. in the morning debating issues that have nothing to do with anything, it is probably because we have good insurance and we do not want to walk off and leave it. I am just going to be perfectly honest about it.

I am very concerned about all the women in this country. We had welfare reform, which was needed in a lot of ways, but we threw a lot of women out into the job market with no insurance. They have children who are uninsured.

I come from the State of Indiana, where there are countless people who are in dire need. Something happens unexpectedly and they need emergency medical attention. Our urban hospitals are on the brink of bankruptcy right now. We have one large caregiver of the indigent, a hospital, who can dispatch an ambulance out to an emergency situation. When the ambulance returns, if that person is uninsured, oftentimes that person gets turned away at the emergency room even though they are in dire need of emergency medical care.

In Indiana, there are over 625,000 non-elderly people without access to insurance. I say nonelderly because those over the age of 65 have access to medical care through Medicare, no matter what their income level might be. One constituent wrote to me saying that in the span of 18 months her husband died, she broke her ankle and foot in two different accidents, and she could no longer walk. She is losing her job. She has not been able to find a new job. Her preteen child was diagnosed as having a moderate mental handicap. She cannot get insurance. Her bills are piling up. If it were not for her church, she would not be able to even feed her daughter and herself.

These are the kind of people that represent a major segment of the population, not just in my district of Indianapolis or in my State of Indiana, but in the United States as a whole.

We have corporate greed that has knocked so many people out of work. WorldCom, 17,000 people, boom, unemployed. People who wanted to work, who enjoyed going to work and being responsible, American citizens who paid their taxes, abruptly, suddenly, without notice, unemployed and uninsured.

The number of young people under the age of 18 who are uninsured in Indiana is like 167,600 people. Now, how can we expect these young people to be productive members of society if, in fact, they have a medical condition that could be reversed with proper medical care and yet they are uninsured?

Now, there is a tendency of some to accuse doctors of being insensitive, and it is true that a lot of doctors are no longer interested in the medical field because they cannot even get reimbursed for the expenses that they apply to a patient. We have to be realistic about what is right in terms of how we reimburse medical providers.

This country has a major, acute shortage of nurses, and we do not have the wherewithal to insist and provide opportunities for people to go to nursing school if they do not have the resources.

We in this House last week raised the debt ceiling for some reason. I am still trying to figure out why Congress voted to raise the national debt ceiling. For what? It certainly was not for we the people of the United States.

According to the nonpartisan Congressional Research Service, people who lack health insurance differ totally from the population as a whole. They are more likely to be young adults, poor, Hispanic, other minority cultures, or employees in small firms. More than 17 percent of the uninsured were 19 to 24 years of age, even though this age group represents less than 9 percent of the under-65 population.

For the first time since 1994, when the Congressional Research Service first began this annual analysis, the percentage of the uninsured who were white fell below 50 percent. Also for the first time since 1994, more than three-quarters of the uninsured were above the poverty level. The poor accounted for 12 percent of the under-65 population, but represented 24 percent of the uninsured.

About 76 percent of the uninsured were native citizens, and 27 percent worked or were dependents of workers in small firms. More than half were full-time, full-year workers or their dependents; 27 percent had less than full-time attachment to the labor force; and 17 percent had no labor force ties at all.

We need to ensure that even women who have cardiovascular disease, even though they may not be insured, can have access to quality medical care. I stand here today as an example of the benefits of quality medical care when a woman like me finds herself confronted with a very critical and serious medical situation diagnosed as a cardiovascular problem. More women than we can count are dying every year with cardiovascular disease and heart attacks. Many of them are uninsured, and they avoid going to see about how they are feeling and why they are having the symptoms because they cannot afford it.

A lot of people who work lost their insurance and are now losing their assets because of the spiraling costs of medical insurance, which wiped them out. They do not have any way to compensate for their medical needs. We need to make sure that the uninsured have access to health care, that it is affordable, and that it covers all the people all of the time within this great country of ours.

When I first came to Congress, I introduced legislation calling for universal health care. I believe that this country of ours, this superpower nation, can actually access the resources when it needs the resources. It makes it happen. And certainly one of the priorities that this Congress should have is to ensure that we the people, all of the people, regardless of who they are, where they are, how they look and how they do not look have access to insurance and that they become insured for the benefit of getting quality medical care whenever and however it may be needed.

I applaud the gentlewoman once again for her keen interest, her compassion, her concern, and her incredible leadership in this regard.

Mr. BALDACCI. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate my colleagues who have joined me this evening to share their concerns about this issue and offer practical solutions to the problem.

Before I close, I would like to discuss a couple of measures that are or have the capacity to reignite the debate on the uninsured and health care for all. One was just referenced by the gentlewoman from Indiana, and that is House Concurrent Resolution 99. It is a resolution that was crafted by the Universal Health Care Task Force, of which I am a member.

This resolution directs Congress to enact legislation by October of 2004 that provides access to comprehensive health care for all Americans. The resolution designates 14 separate principles that would guide us in that process. They include issues such as affordability and removal of financial barriers to access to care, cost efficiency, comprehensive care, including making mental health parity a priority, and promotion of prevention and early intervention. Our health care system should eliminate disparities in access to quality health care.

One of the other guiding principles is that it should address the needs of people with special health care needs and underserved populations in rural and urban areas. These are basic guiding values that we should look to as we reform our health care system.

Now, my colleagues and I mentioned various approaches to assuring health care for all and addressing the needs of the uninsured. I have offered universal health care legislation, as have a number of our speakers here this evening, and I have certainly cosponsored many of their bills. All of these bills abide by the principles that I just outlined and are an effort to reach the goal of health care coverage for all.

The legislation that I have offered achieves this goal by allowing the States to decide for themselves how to provide quality, affordable health care to all of their residents, and it provides broad Federal guidelines and financial assistance. My Health Security for All Act will secure health insurance for all Americans, guarantee affordable health care by limiting out-of-pocket expenses, and provide comprehensive health care by guaranteeing a minimum benefit package equal to the benefits offered to Members of Congress. It would also ensure the quality of health care benefits by providing very strong patient protections.

This is a proposed answer to our uninsured crisis, and I know my colleagues with me tonight share my commitment to addressing the needs of the uninsured and those underinsured in this country.

I would like to reiterate the point that being uninsured is not a choice. Over 40 million people do not have access to quality, affordable health care in America not because they choose that, but because circumstances beyond their control result in their inability to access affordable health insurance. Our country has the most expensive health care system in the world, and the gentleman from Washington (Mr. McDERMOTT) brilliantly outlined that in his remarks. This is in terms of absolute costs, per capita costs, and percentage of gross domestic product.

Despite being the first in spending in the United States, the World Health Organization has ranked the United States number 37 among nations in this world in terms of meeting the health care needs of its people. More and more people are slipping through the cracks in the system of health care coverage in our Nation.

So what are the consequences for all of us in having tens of millions of Americans uninsured? We have a sicker population, we as a society have to assume the loss of productivity and the costs for serious medical conditions that go undiagnosed and untreated. We suffer the shame of being the richest nation on Earth that cannot provide basic health care to all of its citizens.

In just a few decades, we have put astronauts on the moon, we have created a global village united by computer technology, we have perfected travel from one end of the world to the other in mere hours, and yet 40 million of us cannot afford or cannot get health care. And there are tens of millions of Americans who have lost faith in this system, lost faith that comprehensive, quality health care will be available to them without a struggle when they need it, where they need it, and from whom they want it.

My colleagues, it is time to put health care for all at the top of our national agenda. Many people have called for it and many more believe it should happen. But universal health care will never happen until we create the national will to make it so. We know that if 40 million uninsured people found their political voice tomorrow, and spoke as one and demanded universal health care, that we would have it.

Mr. Speaker, I ask my colleagues to join me in helping them find their voices. The voters in my district are tired of hearing "we cannot." They reject the cynicism of the naysayers and the keepers of the status quo. I ask these naysayers if you are not for health care for all, who would you leave behind? If you agree that everyone should have health care and affordable access to quality comprehensive health care, then let us talk about the best way to achieve that. That is why we are here tonight. Together we must reignite the debate about extending quality, affordable, comprehensive health care to everyone in our country.

JUSTICE FOR WORLD WAR II POWS

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. HONDA. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks on the subject of my Special Order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. HONDA. Mr. Speaker, it is an honor to be here today to address the situation of our former American POWs who fought in the Pacific Theater during World War II. My commitment to addressing these issues is deep-seated. I am proud to be a co-author of the bill H.R. 1198, the Justice for U.S. Prisoners of War Act of 2001, with the gentleman from California (Mr. ROHRBACHER). We are joined by 226 of our House colleagues on this bill.

I am a teacher by training, and I am not an expert on the issue of war and the atrocities that all too often accompany the prosecution of war between nations. I want to share with Members why I think it is important to pay attention to events that happened over 50 years ago.

My involvement in the pursuit of justice for American POWs stems from something that is deeply personal and uniquely American. It is a view that is held by a great many of us that are part of the new generation of Asian Americans whose parents were born in the United States.

The roots of my involvement in the POW reparation movement was embedded in me as a youth, well before I had any idea about the atrocities that some Japanese companies visited upon our servicemen during World War II.

Like many Japanese American families, my family and relatives were interned in a camp in Amache, Colorado, in 1942. We were eventually able to leave the camp because my father volunteered to serve in the Navy's military intelligence service.

Later in the 1970s and 1980s, the Japanese American redress movement focused the United States on coming to terms with the injustices of the internment of Japanese Americans during World War II. This shaped my desire to set the record straight.

It was once taboo in my community to discuss the internment issues. The redress movement brought the issue out into the open and allowed the healing process to begin, and this enabled many of us to put aside our bitterness and understand clearly what happened to us in our own country during World War II.

Just as the healing process began in my community, it is my great hope that this historic bill will bring some measure of closure for our brave soldiers, sailors, airmen and marines who were so severely mistreated as prisoners of war while educating our Nation about what really happened during World War II so that together we can learn from the lessons of those dark times.

As we go forward, it is critical to remember that the relationship between the U.S. and Japan is important to our national interests and that nothing in this bill is intended to harm the strong friendship the United States and Japan have enjoyed for these many decades. But we cannot ignore the past and sweep the events of the past under the rug.

When I think about forgiveness, I think about a friend, Dr. Lester Tenney, an American veteran and POW who once told me as he was recalling a conversation he had with a fellow POW, his friend said I cannot forgive nor forget, and he told his friend if you cannot forgive, you are still a prisoner.

Dr. Tenney's story mirrors what many of the POWs went through. He became a prisoner of war on April 19, 1942, with the fall of Bataan in the Philippines. A survivor of the Bataan Death March, he was sent in a hell ship to Japan where he became part of the slave labor force in a Mitsui company coal mine. Dr. Tenney has stated and I quote, "I was forced to shovel coal 12 hours a day, 28 days a month for over 2 years, and the reward I received for this hard labor was beatings by the civilian workers in the mine. If I did not work fast enough or if the Americans had won an important battle, the beatings would be that much more severe."

It is important to stress that this legislation we have introduced, H.R. 1198, is by no means an instrument to further anyone's agenda that fosters anti-Asian sentiments, racism, or Japan bashing. What this bill will do is to give our veterans their long-awaited day in court, restore some measure of dignity to them, and set the record straight. Our intention in pushing for this bill, the Justice for U.S. Prisoners of War Act of 2001, is to support our former prisoners of war held in Japan during World War II. These heroes survived the Bataan Death March only to be transported to Japan in death ships, forced to work for private companies under the most horrendous and horrific conditions.

Private employees of these companies tortured and physically abused our GIs while the corporations withheld essential medical and even the most minimal amounts of food.

After the war, approximately 16,000 POWs returned, all battered and nearly starved to death, many permanently disabled, all changed forever. More than 11,000 POWs died in the hands of the Japanese corporate employers, among the worst records of physical abuse of POWs in recorded history.

Now, like many other victims of World War II era atrocities, the remaining survivors and their heirs are seeking justice and historical recognition of their ordeal. The former POWs do not seek any action or retaliation against the current Japanese Government or against the Japanese people, nor do they seek to portray Asian Americans in any sort of negative light. Rather, they simply seek just compensation from the Japanese companies who were unjustly enriched by the slave labor and sufferings.

The main problem these POWs face today has been the way in which the peace treaty with Japan has been interpreted by our State Department. To date, the State Department has asserted that former POWs can claim no benefits due to the State Department's interpretation of the terms of the peace treaty.

However, other countries such as the Netherlands, Spain, and even the former Soviet Union, have helped their nationals in receiving benefits, and Japan has extended more favorable peace treaty settlement terms with those countries, and has continued to settle war claims by nationals of other countries.

The United States State Department has stood in the way of our POWs' efforts to obtain their measure of justice by the State Department's reading of the peace treaty.

In the face of these obstacles, Congress passed a resolution, S. Con. Res. 158, in the final days of the 106th Congress, calling upon the State Department to put forth its best efforts to facilitate discussions designed to resolve all issues between the former members of the Armed Forces of the United States who were prisoners of war forced into slave labor for the benefit of the Japanese companies during World War II and the private companies who profited from this slave labor.

Today, the State Department has apparently taken no significant actions to resolve this matter. It is, therefore, up to this Congress to press this issue firmly and fairly. Our bill is a balanced and fair response to the situation. H.R. 1198 would, one, pursue justice through the U.S. court system as any former employee of a private company can; two, allow States such as California to extend the statute of limitations applicable to these claims for a period of up to 10 years; and, three, require any U.S. Government entity to provide the Department of Veterans Affairs any medical records relating to chemical or biological tests conducted on any POW and make those available to the POW upon request.

Since the end of World War II, the Japanese corporations that abused these former POWs profited from their forced labor have prospered enormously. Many of these companies are household names in the United States. As an ethical and moral matter, they long ago they should have voluntarily reached out to their victims and settled this injustice.

On the eve of America's entrance into World War II, former U.S. Secretary of the Interior Harold Ickes, Sr., once asked, "What constitutes an American? Not color, nor race, nor religion. Not the pedigree of his family, nor the place of his birth. Not the coincidence of his citizenship. Not his social status, nor his bank account. Not his trade, nor his profession."

"An American is one who loves justice and believes in the dignity of man. An American is one who will fight for his freedom and that of his neighbor. An American is one who will sacrifice property and security in order that he and his children may retain the rights of free men. An American is one in whose heart is engraved the immortal second sentence of the Declaration of Independence: 'We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights, that among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness.'"

"Americans have always known how to fight for their rights and their way of life. Americans are not afraid to fight. They fight joyously in the pursuit for a just cause."

Mr. Speaker, I am honored to stand here today in the House of Representatives and give you my word that I will continue to fight joyously in the just cause of America's World War II POWs. We must remember these men, these men of our Nation's greatest generation. They volunteered to serve our country and some were only 17, 18, 19 years old. They were young, strong, and spirited. They survived the ordeal of a forced surrender in the Philippines. They survived the cruelties of the Bataan Death March, the hell ships, and being POWs in Japan. They survived the tortures of slavery. And today, they are surviving our justice system.

In the beginning of this year, there were only 5,300 surviving POWs, but we are losing these men on a daily basis. For the sake of these men, for the sake of reconciliation, for the sake of our future, we must do right by these men. Let us give these heroes their day in court.

Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from California (Mr. ROHRBACHER).

Mr. ROHRBACHER. Mr. Speaker, let me draw Members' attention to the job that the gentleman from California (Mr. HONDA) is doing for these noble Americans. He did not have to do this, but he has put enormous energy into this bill to bring justice to the survivors of the Bataan Death March. He has my respect, and I am very, very proud to be working with the gentleman on this issue.

I could not help but think as he read the definition of what is an American, that the gentleman from California (Mr. HONDA) himself represents the essence of what he was reading: an American is someone who stands for justice first and foremost. Thank goodness we have people who are taking time to care about those people who defended our country.

Eisenhower once said that any country that forgets its defenders will itself soon be forgotten.

Mr. Speaker, there are no greater heroes that we have today than those heroes that survived the Bataan Death March. There is no group of survivors of any war to whom we owe a greater thanks; but yet who we have done a great injustice through our inaction, through our unwillingness as a government to step up to do what was right by them.

There are many such causes around, good causes. This is one good cause.

I got personally involved in this because this issue happens to touch my family. My wife's father passed away about 10 years ago, and when we were married 5 years ago, at our wedding my wife was given away by Uncle Lou, now the great male patriarch of our family, because my father has passed away as well.

Uncle Lou is a survivor of the Bataan Death March. What he told me surprised me. I was totally surprised when I heard about what had happened.

First of all, and I went to several of the reunions they have of the Mukden survivors. The Mukden survivors are the people who survived the Bataan Death March and then were sent on to Manchuria where, I might add, they not only were worked as slave laborers, but many times used for experiments and many of them were brutally murdered by their Japanese guards.

What he told me is that originally, of course, they felt that they had been betrayed by their countrymen, or at least had been hung out to dry, as you say, by our fellow Americans who they believed in. My Uncle Lou was unfortunate enough, like these other Bataan Death March victims and survivors, to be stationed in the Philippines just prior to the Japanese attack in December of 1941. They fought hard and they retreated back to the Bataan Peninsula, where they were able to hold out for months against overwhelming odds. And their relief never came. It just never came. They were supposed to hold out until the Americans came forward.

Now, could we have saved them? We had a tremendous attack on Pearl Harbor that eliminated much of our strength in the Pacific. Maybe we were not able to. Maybe with the ships and planes we had available, if we tried a rescue mission, we would not have succeeded. Maybe that was the right decision to make by our military, not to go there to rescue these men.

Then as they went through this horrific death march and captivity, which we will discuss in a moment, and then sent off to work as slave labor, those who were fit for slave labor duty in Japan and Manchuria.

After the war again they believe they were hung out to dry, because again, rather than coming to their assistance and their aid, the United States decided to cut a deal, and that is what the treaty with Japan in 1951, the peace treaty, represents, a deal that was cut with the leadership in Japan and of the way we would handle ourselves in a peaceful world.

It was a peace treaty. But instead of including in the peace treaty a consideration for these brave heroes, who had never been compensated by the Japanese or given an apology, not even an official apology issued for the way they were treated, instead of holding out for at least letting them have some modicum of justice, we cut the deal.

The deal in the treaty says that they would not be able to sue. They would not be able to sue for compensation for the crimes committed against them. This was part of an overall thing, that nobody is going to be able to sue.

Well, guess what? There is another portion of the treaty, because that portion that I just mentioned of the treaty is always held up by the State Department and they say, oh, we cannot let these Bataan Death March survivors sue the Japanese corporations that worked them as slave labor because that would violate the treaty. All of a sudden it would open up a Pandora's box. It would just destabilize the entire relationship we have with Japan.

But, no, there is another part of the treaty, and that part of the treaty says, and I do not have the quote right here in front of me, but it says that if any rights are given to the people of any other country by Japan that are not included in this treaty as rights of Americans, then those rights that Japan has given to the other people automatically also become the rights of the Americans.

Well, guess what? Japan has permitted their companies in their country to be sued by others who were victimized during the Second World War. The Dutch and most recently Chinese citizens are able to sue, and I believe they received $85,000 apiece in compensation.

This clearly then suggests by this section of the treaty that the Americans should have a right to sue for those crimes and those losses and to compensate them for those losses and crimes against them during the war. But instead, our State Department continues, continues, to hold that, no, this would destabilize our relationship with Japan, ignoring that portion of the treaty that permits Americans to have the very same rights, legal rights, that other citizens are granted by the Japanese.

So what we have is a travesty. America's greatest war heroes, and their greatest adversary is not the Japanese, but, instead, their own government.

Yesterday in a court in California these Bataan Death March survivors again attempted to state their case and to bring their case against a Japanese corporation which had worked them during the Second World War. It is a travesty that representatives of their government, of us, of us, the United States of America, U.S., our representatives, paid for by our tax dollars, were in that court, not to pay homage to these great Americans who sacrificed so much for our freedom, but instead to offer a brief to the court, to offer their own testimony to the court, of why the court should not even consider the case of these brave Americans.

Talking about adding insult to injury. The movie Saving Private Ryan and The Code Talkers and all these other movies that are now at last coming forward to show not just action-adventure type movies we had in the '50s or '60s, but instead to demonstrate the true heroism of that generation of Americans that saved us during the Second World War, we have those movies, and the American people feel that we owe that generation a great debt, and we do. But what kind of debt do we have when we sit and let our government, our government, using our tax dollars, thwart the efforts of the greatest of the heroes of that war to receive some sort of justice for the crimes that were committed against them?

Do not tell me about Saving Private Ryan. Do not tell me about The Code Talkers and the rest of these, how they made you cry, when we have got people who are our heroes and went through that savagery and took the blows for us, who are now being thwarted in their attempt for justice by our own government.

The gentleman from California (Mr. HONDA) and I have tried to do our best to put at least the legislative branch of government on record, to be on the side of these Bataan Death March survivors. We have tried our best. I will have to say that the President, I do not know if he even knows about this issue, but I will say that he should, and if he hears about it tonight, he should intervene and make sure that his State Department, the people who he has appointed there, do not continue on this insult and this attack on the dignity and honor of the Bataan Death March survivors.

But at least we have tried here in the legislative branch. We have 227 bipartisan cosponsors of this legislation, of H.R. 1198. The gentleman from California (Mr. HONDA) has worked hard on this, as I say, and I have worked hard, and we have done our best on this legislation, and that is that over half the Members of Congress are cosponsors of this bill to bring justice to the Bataan Death March survivors.

Who can stand against it, you ask? Well, we have not yet been able to get a hearing on this bill. We have yet to get the committee chairman, the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. SENSENBRENNER), I might add, to agree to have a hearing on this bill. There is always a reason, of course. There is an excuse. But the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. SENSENBRENNER) could have a hearing on this bill, if he so chooses. But we do not.

I would suggest that the leadership of the House has not stepped forward to try to put pressure on those that are getting in the way of this bill, to make sure we get a hearing on this bill. I would think that those people who are reading the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD or listening tonight might want to call the White House and ask the President to make sure that we do right by the Bataan Death March survivors and we quit assigning members of the State Department to go into court to undercut their efforts to sue the people who tortured them and worked them as slave labor in World War II. I would suggest even calls to the leadership of the House, or to the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. SENSENBRENNER) might be an appropriate thing to see if we can move this legislation forward.

But we did not wait just for this legislation. There was another attempt that the gentleman from California (Mr. HONDA) and I worked out of how we might be able to get a vote on this, even though we were being thwarted in getting this bill to the floor.

Last year when the appropriations bills were going through, we wrote an amendment to the Commerce, State and Justice appropriations bill that stated that no one in the State Department could use the funds in that bill in order to thwart the efforts of American citizens to sue the Japanese corporations that had worked them as slave labor during the war for compensation for that slave labor. So we basically were putting the essence of H.R. 1198 into the appropriations bill as a limitation so that no money could be used for that, meaning they could not pay the salary of anybody, they could not send them out, because that was using money, appropriated money, for that end.

That amendment caused a great deal of stir in this body, because we had at last got something on the floor. Some people thought that it was going to be ruled out of order. In fact, I believe the leadership felt it was going to be ruled out of order. But the person who was occupying the Chair when someone was asked to rule whether or not the amendment was in order, the person in the Chair took a look at it and said no, that is in order, and the shock waves could be felt all over the world.

Of course, it did not come up for a few days, and during that time period, the Japanese lobby went into full gear, and I am sorry to say that many Americans who you would never believe would take money to undercut America's heroes, people who, yes, it does bring tears to their eyes when they see movies like Saving Private Ryan, people who have made their whole lives helping the veterans, signed on to the effort of the Japanese companies to undermine that effort on our part to amend the appropriations bill, and, I might add, to undercut the bill of the gentleman from California (Mr. HONDA) and myself, H.R. 1198.

There was enormous pressure brought, but when the bill came to the floor in the House, we won overwhelmingly. It was an overwhelming vote. Only 33 votes were against us.

Well, it also passed the United States Senate, the appropriations vote in the United States Senate. Senator BOB SMITH from New Hampshire put forward the very same amendment, exact wording; so we had on both sides, the United States Senate by a majority and in the House by a huge majority, voted for that very same language to make sure that our tax dollars were not being used to undermine the rights of the Bataan Death March survivors. And guess what happened?

We have a process here, which is if there is any difference between the Senate appropriations bill and a House appropriations bill, they meet in a conference committee. The rules are supposed to be that they only make changes in those parts of the bills that have a difference. Those are the rules. But, of course, who cares for the rules when they have lobbyists paying millions of dollars in order to make just one point, or when they are going to have some argument: Oh, we have to protect the stability of the relationship between Japan and the United States, because everything will just go to pieces if we permit these Americans, these heroes, to sue the Japanese corporations that worked them as slave labor.

Of course, the Japanese relations with the Chinese and with the Dutch have not gone to pot. No, only with Americans would that be considered an insult, for us to stand up for our people over these Japanese companies, huge multinational companies, huge Japanese corporations worth billions of dollars. Yes, they cannot afford to do justice by these people whom they treated like animals during the Second World War.

So behind the scenes in a conference committee where we are only supposed to change the things that are different between the House and the Senate, someone stepped forward to take out this provision. These were provisions that passed on the floor of both Houses. Now, somebody is negating the democratic process here. Somebody, I do not know who, somebody is negating the democratic process on an issue that concerns America's greatest heroes; and we need to step up to the plate and make sure that it does not happen again.

Those listening or those reading the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD should know that the gentleman from California (Mr. HONDA) and I are planning again to offer this same amendment to the appropriations bill, but this time, we are going to draw the bead of the American people. We are going to focus people's attention on the conference committee so that behind closed doors, we will find out who it is that takes away the rights of the Bataan Death March survivors for their justice. We will find out who intercedes to negate the democratic process and behind closed doors, do this dirty deed to America's greatest heroes. We will find that out, and we will come to this floor, and we will make sure that the American people know exactly who it is that is doing this. Because the American people need to know if the democratic process is going to be thwarted, who it is here who is doing that, especially at the expense of these brave, brave men.

That will probably be in the next few months. I am not sure when the appropriations bill will be coming, it probably will be coming sometime in September, but we will be drawing people's attention to it, and I hope that people pay attention to this issue. It is only if we mobilize American opinion that we are going to be able to thwart those who are trying to thwart democracy.

Let us take a look at that. Let us take a look at it. How many people are we talking about? After the war, approximately 16,000 POWs returned.

These were people that returned, some of them were turned into walking skeletons; most of them had had the most traumatic times in their lives, both physically and mentally. They had seen their friends murdered in front of them, butchered. Sixteen thousand returned, and 11,000 POWs died in the hands of their Japanese corporate employers. These Japanese companies and the Japanese government had the worst record of abuse of their prisoners in World War II, and that is saying a lot.

Unfortunately, of the 16,000 that returned, only 2,000 remain alive today. It is up to us to set the record straight and to do what is right and to bring justice to these 2,000 men, if for nothing else, in memory of those many other thousands that have died waiting for justice, and the many thousands who died before them at the hands of these Japanese corporations and the Japanese prison guards.

Uncle Lou, my wife's great uncle, told me of his capture in the Bataan Death March at Bataan and details of the Bataan Death March and of the Filipino people who were watching this from the side. By the way, the Bataan Death March had many, many Filipinos as well, not just American soldiers, but Filipino soldiers. We are about to do justice to those Filipino soldiers, by the way, for the first time, thanks to the gentleman from California (Mr. FILNER) from San Diego, and some others of us; I am sure the gentleman from California (Mr. HONDA) is on this bill as well. We promised the Filipinos who served with us that they would get veterans' benefits, the same veterans' benefits as the Americans who served in World War II.

Mr. Speaker, this is a black mark on our government again. We just betrayed them. We just took them out of the loop. I think it was in 1948 that we reneged on that promise. But these Filipino soldiers who were with us, they died by the thousands as well. The Filipino people, the citizens would see these poor people coming by, these brave Americans and Filipinos who were being treated in this way, by the sword-swirling Japanese who were cutting their heads off if they dropped out of line, and they had no water, and the Americans with the heat; it was a horror story, the Bataan Death March.

But the Filipino people would throw little packets of food or little containers of water on them. If they did, they knew that if the Japanese guards saw them, that they would be murdered, but they took that chance to help these brave souls, these heroic people. They did that at such great risk that some of them lost their lives when the Japanese guards would come right over and bayonet them to death.

Do we not have the courage to do something? We are not going to lose our lives. Do we not have the courage to step forward, or the caring in our heart to step forward to help these heroes as they march by?

This is a black mark on this Congress that we permitted that provision to be taken out behind closed doors in that conference committee. It is a black mark that this bill that the gentleman from California (Mr. HONDA) and I have worked on, H.R. 1198, has not been brought to the floor. This is a black mark. This is a shameful episode.

We can make it right, Mr. Speaker, but we have to have the support of the American people to do so. In the months ahead when we bring this forward and try to put this amendment on the Commerce, State, and Justice appropriations bill, we need to have everyone there focused on this issue. I would hope the veterans' organizations, which they were the last time around, will join us.

By the way, one other reason I feel so deeply about this is that my father also served in the Philippines as one of the liberators after the war. He too had a very high opinion of the Filipino people, and he flew DC-3s up and down the battle areas as we liberated the Philippines from the Japanese. And it was a very bloody battle, and many people risked their lives and many people lost their lives. Many people remained. That truly was, that generation truly was the great generation.

So we have a chance now to repay that debt. We have now a chance to send the message that we believe in justice and even if it is justice delayed, we will do our part to try to bring this honor, this honor that these men, the survivors of the Bataan Death March who were the heroes of all of those people, like my father who went after them, it was their courage that inspired my father and others to be involved.

Let us know this: This is not an anti-Japanese piece of legislation. The gentleman from California (Mr. HONDA) would be the last person who would come forward and try to do something anti-Japanese. The fact is that many people in Japan, and I would say if not most of the people in Japan, understand that there were things that were done wrong in World War II.

As we know, our own Japanese Americans who joined up in our own military were some of the most decorated war heroes in World War II. Of course, they used them in Italy and in the European theater, but they were heroic. So we know that. This is not against the Japanese Americans and it is not against the Japanese people, because we know that they would like to make it right and move on.

After all, the Germans, after World War II and in the decades since, tried to make it right, some of the evil things that they did. And they knew that it was not them, they did not do wrong; it was another generation of Germans that did that. But they have not run away from their history.

Mr. Speaker, there are many people in Japan who want to shut the book. Let these Japanese corporations, if they do not want us to go through this, let them step forward and make a settlement with the Bataan Death March survivors. Let them make a settlement. But we are not going to stand by and let them just be tortured with silence after they had been tortured and worked as slave laborers during the war. We will not let the indignity of the crime against them, and the indignities that they had to suffer, we will not let that continue and go without being addressed.

As I say, there are many Japanese who would like to see the book closed, and I would plead with the powers in Japan to step forward and just close this book, get it over with.

This will not disrupt American-Japanese relations. Those people who are suggesting that, they are just using lala words, meaningless phrases and words, to try to say something that would justify the insult that they are giving to America's greatest war heroes; or perhaps they have been lobbied by someone, someone who they respect or they owe a special favor to, who told them not to vote for this, or to oppose it in some way.

This is not going to disrupt American-Japanese relations. The corporations that we are talking about are worth billions of dollars. They can afford to compensate these men who they treated as animals and dogs, and beat. They can afford it. In fact, it would be money well spent, because it would establish a tie, a bond between all of us, knowing that they were willing to do it. There would be no disruption of American relations. It is ludicrous to say that.

So tonight we draw attention to this bill, to this piece of legislation that has not been permitted on the floor, or that the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. SENSENBRENNER) has not seen fit to have a hearing on. We draw attention to the Japanese people; let us work together and bring justice and close this book. Let us honor these American heroes and recognize that the Japanese people are not the same people who had been brainwashed, as they were; the Japanese had been brainwashed for generations to react the way they did to orders during World War II.

But that has to be recognized, that there were crimes in World War II, and acknowledged and forgiven and forgotten, because there are so many things; and we have such close ties with the Japanese people now, and it is a wonderful thing.

Certainly Japanese-Americans, again, have proven their patriotism, just with their honor and courage. And the fact that the gentleman from California (Mr. HONDA) is one of the leaders in this demonstrates again just how willing they are to step up to the plate and be patriotic Americans.

Mr. Speaker, I just close with this thought about my father, and the many fathers who fought in the Philippines and who fought in that generation. Some of them are lost to us now. We will do what is right by them, and we will honor them by doing what is right. What is right is not to forget the Bataan Death March survivors while any of them survive. Two thousand survive. Let us not let them pass away until we have done justice by them.

In this way, we will do honor by them; but we will make sure that our own country stands for liberty and justice and freedom, and these things that the gentleman from California (Mr. HONDA) just mentioned a few moments ago. If we are Americans, we are going to stand for these things, and we are going to stand together. Sometimes that means overpowering certain special interest groups that maybe have influence here. But no interest group can stand up to the American people if they are motivated and if they understand what the issues are.

So let us join together and let us make sure we do what is right by the survivors, to the survivors of the Bataan Death March, and let us pass H.R. 1198. Let us make sure that bill gets to the floor, and let us make sure that our amendment on the Commerce-State-and-Justice appropriations bill is passed and remains in the bill, and is not taken out behind closed doors this time.

Mr. HONDA. Mr. Speaker, I want to thank my good friend, the gentleman from California (Mr. ROHRBACHER), for his passion, for his conviction, and for his understanding of what it is that we need to do, and for his precise words that hopefully, as in church we say, convicts us to move and do the right thing.

A couple of words I would like to close with. One is "spirit" and the other is "reconciliation."

The spirit that I have learned in this process is the spirit of the victims, the ex-POWs, the spirit that was exhibited by Dr. Lester Tenney, by Mr. Frank Bigelow from Florida, who at 6-4, as a young man hunched over in the tunnels of the coal mines in Japan, had his leg broken by a boulder that fell down and shattered his leg; no medical facilities, no medical attention.

In a couple of days they realized that his leg was gangrenous, and they needed to do something in order to save his life. The choice was, do we amputate his leg and take the chance that he may die because of that, or do we allow the gangrene to continue and know that he will die? And he said, take it, and they took it with a pocket knife and a hacksaw and no anesthesia.

Yet today, both Dr. Tenney and Frank Bigelow have the spirit and the grace to say that they forgive what had happened to them, and what they seek today is just justice in their own court system.

The other word is "reconciliation." We just left a millennium of wars and atrocities, of the inhumanity of one person against another for many reasons. We have an opportunity in the new millennium to make this the millennium of reconciliation, of forgiveness, of healing.

I believe if this bill is passed and considered by our committees that is supported by over 226 Members of this House, that would move right through our committees if heard, that would move right to the President's desk, and to be signed by him would be the stroke that would allow our Members, the generation that we consider the greatest generation of our time in this country, to be able to attain the measure of dignity, the recapturing of justice, that they would seek and would attain when they have their day in court.

That is all we are seeking. We are not seeking to predetermine the outcome of the court action, but we are seeking their right for their day in court.

Mr. UDALL of New Mexico. Mr. Speaker, I would first like to thank my distinguished colleague Mr. HONDA for organizing this special order to raise awareness of the former POW's who were used as slave laborers in Japan during World War II. This is a particularly important veteran's issue to me and my constituents because of the significant role that New Mexicans played in the South Pacific during World War II. I am very glad to have this opportunity to come here tonight to honor those brave soldiers who battled in Bataan.

Shortly after the United States formally declared their entry into World War II, American forces stationed in Bataan, Luzon, and Corregidor on the southern coast of the Philippines began their valiant six-month defensive struggle against overwhelming Japanese military forces. Included in these American and Philippine forces were New Mexico's 200th and 515th Anti-Aircraft Coast Artillery units. In fact, when the Japanese bombed Clark Field and Fort Stotsenberg, Philippine Islands on December 8, 1941, eight hours after the attack on Pearl Harbor, the 200th Coast Artillery was the first to fire on the enemy.

The superior numbers of Japanese forces, however, compelled these brave American and Philippine forces to surrender on April 9th, 1942, and then forced them to commence the horrifying 85-mile Death March to the now infamous Japanese prison camps north of Manila. It is estimated that during the march over 10,000 American and Filipino soldiers died as a result of malnutrition and torture. Following the march, the thousands of men fortunate enough to survive were subsequently placed on "hell ships" and transferred to Japan, Taiwan, Manchuria, and Korea to perform slave labor in support of the Japanese war industry.

The American soldiers captured on Bataan, Luzon, and Corregidor endured a longer captivity—over three and a half years—than any other POW's in World War II. Of the approximately 36,000 U.S. soldiers who were captured by the Japanese during World War II, only 21,000 survived to return to the U.S. at the end of the war. Of the 1,800 men deployed in New Mexico's 200th and 515th Coast Artillery Regiments, fewer than 900 returned to the United States after the three and a half years of captivity.

Today, the men forced to perform slave labor in the Japanese corporations still await their just and overdue compensation and recognition for the labor performed. Recently, however, a California law was enacted that enables these men to seek damages up to the year 2010 against responsible Japanese companies. Seventeen lawsuits have been filed on behalf of former POWs, but their claims are currently pending in the California State court system and have been since they were filed in 1999.

Over the past few years, the U.S. government has helped facilitate the resolution of claims for thousands of individuals who were forced to perform slave labor for German companies during World War II. However, the U.S. State Department and the Department of Justice have been opposing, rather than supporting, the claims of the U.S. POW's who were forced to perform slave labor in Japan.

I am a cosponsor and strongly support the important legislation introduced by several Members present at this special order today, H.R. 1198. "The Justice for U.S. POWs Act of 2001," will allow POW suits against Japanese companies to go forward without interference from the Department of State. This legislation has broad bipartisan support and I am hopeful that we can soon bring this legislation before the full House for consideration to help bring compensation and recognition for the hardship these POW's endured at the hands of their captors.

Finally, I would like to invite my colleagues here as well as anyone else to visit the recently dedicated Bataan Memorial Park in Albuquerque, New Mexico. This touching memorial is a poignant reminder of the sacrifices made by both the living and the dead for the freedoms we enjoy today.

Again, thank you Mr. HONDA for organizing this special order. I look forward to working with you further to bring H.R. 1198 to the floor for passage.

DELETIONS OF SPONSORS FROM PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 7 of rule XII, sponsors were deleted from public bills and resolutions as follows:

H.R. 4600: Mr. FATTAH.

SENATE—Thursday, July 11, 2002*(Legislative day of Wednesday, July 10, 2002)*

The Senate met at 9:30 a.m., on the expiration of the recess, and was called to order by the Honorable DEBBIE STABENOW, a Senator from the State of Michigan.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Today's prayer will be offered by our guest Chaplain, the Reverend Dr. David Jefferson, Sr., Metropolitan Baptist Church, Newark, NJ.

PRAYER

The guest Chaplain offered the following prayer:

Eternal and all wise God, we assemble this morning thanking You for this opportunity that You have given us. We thank You for the abundance of Your grace, for the extension of Your mercy, and the assurance of Your protection. Help these Senators to be faithful to the higher ideals of justice, liberty, and righteousness. Speak to their collective consciousness as they endeavor to make our Nation, and, yes, even the world, a house of hope, love, and peace.

Gracious Master, hold Your ideals over the women and men of this governing body. Place a crown of righteousness above them, and encourage them to grow tall enough to wear it. Your sacred scripture says that without a vision, the people will perish. Give the Senators a vision for America—a vision that will enable this country to be a responsible citizen of the world.

Now, Lord, grant unto these Senators the courage to lead this Nation in complex and confusing times. Help them to rely on that which is greater than themselves. May they be guided by Your Spirit and Your intelligence as they seek to establish the laws of this land. Bless us all. Amen.

PLEDGE OF ALLEGIANCE

The Honorable DEBBIE STABENOW led the Pledge of Allegiance, as follows:

I pledge allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America, and to the Republic for which it stands, one nation under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all.

APPOINTMENT OF ACTING PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will please read a communication to the Senate from the President pro tempore (Mr. BYRD).

The legislative clerk read the following letter:

U.S. SENATE,
PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE,
Washington, DC, July 11, 2002.

To the Senate:

Under the provisions of rule I, paragraph 3, of the Standing Rules of the Senate, I hereby appoint the Honorable DEBBIE STABENOW, a Senator from the State of Michigan, to perform the duties of the Chair.

ROBERT C. BYRD,
President pro tempore.

Ms. STABENOW thereupon assumed the chair as Acting President pro tempore.

RECOGNITION OF THE ACTING MAJORITY LEADER

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nevada is recognized.

ORDER OF PROCEDURE

Mr. REID. Madam President, the Senator from New Jersey wishes to make a few remarks relative to the guest Chaplain. I ask unanimous consent that following my very brief statement, the Senator from New Jersey be recognized for up to 3 minutes and that time not count against the morning business time this morning.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

SCHEDULE

Mr. REID. Madam President, the Senate will be in a period for morning business until 10:30 this morning. As the Chair will announce shortly, the first half of the time is under the control of the Republican leader. The Senator from Maine is here to use the first 15 minutes. She has been courteous in allowing the Senator from New Jersey to precede her. Following her time, the second half hour will be under the control of the Democratic leader or his designee.

At 10:30 a.m., we will be back on the accounting reform bill, with 90 minutes of debate prior to a vote in relation to the McConnell amendment. The first 45 minutes of that time will be under the control of Senator BYRD, and the second 45 minutes will be under the control of Senator McCONNELL, the offerer of the amendment to be voted upon at noon today.

Cloture was filed on the accounting reform bill. Therefore, all first-degree amendments must be filed prior to 1 p.m.

Madam President, I have spoken with the majority leader today. He intends to finish this bill. We will have a vote on cloture tomorrow. So tomorrow could be a day with some votes. If anyone is planning on leaving early, they should understand there could be some votes tomorrow. We have 30 hours after that cloture motion vote has taken place. The leader has indicated he is going to finish the bill. Senators should be aware.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Jersey.

THE GUEST CHAPLAIN

Mr. CORZINE. Madam President, I thank the Senator from Maine for her courtesy in allowing me the opportunity to say a few words about my friend and minister who led us in prayer this morning.

I say to my colleagues in the Senate, it is an honor that we were able to have Rev. David Jefferson from the Metropolitan Baptist Church in Newark with us today. I assure my colleagues, from my own life experience, this is a remarkable man of tremendous energy, leadership, and moral character. He leads the largest Baptist church, a very dynamic community of believers, in Newark, NJ. Not only are they active in their religious life, but they make an enormous contribution to redevelopment and the support of the community, reaching out to all who are part of the community who sometimes have been left behind. Through their example, they are demonstrating that access to the American promise is true for everyone.

In his spare time, he is a senior executive at AT&T where he brings both great skills as a business person and moral character and leadership to his efforts in the business world. We need examples of people who are able to both recognize that our free enterprise system needs to be strong and powerful and have brilliant people who care about producing good services, good products at the right price but on an honorable basis. Reverend Jefferson is one who I think demonstrates we can do that, and he does it with great grace.

Most importantly, he is a moral leader for a broader community by demonstrating with all aspects of his life how important it is to recognize that we all live under a greater power than what I think we sometimes think we live under in our own lives. Sometimes we are too focused on what we are about, and he is a great teacher about the importance that we are one nation under God.

I am honored and privileged he has joined us today. I am honored and privileged that he is my friend. I thank the Presiding Officer for the opportunity to welcome Rev. David Jefferson to the Senate Chamber.

RESERVATION OF LEADER TIME

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, the leadership time is reserved.

MORNING BUSINESS

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, there will now be a period for the transaction of morning business not to extend beyond the hour of 10:30 a.m., with Senators permitted to speak therein for up to 10 minutes each.

Under the previous order, the first half of the time shall be under the control of the Republican leader or his designee.

The Senator from Maine.

Ms. COLLINS. I thank the Chair. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that I be permitted to proceed for 15 minutes.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

LAPSES IN CORPORATE RESPONSIBILITY

Ms. COLLINS. Madam President, as every Member of this Chamber knows and, more importantly, as every American investor knows, we have recently witnessed lapses in corporate responsibility unlike anything that has occurred during the past 70 years. It is our role to determine why this has happened and what can be done to prevent it from continuing to happen. I rise to offer some thoughts, as well as to lend my support, to the accounting reform legislation now on the Senate floor.

Several years ago, Federal Reserve Chairman Alan Greenspan characterized the latter stages of the great bull market of the 1990s as irrational exuberance. Although stock prices rose for a few years after that statement, they ultimately collided with economic reality and embarked upon an extended decline. It now appears that that irrational exuberance was being sustained in some instances by improper accounting. Put differently, one way of satisfying the insatiable appetite of some for ever-increasing corporate profits, as well as for rich compensation packages, was to cook the books. Many, although not all, of the recent alleged abuses have occurred in what has been the hot sectors of our economy.

Electric deregulation, the development of the Internet, new medical treatments, and the spread of broadband are all thought to hold enormous prospect for future growth. Unfortunately, for some of the companies in those areas the growth in accounting creativity outstripped the growth in business fundamentals. I make this point because I think it contains a lesson for those of us in Congress, as well as for Federal and State regulators.

During my years as a financial regulator in my home State of Maine, the advice we gave to investors, to the point where it began to sound like a broken record, was that if it seems too good to be true, it almost certainly is. The comparable message for those of us with oversight responsibility is that if one is not vigilant during the boom, when things seem too good to be true, cleaning up after the bust will be far more difficult.

During my first 4 years in the Senate, I was privileged to serve as the chairman of the Senate Permanent Subcommittee on Investigations. During that time, I held more investigations into fraud and abuse in our securities markets than on any other subject, despite the fact we were in the midst of a roaring bull market. Indeed, the roaring bull market made those investigations seem all the more necessary.

More recently, Senator LEVIN and I teamed up in an investigation of Enron Corporation, an investigation that is ongoing. In fact, we just released our first report on the failures of the Enron board of directors to exercise its fiduciary responsibilities. We found that too many of the Enron directors acted as rubber stamps rather than as watchdogs.

In short, the principal lesson of recent events for those of us in Congress may be the need to remember the importance of vigorous oversight and tough enforcement during the good times as well as the bad.

Let me now turn my attention to the conflicts of interest faced by some accountants, brokers, and corporate directors. American capitalism relies heavily on the fiduciary duty concept to protect those who entrust their money to large and often distant corporations. Accountants have a duty to investors to ensure the accuracy of financial statements. Directors have a duty to make certain that managers act in the best interest of the corporation, and stockholders have a duty to give advice that will best serve their client's needs. I believe that this structure is fundamentally sound, but I also believe we have allowed these trust relationships to be seriously eroded by conflicts of interest.

Confidence in our capital markets depends upon accurate and fair financial statements. To achieve that objective, we follow a maxim that President Reagan put forth in another context; namely, "trust but verify." We trust corporate managers to give us honest financial statements but, just in case, we look to accountants to verify the numbers. Too often in the recent past accountants have let us down, principally because, in my view, conflicts of interest have undermined their fundamental fiduciary duty to investors. The source of this problem is that some accountants can depend on those whose books they examine not only for their auditing jobs but much more worrisome for lucrative consulting contracts.

In some ways, the situation for brokers can be even worse, because they frequently have a personal, as well as an institutional, relationship with those to whom they owe a duty. As the recent Merrill Lynch settlement demonstrated, when the same individuals are involved in giving advice to retail customers and securing underwriting business from the corporations they are supposed to be objectively rating, it is the investor who loses. Again, the fiduciary duty concept is not inherently flawed. Rather, it has been eroded by conflicting interests that cannot comfortably coexist.

The third component of what might be called the fiduciary duty triad is the corporate board. Frequently owing their positions to those whose activities they are to monitor, some board members suffer from the appearance, and in some cases the reality, of conflicts of interest. In my view, given their part-time status and their dependence on management for information, the role of the independent directors, perhaps even more than the role of accountants or those of brokers, needs more scrutiny.

In our recent report on the role of the Enron board of directors in the corporation's failure, the Permanent Subcommittee on Investigations found that the board ignored countless warning signs of wrongdoing. In some cases, the board actually approved highly irregular, off-the-books partnerships that masked the company's true liabilities. The board's audit committee failed miserably to ensure the independence of the company's auditor, allowing Andersen to provide internal audit and consulting services while at the same time serving as Enron's outside auditor. In other words, in some ways, Andersen was auditing itself.

Finally, directors blessed financial deals that created conflicts of interest for the top executives of Enron Corporation. Such conflicts of interest are rotting the pillars supporting an essential element of capitalism, and that is the ability of investors to rely on those to whom they entrust their money.

Excising that rot requires two steps. First, we must redefine the roles of the accountant, the broker, and the board member. We must make it absolutely clear that their undiluted responsibility is to the investor.

Second, we must enforce those obligations with tough sanctions, such as those we approved yesterday, that will deter those who would breach these fiduciary duties. This leads logically to the role of the Government regulator. I do not see regulation replacing the fiduciary roles I have described for the simple reason that having Government verify every number in every financial statement would create a nation of regulators. The more effective role for the regulator is to make certain that others honor their obligations and to take swift and meaningful action when they do not.

I know from personal experience as a regulator in Maine that this is no easy task, and it is our responsibility to ensure that the regulators who carry it out have the necessary authority and the financial resources to do the job.

I am pleased the bill before us today incorporates provisions from legislation that I have introduced that will allow the Securities and Exchange Commission to discipline those brokers and investment advisers who have been barred by State regulators from operating within that State. As a result, the SEC will have the option of giving nationwide effect to the bans imposed by individual States, thus protecting citizens nationwide from dishonest or unethical brokers without having to undertake separate investigations. This is especially important because as we learned in my subcommittee's hearings on fraud in the microcap stock market, it is very easy for small-time crooks to move out of one State and into another, setting up shop and defrauding investors all over again.

The reforms needed to restore trust in our capital markets will require tough, effective action by government and self-regulatory organizations. I call on our Nation's business schools to examine the ethical and professional training they provide to corporate managers, accountants, brokers, and board members. The concept of a free market is one that is free from government direction but not free from the duty to act ethically, honestly, and competently. If our corporate leaders lack integrity, no amount of regulation will preserve our economy. How effectively we are conveying this message strikes me as well within the unique expertise of those running our business schools and training our future corporate leaders.

Congress, the SEC, State regulators, the exchanges, and perhaps even our educational institutions can help solve our current problem. Nowhere is the obligation to act greater than on Wall Street and in our corporate boardrooms. The American people are justifiably outraged by the breakdown in corporate ethics. This is not thievery by those lacking the resources to buy food and medicine, this is thievery by those with the resources to buy Picassos and Porsches. As a people, we do not begrudge others who earn their success, but we will not tolerate those whose success rests on breaching ethical and legal obligations.

We must also recognize that although not often mentioned, this problem has ramifications for our standing in the world community at a time when others are waging war on the American system. Our most successful exports since the end of World War II have been our political democracy and our free markets. Indeed, as China demonstrates, our economic views have prevailed even when our political ideals have yet to take root. Having persuaded the rest of the world of the vitality and the creativity of free markets, it would be tragic if we lost our way just when our economic values are gaining widespread acceptance.

A particularly ironic aspect of the current situation and one that would have Marx and Lenin spinning in their graves: Russia is taking steps to strengthen its system of corporate governance at a time when ours appears to be crumbling. While we need not worry that Moscow will replace New York as the world's financial center, it is not unreasonable to be concerned about how other nations judge our response to our current problems. Indeed, the rise in the euro and the drop of the dollar are disconcerting indications of their view to date. This is just one more reason we must act swiftly to put our house in order.

Recent corporate misdeeds have caused great harm, costing our economy and our shareholders billions of dollars and many people their retirement savings as well as their jobs. The impact on investor-employees who have lost both their jobs and their retirement savings has been especially cruel, and those responsible have forgotten that, because capitalism can survive only if people believe they can trust strangers with their money. Honesty and fair dealing are the lifeblood of our economic system.

It would also be unfair to paint with too broad a brush. We should take care not to condemn the many executives who do honor their obligations to their employees and their shareholders. Indeed, it is partly for their benefit as well as for the benefit of all Americans that we must restore confidence in our corporate sector.

In 1997, in my first statement on the floor of the Senate, I quoted the following observation from Winston Churchill: "Some see private enterprise as a predatory target to be shot, others as a cow to be milked, but few see it as a sturdy horse pulling the wagon."

I added that I do see private enterprise as that sturdy horse, and in the wagon it is pulling are the jobs of our constituents. I continue to hold that view. But we must recognize that the wagon has some loose wheels. It is our responsibility to the American people to make sure they are tightened and to institute the reforms that are needed to restore faith in corporate America.

I yield the floor.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nebraska.

AFGHANISTAN FREEDOM SUPPORT ACT OF 2002

Mr. HAGEL. Madam President, this week I introduced the Afghanistan Freedom Support Act of 2002, S. 2712. I am pleased to be joined in this effort by the senior Senator from North Carolina, Mr. HELMS, the former chairman of the Foreign Affairs Committee in the Senate. I ask unanimous consent his name be added to this bill as an original cosponsor.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HAGEL. This legislation is similar to H.R. 3994, sponsored by the chairman of the House International Relations Committee, Congressman HYDE. This bill was passed in the House of Representatives on May 16 by a vote of 390 to 22.

The Afghan Freedom Support Act commits the United States to the democratic and economic development of Afghanistan. In addition to the economic and political assistance found in title I of this legislation, title II seeks to enhance the stability and security of Afghanistan in the region by authorizing military assistance to the Afghan Government and to certain other countries in the region, including assistance for counternarcotics, crime control, and police training.

The United States must stay closely and actively engaged in helping Afghanistan through a very dangerous and difficult transition to stability, security, and, ultimately, to a democratic government. We are at the beginning of a long process. We cannot be distracted or deterred from this objective. Our credibility, our word, and our security, are directly linked to success in Afghanistan. And there cannot be political stability and economic development in Afghanistan without security.

My legislation, and the companion legislation passed by the House, would authorize $1.15 billion over 4 years for economic and democratic development assistance for Afghanistan, as well as up to $300 million in drawdown authority for military and other security assistance. The main elements of my legislation are as follows:

It authorizes continued efforts to address the humanitarian crisis in Afghanistan and among Afghan refugees in neighboring countries; it authorizes resources to help the Afghan government fight the production and flow of illicit narcotics; it assists efforts to achieve a broad-based, multi-ethnic, gender-sensitive, and fully representative government in Afghanistan; it supports strengthening the capabilities of the Afghan government to develop projects and programs that meet the needs of the Afghan people; it supports the reconstruction of Afghanistan through creating jobs, clearing landmines, and rebuilding the agriculture sector, the health care system, and the educational system of Afghanistan; and it provides specific resources to the Ministry for Women's Affairs of Afghanistan to carry out its responsibilities for legal advocacy, education, vocational training, and women's health programs.

This legislation also strongly urges the President to designate within the State Department an ambassadorial-level coordinator to oversee and implement these programs and to advance United States interests in Afghanistan, including coordination with other countries and international organizations with respect to assistance to Afghanistan. In general, the Afghanistan Freedom Support Act provides a constructive, strategic framework for our Afghan policy, and flexible authority for the President to implement it. We must not allow this fragile interim Afghan government to unwind. We must put forward the appropriate investment of men, effort, and resources to complete the objective of a democratic government in Afghanistan.

If Afghanistan goes backward, this will be a defeat for our war on terrorism, for the people desiring freedom in Afghanistan and in central Asia, for America, symbolically, in this region, and for the world. It would be disastrous for our country because it would crack the confidence that people all over the world have in the United States. Afghanistan is the first battle in our war on terrorism. We must not fail.

Mr. President, I yield the floor and I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CLELAND). The clerk will call the roll. The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Ms. STABENOW. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from Michigan.

ORDER OF PROCEDURE

Ms. STABENOW. Mr. President, I yield myself 6 minutes this morning to speak, and then I ask that the distinguished Senator from Georgia, Mr. CLELAND, be yielded 6 minutes; additionally, the senior Senator from North Dakota, Mr. DORGAN, be yielded 6 minutes; and 6 minutes also to the Senator from Florida, Mr. GRAHAM; and an additional 6 minutes to the distinguished junior Senator from Georgia, Mr. MILLER.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

PRESCRIPTION DRUGS

Ms. STABENOW. Mr. President, next week we begin one of the most important debates that we will have, I believe, as a Senate, throughout this session and possibly for years to come. That is a debate about whether or not we are going to meet two goals that the American people have been asking us to address. The first is a Medicare prescription drug benefit for our seniors, for those who have disabilities—a comprehensive Medicare prescription drug benefit. Second, we want to lower prices—lower prices for everyone.

We know in fact not only do seniors, who use the majority of prescriptions, have high prices, but everyone who has prescription drugs does. If you are paying through insurance, you are paying higher insurance rates. If you are a businessperson, you are seeing your health care premiums rising. Small businesses—many in Michigan come to me and talk about 30-percent, 35-percent, 40-percent increases. The big three automakers are juggling between being able to afford new materials for their automobiles and research and all the other costs that they have, versus health care, most of which is prescription drug increases. So everyone is paying.

We have two goals. We as Democrats are working very hard, and we invite our colleague to join with us, to provide real coverage for prescription drugs and lower prices for everyone.

It is incredibly important that we do that. I am concerned, as we move into this debate, given what was done in the House of Representatives and the efforts now on the airwaves by the organization funded by the pharmaceutical companies that are talking about how what was passed in the House was good enough, I am concerned that we really do what is necessary and not just what is in the interests of the drug companies.

The drug companies are here in force every single day. We know next week and the week after, as long as we debate issues of lower prices and real Medicare coverage, they will be here fighting everything—unfortunately. They do wonderful work in research and development. I am so pleased that we have so many that are out there doing good work. But we see, as an industry now, their efforts to fight everything.

We are talking about corporate responsibility this week on the floor of the Senate, the need for corporate accountability. We need corporate accountability and ethics in the drug industry as well. I am deeply concerned that we do not see efforts to work with us for something that provides reasonable profit. We want them to succeed, but we do not want to continue to see exorbitant price increases and profits on the backs of our seniors, those with disabilities, our families, our small businesses.

I am deeply concerned about what we were reading in the paper during the House debate. Our Republican colleagues, in fact a senior House GOP leadership aid said yesterday:

Republicans are working hard behind the scenes on behalf of PhRMA [which is the drug industry lobby] to make sure that the party's prescription drug plan for the elderly suits drug companies.

This was in the Washington Post, June 19 of this year. They are:

... working hard behind the scenes to make sure that their ... plan ... suits the drug companies.

I hope next week we will work just as hard in this body for a prescription drug plan that suits the American people.

I am so pleased to see my distinguished colleagues from Georgia here, one in the chair and the junior Senator who came into the Senate with me, who is one of the lead sponsors of the bill that we have in front of us along with the Senator from Florida, Mr. GRAHAM.

We have a plan. We have a plan that works, that pays the majority of the bills, that does the job, that brings together the collective buying power of 39 million seniors, and which will require that prices be lowered. We have the plan. Our plan is not the plan of the drug companies. It is not the plan which drug companies are advertising about—the pretty ads from Seniors United that are on the air from the drug company, the front senior group that thanks the Republican colleagues in the House for voting for their plan, the plan that supports the drug companies.

We have a plan for the American people.

I would like to share for a moment two stories from the Web site which I set up. I set up the Prescription Drug People's Lobby. There are six drug company lobbyists for every one Member of the Senate. I invited the people of Michigan to join with me to be part of our people's lobby to make sure the real story gets heard. I would like to share a story from Rochelle Dodgson of Oak Park, MI. I thank her for being a part of our Prescription Drug People's Lobby.

She writes:

My mother is currently insured under COBRA after losing her job in August 2001. While she has her basic Medicare coverage, she will lose her supplemental medical coverage in January 2003. She has recently been diagnosed with Multiple Myeloma and will require treatment for this blood disorder the rest of her life. The medications she was taking before this new illness cost over $500 retail monthly. I have not checked the prices of the 'chemo' she takes monthly nor the cost of the Procrit she takes weekly. I expect her monthly out-of-pocket expenses to be around $700 a month. Her social security is just over $800 monthly. I can't imagine having to budget food and housing expenses along with medication on that kind of income. My husband and I will try to find a way to budget some of her medical costs into our own expenses but we also care for my husband's mother.

My mother is still a viable part of society. She doesn't deserve to be struggling just because she has chronic illness.

Rochelle, thank you for your story. Your mother does not deserve to struggle with $700 medical bills with a $700-a-month income.

I shared that one story today from Michigan. For those who want to get involved, please go to my Senate Web site around the country at Fairdrugprices.org. You can be involved and make your voice heard, and the right thing will happen here in the Senate.

Thank you, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DORGAN). Who seeks recognition?

The Senator from Georgia is recognized.

Mr. CLELAND. Mr. President, I echo the eloquent words of the distinguished Senator from Michigan, who has done yeoman service for this body, for seniors and the disabled of America in helping put together and advocate for a meaningful drug benefit under Medicare. And special kudos go to my colleague from Georgia, Senator MILLER, and to my distinguished friend from Florida, Senator GRAHAM, for really taking the lead in articulating a Medicare supplement that we can embrace in this body and that the American people can embrace.

When I talk to my fellow Georgians about the issues that are most on their minds, that most affect their lives, the one that I hear about more often than any other is the high cost of prescription drugs. Everywhere I go, people ask me, "When are Congress and the President going to make good on their promise to help us with prescription drugs?" And all I can tell them is, That's a fair question; I'd like to know, too. Over the past couple of years, their comments have become increasingly urgent. The cost of prescription medications rose a staggering 19 percent in 2000, and another 17 percent in 2001. I can assure you most people's incomes didn't rise by 17 percent in 2001. It is an iron-clad law of economics that if you live on a fixed income, and one portion of your monthly expenses rises dramatically, other portions must be reduced. For many of those seniors whose budgets are already stretched as thin as they can go, an increase in prescription drug costs means that expenditures on the other necessities of life—basics like groceries or rent—must be cut. The choice between medically necessary, life-sustaining prescription drugs and the other basics of life is an impossible one—and one that no American should be forced to make.

The Medicare program has provided for many critical aspects of health care for seniors over the course of its 36-year history, and by and large it has been a great success. But it has been said that while Medicare is a Cadillac program, its model year is 1965. Indeed, if we are to claim that Medicare provides health care security for seniors, we must update it to cover the component of health care that for many has become more burdensome than any other—prescription medications. People are desperate for any help they can get. Congress and the President promised to deliver that help. If we can't, or won't, the people ought to send this Congress home and elect one that will.

There are a number of options on the table right now. Some are serious efforts to provide meaningful relief to seniors. Some are not. No one in Congress wants to admit that they are against providing a prescription drug benefit for seniors. And I don't blame them. That's an indefensible position. So some, especially in the House, write weak legislation that they call a Medicare prescription drug benefit but which allows drug companies to charge whatever premiums they want, leaves huge gaps in coverage, charges a high deductible, relies on private insurers who have already told us they will not participate, and will cover just 19 percent of seniors drug costs over the next decade, according to the CBO. Such a proposal amounts to little more than a "legislative placebo," which its authors know has no chance of really helping seniors, and no chance of passing this Senate. But they draft such legislation not because they think it will help seniors but so they can go back home and say that they supported a prescription drug benefit for Medicare beneficiaries. They cynically believe that people won't pay enough attention to the substantive differences between a real proposal and theirs, enabling them to shirk the responsibility that they rightly must bear if this Congress once again fails to pass a Medicare prescription drug benefit. Where I come from, when you promise people one thing and then try to give them another, that's called a "bait-and-switch" scheme. And where I come from, we have a saying: "That dog won't hunt."

President Bush has made it clear that, in the war against terror, there are no shades of gray. Either you are for us, or you are for the terrorists. The same clarity that exists in the Bush doctrine ought to apply to the present debate on prescription drugs. Either you are for a real prescription drug benefit for seniors, or you aren't. If you are for a weak measure that purports to be a prescription drug benefit but has no chance of ever benefitting anyone, you are not for a real prescription drug benefit for seniors, and it is time to come clean and say it. It is long past time to dispense with artful dodging and equivocation. Just as no country that deals only halfway with terrorists can be considered on our side in the war against terror, so no one who proposes a halfway approach to prescription drugs under Medicare can be considered to be for real help for seniors. If you don't know whether or not the legislation you are for will provide a real benefit for seniors, let me make it real clear for you: if it was written by the insurance lobby and endorsed by the drug companies, you can bet it is not a real benefit for seniors.

People are hurting. If you need proof, go back to your state or your district and spend a day talking with seniors about their daily struggles. You will find genuine hardships, and you will see that it is the most vulnerable among us who are struggling the most. This is a serious problem, and we need serious people who will work in good faith toward a solution. In the Senate, I am pleased to have teamed up with Senators ZELL MILLER and BOB GRAHAM as an original cosponsor of the Medicare Outpatient Prescription Drug Act of 2002, which will provide a voluntary Medicare prescription drug benefit that will deliver real, meaningful help to seniors. Under this proposal, which has received high marks from the AARP, any Medicare beneficiary who chooses to participate would, for a monthly premium of $25, receive drug coverage from the very first prescription filled of the year. There is no deductible, and there are no gaps in coverage. The lowest-income seniors would receive full subsidies for premiums and co-payments, and those who earn a little more would receive partial assistance. Our proposal, if adopted, will dramatically reduce seniors' out-of-pocket costs for prescription drugs, allowing them to use their food money for food and their rent money for rent. It is with full confidence that I say that this measure is the best proposal on prescription drugs I have seen to date, and I commend Senators GRAHAM and MILLER in particular for their leadership on it. I urge my colleagues in this body and in the House to act favorably on it without delay.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. DORGAN. Mr. President, I join my colleagues in saying that the piece of legislation we are considering, authored by Senator GRAHAM, Senator MILLER, and others, is a good piece of legislation. I am proud to support it. But let me talk just for a few minutes about this issue that brings us to the floor of the Senate, the issue of prescription drugs, and prescription drug pricing especially.

Last year, the cost of prescription drugs in the United States rose 18 percent; the year before that, 16 percent; the year before that, 17 percent. So 16, 17, 18 percent: relentless increases in the price of the cost of prescription drugs.

What does that mean to the American people? It is devastating to all Americans who must access these lifesaving, miracle prescription drugs but cannot afford them. It is especially devastating to senior citizens. They make up 12 percent of our population in this country, and they consume one-third of all the prescription drugs. They have reached those declining income years and discover that miracle and lifesaving drugs they need to take are beyond their reach.

A woman in North Dakota, at a meeting 1 day, came up to me and said: May I speak with you a moment? She was a thin, frail-looking lady close to 80 years of age. She grabbed me by the arm and said: Could you help me? I said: I'll sure try.

She said: I have problems—diabetes, heart disease—and need to take medicine that the doctor has prescribed, but I can't afford that medicine. Could you help me?

And then her eyes filled with tears and her chin began to quiver and she began to cry.

All over this country there are men and women—particularly senior citizens, but others as well—who need access to these prescription drugs and cannot afford them.

We are going to pass a prescription drug benefit, and we are going to put it in the Medicare Program. I support that. Senator GRAHAM, Senator MILLER, and others have done wonderful work in that area.

We are going to do two other things as well. We are going to pass a piece of legislation, I hope, that deals with the issue of generic drugs, which is another way to bring down costs; for if we do not do something about driving down costs, or at least putting downward pressure on drug costs, then we will simply break the bank. We will attach a drug benefit to the Medicare Program but if we don't lower drug costs we will suck that tank dry, and break the back of the American taxpayer. We have to put downward price pressure on prescription drugs.

One other piece of legislation that we are going to consider next week is the issue of reimportation. Senator STABENOW and I, and others, have worked on the issue of reimportation, not because we want Americans to buy their prescription drugs from Canada—and that is what our bill will allow to happen; pharmacists and distributors will be able to access from Canada the FDA-approved drugs and bring them to this country and pass the savings along to the consumer—it is because we want to use this mechanism to put downward pressure on drug prices in this country and force the pharmaceutical manufacturers to reprice their prescription drugs in the United States. That is exactly what will happen.

With unanimous consent, I would like to show two pill bottles on the floor of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CLELAND). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DORGAN. This is Celebrex, widely advertised, used for pain, particularly arthritis. It is widely advertised all across this country. The company that makes this markets it successfully, and good for them for helping produce this medicine. But let me describe the pricing strategy.

If you buy this medicine, Celebrex, in Canada, you get it in this bottle, and it costs you 79 cents per tablet. Buy it in the United States, and you get it in this bottle which is essentially the same.

So 79 cents for this prescription drug per tablet in Canada, but if you are a U.S. citizen, you pay $2.22. It is the same pill, made by the same company, put in the same bottle, FDA approved. The difference? The price.

The U.S. consumer is told: You should pay nearly triple what a Canadian consumer is charged by the same company.

Question: Why should we allow that to happen? Why should the U.S. consumer pay the highest prices in the world for prescription drugs that are sold at a fraction of the cost in virtually every other country of the world?

The answer is: It should not continue to happen. We need to put downward pressure on prices in this country on prescription drugs. This is not about, as the pharmaceutical industry would allege, shutting off research and development if you put downward pressure on prices. That is nonsense.

The fact is, the Europeans pay lower prices—much lower prices—for the same prescription drugs than we do, and yet there is more research and development done in Europe than in the United States by the pharmaceutical manufacturers.

My only point is this: The pharmaceutical manufacturers are good companies. They are the most profitable companies in the world. Good for them. I appreciate, and all Americans appreciate the research and development they do. We, of course, do a substantial amount of it here in the Federal Government that is federally paid for as well.

I am not suggesting there are bad actors here. I am suggesting the pricing policy is wrong. The pricing policy is bad. It is not fair to say to the American consumer: You pay the highest prices in the world by far for the same drug. No American should have to go to Canada to get a fair price on a prescription drug made in the United States. That ought not happen. We aim to change it, even as we debate this issue of a prescription drug benefit in the Medicare plan.

Why do we want to do that? Because I believe there should be a benefit in Medicare for prescription drugs. But I believe if we do not do something to put downward pressure on prices, we simply break the back of the taxpayers and break the bank of the Federal Government. That is why reimportation goes hand in hand with the underlying legislation I am pleased to support, and I commend Senator GRAHAM and Senator MILLER and Senator STABENOW and others for their leadership.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Georgia.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, first, I congratulate my colleague from North Dakota on that very timely and very compelling message he has just given.

I rise today, also, to speak, once again, about prescription drugs and the struggle our seniors are facing each and every day.

We are on record as saying we will have a vote in this Senate before the August recess on a prescription bill. I have always hoped that meant adding a prescription drug benefit to Medicare. We must stick to that schedule. We must honor that commitment.

We have kept our seniors waiting in line for too many years, and we have bumped them too many times in the past. We have disappointed them time and time again. We cannot make them wait through another election cycle for who knows how many years. If that happens—and a lot of political pundits are predicting it will—then we should be ashamed of ourselves.

I am telling you, our seniors are not going to accept just a shrug of the shoulders and a "well, I tried" explanation. I don't think that is going to get it this time around.

There is a lot we can do to help seniors with the cost, as the Senator from North Dakota has discussed, and also about the coverage of their prescription drugs. I will work hard to make sure the bill we pass in the Senate offers real help for our seniors, especially our neediest seniors.

I recently saw the results of a new study that were shocking to me. It said nearly 1 in 5 American women ages 50 to 64 did not fill a prescription for needed medication because they could not afford it. That is ages 50 to 64. Think what the number must be for those over 65.

Those are our mothers and our grandmothers. They are those women who gave us life and tended to our needs who are now foregoing their needs because they cannot afford medication. They are putting their health in jeopardy. Their very lives are being endangered. Their years on this Earth are being cut short. Make no mistake about it, if we allow that to continue, this Congress is an accessory to that crime.

I believe the bill I am a cosponsor of, along with Senator GRAHAM and Senator KENNEDY and Senator DASCHLE and the senior Senator from Georgia who is presiding, and about 30 other Senators, fulfills our promise to all seniors and offers the most for our neediest seniors.

Our bill gives our neediest seniors their medicine for free. For those who earn less than $11,900 a year—and that is about 12 million seniors out there—there is no premium, there is no copayment. They receive 100-percent coverage from the first prescription filled.

To that widow with trembling hands who is trying to cut that pill in half so her medicine will last a little longer, I hope the Senate will send a message to her that help is on the way. To that old man, proud and self-sufficient all his life, who has to whisper to his pharmacist that he doesn't have quite enough in his checking account and he will have to come back later, I hope the Senate will send the message to him that help is on the way.

I look forward to debating this provision of our bill and many others when we take up the prescription drug legislation next week. I urge my colleagues in both Houses and in both parties to keep this in mind: Our duty to seniors is not to just debate an issue. They have heard all that before. Our duty is to pass a bill, a meaningful bill.

I yield the floor and suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, I am pleased to join my colleagues today in the discussion of pending legislation, as of next week, which will relate to the long-held desire of senior Americans to have within the Medicare Program a prescription drug benefit.

One of the key issues in the debate we will begin next week will be, How will this benefit be administered? As we answer that question, we need to ask some questions about what do older Americans want. Older Americans want a plan that is straightforward, simple, a plan with which they are familiar. Even more important, they want a plan that actually works, that they can take to the local pharmacy or, if they use a mail order pharmacy, that they can take to the post office box and get their drugs.

That is why the Senate Democratic bill, which I am sponsoring with Senator MILLER, Senator KENNEDY, and others, including the Presiding Officer, uses the exact same system that America's private insurance companies use. As an example, this happens to be the Blue Cross Blue Shield service benefit plan, a plan which many of us as Federal employees utilize. If you turn to page 119, you will see the outline of what Blue Cross Blue Shield provides and how they provide it. It is exactly the same structure we are proposing in our plan. It is a structure with which older Americans, most Americans, are extremely familiar. It is the same system that predominates in not only Blue Cross Blue Shield but virtually every other major private insurance plan.

These plans are based on the concept of using a pharmacy benefit manager, or PBM, as the intermediary between the beneficiary and the pharmaceutical companies.

What do these PBMs do? They negotiate directly with the pharmaceutical companies in order to achieve the lowest prices. They are held accountable for containing costs and providing quality care and service. If they fail to do so, their payments are reduced or can be eliminated.

To America's seniors, this plan would be like a pair of comfortable old shoes, shoes they have been wearing for most of their lives. Would it be fair to ask Medicare beneficiaries at the time of retirement to suddenly change shoes? Even more significant, would it be appropriate to ask them to put on shoes that don't fit very well? But even more than that, is it fair to ask them to put on shoes of a design which has never been worn by another American anywhere, any time?

That is what the House Republican plan runs on: An untried, untested delivery system that would force our seniors to be the guinea pigs for a social experiment.

Their plan would give to a different set of insurance companies taxpayers' dollars as a subsidy to lure them into the market since insurers have already said they don't intend to offer this benefit. They do not believe it is an appropriate use of the insurance system.

Our plan would be easy and familiar. Let me briefly mention some of the features of our plan. It would ask seniors who voluntarily elect to participate—no senior would be required to participate unless they chose to do so—to pay a $25 monthly premium. There is no deductible. There will be coverage from the first pill purchased after you sign up. There would be a copayment of $10 for generics, $40 for formulary necessary drugs, and $60 for other drugs. There would be a maximum payment out of pocket of $4,000 per year. Beyond that, there would be no more copayments.

The plan says what it means and it means what it says for all seniors all over America. Seniors with incomes below 135 percent of the poverty level would not pay premiums or copayments. Beneficiaries with incomes between 135 and 150 percent of poverty would pay reduced premiums. That is the plan.

We would allow all seniors a choice of which PBM to use. It would be required that there be multiple PBMs within every section of the country. Those of you who live in Georgia would have a choice. Those of us in Florida would have a choice. Those in North Dakota and Vermont would have a choice.

The PBMs would be accountable to the Medicare Program, would be required to prove their ability to contain costs, or else they wouldn't be awarded a contract to participate. In fact, they would not even get paid if they were unable to contain costs and provide the high-quality service which our older Americans deserve. That is in the language of the Graham-Miller-Kennedy-Cleland, and others, legislation.

The House Republican plan would leave all these choices in the hands of an insurance company. The companies would be allowed to choose the benefit for seniors. Why is that? The House plan only requires that the individual plan meet a vague standard of actuarial equivalence. It does not provide the certainty which American seniors deserve and which they will receive in the Graham-Miller-Kennedy-Cleland, and others, plan.

I look forward to a full discussion of this beginning next week.

I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

CONCLUSION OF MORNING BUSINESS

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Morning business is closed.

PUBLIC COMPANY ACCOUNTING REFORM AND INVESTOR PROTECTION ACT OF 2002

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senate will resume consideration of S. 2673, which the clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 2673) to improve quality and transparency in financial reporting and independent audits and accounting services for public companies, to create a Public Company Accounting Oversight Board, to enhance the standard setting process for accounting practices, to strengthen the independence of firms that audit public companies, to increase corporate responsibility and the usefulness of corporate financial disclosure, to protect the objectivity and independence of securities analysts, to improve Securities and Exchange Commission resources and oversight, and for other purposes.

Pending:

Edwards modified amendment No. 4187, to address rules of professional responsibility for attorneys.

Gramm (for McConnell) amendment No. 4200 (to amendment No. 4187), to modify attorney practices relating to clients.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada is recognized.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, this has been cleared by both managers of the bill. We have had a number of inquiries about the need for more time to talk on various issues. As the Chair knows, from 12:30 until 2 o'clock, we have our policy luncheon, and normally we don't have votes.

I ask unanimous consent that the previously scheduled order, which provided that Senator ENZI be recognized at 12 noon today to make a motion to table the McConnell amendment No. 4200, be modified to provide that the recognition of Senator ENZI occur at 12:45 today, with the additional 45 minutes, from 12 to 12:45, equally divided and controlled between Senators SARBANES and GRAMM, or their designees, and that all other provisions of the previous order remain in effect.

Mr. DORGAN. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I would like to engage in a brief discussion with my colleague from Nevada under my reservation of an objection, if I might. I shall not object to the specific request of the Senator, but I have just visited with the chairman of the committee and you know there exists a list of amendments that Members of the Senate wish to offer to this legislation.

As I have watched this process over the last couple of days, it appears to me that we have set up a gatekeeper of sorts for determining who will offer amendments and whether there will be votes on the amendments, and it appears to me we are not making very much progress. I would like to get some sense of whether we have a clear process beginning this afternoon, so that this afternoon and this evening we might be able to move through 6, 8, 10 amendments and get time agreements so Members of the Senate have the opportunity under the rules to offer and have considered amendments that they consider important in this legislation.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I say to my friend, the chairman of the committee has worked for hours and hours trying to get movement so people could offer relevant amendments. We have been not very successful, to be very candid with the Senator from North Dakota. I have stood by the Senator from Maryland and coerced, urged, and we haven't gotten to the debating point yet. We have done everything we can.

There are a number of Senators, not the least of whom is the Senator from North Dakota, who have amendments. There is the Senator from Michigan, the Senator from New York, and others who have spent a lot of time wanting to offer amendments. We are doing everything we can. We hope the Enzi motion to table will break some of this loose.

I say to my friend from North Dakota that we understand how he feels. The only thing I will say is there is no gatekeeper. On one bill the two managers said they would oppose any amendment that was not relevant, but that is not the case now. The Senator from Maryland has expressed to me that there are some relevant amendments which should be offered. He has done everything he can to—

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, who controls time?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senator from West Virginia controls the next 45 minutes. There is a unanimous consent request pending.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President—

Mr. DORGAN. Mr. President, reserving the right to object.

Mr. REID. If I can ask my friend to let me finish. I ask unanimous consent that the time in the colloquy between the Senator from North Dakota and the Senator from Nevada not take away from the time of the Senator from West Virginia.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DORGAN. Mr. President, continuing on my reservation—and it is not my intention to delay the Senator from West Virginia—I want to try to understand what is happening.

First, my comments should not in any way suggest that the chairman of the committee hasn't done an extraordinary job. I have great respect for him. But it has been difficult to get amendments up and get votes on them in the last day or two. There are a good number of very important amendments.

Under the reservation, I say that we know what has happened to the stock market in the last few days. We know this is a critically important issue—this legislation and the amendments to it. We ought not to treat this lightly. This piece of legislation ought to be on the floor and open for amendment, having a robust discussion on the very important issues dealing with corporate responsibility.

Instead, what is happening is we have a couple people on the floor who seem to want to stall this process and prevent amendments from being considered in order. I hope—and I will come back after lunch today—to offer at least two amendments. I want to debate them and get them voted on. At least as a Senator I have a right to do that.

It is very important to me that I be able to add these amendments. If the Senate doesn't like them, fine, we will vote. But it is important to me to have that opportunity. I shall not object to the unanimous consent request with respect to the tabling motion.

I wanted to say to the Senator from Nevada and the Senator from Maryland, who have done everything humanly possible to try to make this process work, that there are others in the Chamber who are trying to drag this process out and prevent others from offering amendments. I am going to assert my rights, to the extent I can, to say that before this bill is completed we need to have the best ideas everyone in the Senate has to offer about how to do this job.

The economy in this country is in significant trouble. We know it. The confidence the American people have in this economy and corporate governance has been shattered in many ways. It rests upon the shoulders of this institution to pass this legislation and do everything we can to make it the best piece of legislation possible to restore that confidence and give some lift to this economy. I wanted to make that point.

I appreciate the indulgence and the patience of the Senator from Nevada. If the Senator from Maryland will give me a chance to say this once again: In no way am I saying the chairman hasn't done everything humanly possible to move this along. He wants to move quickly. I shall not object.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, reserving the right to object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, I express my great admiration for what Senator SARBANES has done in presenting to America such a meaningful piece of legislation to deal with one of the great scandals that has occurred in the history of our free enterprise system, and taking a step toward restoring the confidence of the public in the investment community.

But as Senator DORGAN, I have an idea which, in fact, in one instance, is parallel to Senator DORGAN's; that is, I believe we need to be very clear that we are applying the same standards to corporations that have their corporate headquarters inside the United States as we do to corporations that take advantage of our capital markets and have chosen to locate or relocate their headquarters outside of the United States.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I am reclaiming my time.

Mr. GRAHAM. Reserving the right to object, there are enough incentives to do that already in the Tax Code and otherwise. We should not be creating additional incentives for companies to run from their responsibilities within the United States. My specific—

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I want the floor back.

Mr. GRAHAM. I am raising this today—

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I have the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada has the floor.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, I am reserving my right to object.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I have the floor.

Mr. GRAHAM. I will conclude my comments in short order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator can either object or not. Reserving the right to object occurs at the indulgence of those who have the floor.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, we have built in time for people to speak. It is not fair to Senator BYRD and others who have been waiting to speak. I have no problem with Senator GRAHAM coming. I agree with his position. There is time to be allowed under this unanimous consent agreement. Otherwise, the time will be all gone, and there are two Senators who have an hour and a half, by virtue of a unanimous consent agreement entered into last night.

It is not fair to use the extra half hour with these speeches that are taking away from Senator BYRD and Senator MCCONNELL.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. GRAHAM. Reserving the right to object, just for the purpose of concluding my remarks.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I will be happy to yield to the Senator when I get the floor. We cannot make long speeches on reservations to object. We either object or we don't. I object and then I will be happy to yield to the Senator. I want to be fair. Am I recognized?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia is recognized.

Mr. BYRD. How much time does the Senator wish?

Mr. GRAHAM. Just 1 minute.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I yield to the distinguished Senator from Florida for 1 minute, reserving my right to the floor.

Mr. GRAHAM. I appreciate the courtesy of the Senator. I want to bring to your attention an article from the Washington Post today. I ask unanimous consent that this article be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SEC CHAIRMAN PITT A POTENTIAL LIABILITY TO ADMINISTRATION

(By Dana Milbank)

While President Bush was delivering his long-awaited speech on corporate governance Tuesday, Securities and Exchange Commission Chairman Harvey L. Pitt was exactly where many Bush aides wanted him to be: on a week-long beach vacation.

"We were not surprised that the chairman was not included in administration plans for public appearances," SEC spokeswoman Christi Harlan said. "The commission is an independent agency."

White House officials, though calling it a coincidence, acknowledged they had no desire for Pitt's presence.

The arms-length treatment of Pitt underscores a dilemma for Bush and his radio-active SEC chairman. Many Democrats and even a few Republicans have called for Pitt's resignation because of his alleged conflicts of interest and ties to the accounting industry. There is no sign that Bush is even thinking of dropping Pitt. But whether Pitt stays or goes, he is a potential liability.

Dismissing Pitt would violate the Bush code of loyalty and would be viewed as validating Bush's critics, from Senate Majority Leader Thomas A. Daschle (D-S.D.) to Bush's Republican nemesis, Sen. John McCain (Ariz.). "Dropping Harvey Pitt right now would be an acknowledgment of wrongdoing where there's been no wrongdoing," said GOP lobbyist Ed Gillespie, a former Bush campaign aide.

Forcing Pitt out would also open the White House to charges of interfering in the SEC's investigation of Halliburton Co.'s activities when Vice President Cheney was its chief executive. Underscoring that danger, Halliburton shareholders yesterday filed a fraud lawsuit in Dallas against the company and Cheney. White House press secretary Ari Fleischer said the suit is "without merit." That prompted Larry Klayman, whose group, Judicial Watch, represents the shareholders, to accuse the White House of seeking to influence the SEC's investigation.

Yet Pitt's presence as the government's top securities watchdog carries dangers for Bush, too. Even some Pitt defenders say his close ties to the accounting industry limit his credibility as a reformer. In his first speech as SEC chairman last year, Pitt told an audience of auditors that the SEC would be "a kinder and gentler place for accountants."

"Pitt has been in hot water since day one and WorldCom turned it into a full boil," said GOP operative Scott Reed. Because Bush will not drop Pitt, Reed said, "McCain and the Democrats have turned him into a political piñata, and that will continue ad infinitum."

Democrat Chris Lehane, who defended Bill Clinton and Al Gore during that administration's scandals, said Bush is making the wiser political choice in keeping Pitt, even though Pitt could undermine faith in Bush's reforms. "Pitt could do everything right and nobody's going to give him credit for it," he said.

Pitt's foes point to his past legal work for executives of now-sullied corporations, including MCI, Merrill Lynch & Co., Arthur Andersen LLP and other accounting firms. He has also been criticized for meeting in April with a former client, KPMG Consulting Inc., while KPMG's audits of Xerox Corp. were being investigated by the SEC. Critics also say that as a lawyer, Pitt favored restricting federal oversight of auditing firms. Over the years, Pitt has represented figures such as Ivan Boesky and Michael Saylor in SEC actions.

Bush, in his Monday news conference, generously defended Pitt. "I support Harvey Pitt—Harvey Pitt has been fast to act," Bush said. Later, Bush added: "I'm going to give him a chance to continue to perform."

Privately, Bush has expressed amazement at the conflict-of-interest charges. "It's only in this town that people want someone who doesn't know what they're talking about to lead an agency," he told congressional Republicans visiting the White House yesterday.

Pitt has an unlikely defender in Lanny J. Davis, one of President Clinton's scandal handlers. "The attack being made by Democrats could be made on most anyone for having conflicts from prior positions," he said. But Davis said the administration has been making matters worse. "The more you bottle up Harvey Pitt, the more you allow Democrats to make him an issue," Davis said.

Observers on both sides expect Pitt to make a public effort to build his credibility by demonstrating that he can be hard on his old friends. Indeed, some in the administration joke that Pitt will come to resemble a model Democratic SEC chairman, one heavy on regulations.

The White House has distributed evidence of Pitt's activity on the job: requiring chief executive and chief financial officers of the 947 largest companies to personally recertify the accuracy of their disclosures; seeking to bar 54 officers and directors; and issuing a long list of new reporting rules and regulations.

Pitt was not Bush's first choice for the SEC job, and officials say he continues to be far from Bush's inner circle. The reforms Bush announced Tuesday were developed largely by Treasury Secretary Paul H. O'Neill and White House deputy staff chief Joshua Bolten, with help from Bush economic advisers Lawrence B. Lindsey and R. Glenn Hubbard.

But Bush is stubborn about demonstrating loyalty to his aides, which enables him to claim reciprocal loyalty. Officials say he continues to defend Army Secretary Thomas E. White, embattled because of his Enron Corp. ties and personal travel, because White has been faithful to Bush.

But when underlings act disloyal, Bush can quickly cut them loose. Linda Chavez was dropped as Bush's nominee to be labor secretary when it appeared she had misled those vetting her background. Michael Parker, the civilian chief of the Army Corps of Engineers, was ousted for complaining about administration budget cutting.

Pitt so far has demonstrated fealty to Bush, and Bush aides remain loyal to him. "The best thing to do is vigorously enforce the law, and that's what he's doing," Lindsey said.

Mr. GRAHAM. In this article, the President of the United States has given as one of his reasons to continue his support for the Chairman of the Securities and Exchange Commission, Chairman Harvey L. Pitt, the fact that Mr. Pitt has required chief executives and chief financial officers of the 947 largest companies to personally recertify the accuracy of their disclosures.

What was left out were all the American companies which have their corporate headquarters outside the United States of America. Apparently, the Chairman of the SEC believes he can discriminate and apply a principle only against those corporations which are sited in the United States and exclude corporations outside the United States.

That is an irrational and unfair distinction and one that we should correct as promptly as possible in this legislation.

I thank the Senator from West Virginia.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a unanimous consent request?

Mr. BYRD. Gladly.

Mr. REID. Madam President, I renew my unanimous consent request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Ms. LANDRIEU). Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. BYRD. Madam President, since the revelation last month of yet another corporate accounting scandal—this time involving the second largest telecommunications provider, WorldCom—the Bush administration seems to have lost its patience with corporate America. In fact, from the rhetoric we have heard from the administration in recent weeks, I expected to hear the President tell corporate America this week that his top advisors had been in the White House basement planning, not just a corporate fraud task force, but a new Department of Corporate Security.

The President said last month at the G8 summit in Canada, "The revelations that WorldCom has misaccounted [$3.8] billion is outrageous."

In his June 29 weekly radio address, the President warned corporate America that "no violation of the public's trust will be tolerated. The Federal Government will be vigilant in prosecuting wrongdoers to ensure that investors and workers maintain the highest confidence in American business."

The President apparently is so miffed with these corporate "wrongdoers" that he has elevated them in his rhetoric to a bad-guy level that is almost, but not quite as bad, as al-Qaeda's "evildoers." Almost the same level; perhaps not quite.

WorldCom president and CEO John Sidgmore, in a June 28 letter to President Bush, joined the President in expressing his outrage. "I want you to know that we, the current management team, are equally surprised and outraged . . . about past accounting irregularities at WorldCom," he said.

So the Bush administration and the CEO of WorldCom now both agree that American corporations teaming up with unscrupulous (or incompetent) accountants to mislead shareholders about how much money the company is making is an "outrageous" practice.

Madam President, how comforting it is. As Jackie Gleason used to say: "How sweet it is." How sweet it is. How comforting it is to know that we have finally reached a consensus on that issue.

Despite the excuses and the explanations, I find little credibility in the argument that certain corporate executives lacked sufficient knowledge to ask the right questions about their companies' accounting practices.

If CEOs are worth their generous pay, one would think they could take the time to make sure that the company's chief financial officer is not padding earnings by omitting costs from the balance sheet.

In fact, one finds disconcerting the acute lack of shame—the acute lack of shame—S-H-A-M-E—on the part of some of these corporate executives. Former Enron CEO Jeffrey Skilling told the House Energy and Commerce Oversight Subcommittee that Enron had tight control on financial risk, but that he could not be expected to oversee everything and "close out the cash drawers . . . every night."

Can you imagine that kind of statement? I think it was Wordsworth who said: No matter how high you are in your department, you are responsible for what the lowliest clerk is doing.

Let me repeat that. Wordsworth said: No matter how high you may be in your department, you are responsible for what the lowliest clerk is doing. That was William Wordsworth. Let's take that statement and put it beside the statement of former Enron CEO Jeffrey Skilling when he told the House Energy and Commerce Oversight Subcommittee that Enron had tight controls on financial risk but that he could not be expected to oversee everything and "close out the cash drawers . . . every night." Oh, that poor man. What a heavy burden he carried. That poor man. We can all shed crocodile tears for someone who is put into that very difficult position and then consider the kinds of salaries these people draw down.

Shakespeare said: "The quality of mercy is not strain'd, it droppeth as the gentle rain . . . upon the place beneath." I will tell you, it does strain gentle mercy when we read about these scandals that have swept over this country and how these people plead the fifth amendment when they are called up before Senate committees and House committees—plead the fifth amendment. That is a stunningly irresponsible attitude for a chief executive.

It is something that you might hear from the teenage manager of a fast food restaurant who cannot account for a handful of change missing from the cash drawer at the end of the night. You might hear that from the teenage manager of a fast food restaurant who cannot account for a handful of change missing from the cash drawer at the end of the night. But we are not talking about a handful of change. We are talking about the American public. Those eyes that are peering—they are peering at this Senate floor at this very minute through the lenses of those cameras. They are the taxpayers out there. I see them looking through those cameras. I see them in West Virginia. I see them in Texas. I see them in Wyoming. I see them in New York looking through those cameras.

We are talking about them, the American public having lost by some estimates tens of billions—not millions—tens of billions of dollars of invested savings in companies that issued false—the Ten Commandments, I keep them on my walls; some of these CEOs should keep them on their walls—financial reports and tens of thousands of workers who have lost their jobs, and many have lost their meager earnings that they, too, invested, that is what we are talking about.

So here is an individual who tells a House committee he cannot be expected to oversee everything and close out the cash drawers every night—such a stunning, irresponsible, arrogant attitude on the part of a chief executive. I say again it is something that you might expect to hear—you might—from the teenage manager of a fast food restaurant who could not account for a handful of change missing from the cash drawer at the end of the night.

We are not talking, let me say again, about a handful of change. We are talking about the American public, those people out there, Republicans and Democrats and Independents, in the Alleghenies, along the eastern coast, on the storm-beaten coast of Maine, the fishermen on the mighty deep, the people in the Plains and the Rockies and beyond. These are the people, north and south, the public. We are talking about the American public having lost, by some estimates, tens of billions of dollars of invested savings in companies that issued false—and they knew they were issuing false—financial reports. Tens of thousands of workers who have to wash the grime from their hands and their faces, workers in the fields, in the mines, in the shipyards, those are the people we are talking about, the public, tens of thousands of workers who have lost their jobs.

Even after these corporations' fraudulent accounting, somebody ought to go to jail, and the doors should be locked and the keys thrown away. Throw away the keys. It really would not be too severe a punishment for some of these four-flushers.

Even after these corporations' fraudulent accounting methods are exposed, the accounting games seem to continue. After telling the Securities and Exchange Commission that it hid nearly $4 billion in expenses last year, WorldCom submitted revised financial reports to the SEC which the SEC Chairman, Harvey Pitt, immediately called wholly inadequate and incomplete. Apparently, WorldCom's revised financial statements included additional accounting errors dating back to 1999 and 2000. That, Chairman Pitt said, could add at least $1 billion to the company's financial revision.

No wonder the trust of those people is broken. No wonder the public's trust in corporate America has eroded. What kind of trust can the public have in companies that hide information in an effort to pull the wool over the eyes of American investors?

After WorldCom's announcement, the Bush administration sharpened its rhetoric and is now working to assure the American public that it recognizes the importance of transparency and disclosure. The Chairman of the White House Council of Economic Advisers, Glenn Hubbard, said in an interview last month that the President wants to reassure investors about the economy while also delivering a shot across the bow to leaders of corporations that abuses of the public trust will not be tolerated.

In the midst of congressional hearings last March, after the collapse of Enron, the President lectured corporate America about how to regain the public's trust. He said corporations must disclose relevant facts to the investing public and they must focus on the interests of shareholders, who are the real owners of any publicly held enterprise, to properly inform shareholders and the investing public that we must adopt better standards of disclosure.

That is nice rhetoric, but this administration hardly sets the model for openness and transparency. In fact, this is an administration that prides itself on operating in secrecy and governing by surprise. Remember the secret government that was being set up? In fact, this is an administration, let me say again, that prides itself in operating in secrecy and governing by surprise.

I find it difficult to watch this administration lecture corporate America about virtues of disclosing information to the public while at the same time it is restricting the public's access to information about its own executive actions.

Last October, Attorney General John Ashcroft issued a memo encouraging Federal agencies to withhold unclassified records under the Freedom of Information Act, the law that gives the American public the legal right to certain Government information. The Attorney General even told the Federal agencies that the Justice Department would defend agency decisions to deny FOIA, Freedom of Information Act, requests.

Last November, the President issued an Executive order to limit access to Presidential papers that, under the Presidential Records Act of 1978, would normally be made available to the American public. The Executive order allows a former or a sitting President to block the release of records requested under the law by invoking "constitutionally based privileges." The words "constitutionally based privileges" are in quotation marks.

The American people would have to go to court to challenge the privilege claim. The order could even permit a former or incumbent President to impede requests for old records simply by withholding approval for their release, effectively negating the need for the Chief Executive to even make the claim of executive privilege.

We have had our own little taste of this side of the coin from the executive branch as we on the Appropriations Committee, Senator STEVENS and I, tried to have the administration let Tom Ridge come up before the committee and testify.

Then we see this creation of this mammoth reorganization of Government that sprang like Minerva, fully clothed and armed, from the forehead of Jupiter.

When this administration's chief executive talks about adopting better standards of disclosure, I hope that these executive actions are not what he has in mind. These are just examples of the administration directly restricting the public's access to government information. The administration has also moved to limit access by Members of Congress, who are elected by the people and responsible for the oversight of executive actions in the public's behalf.

Last December, the President gave notice that he was unilaterally withdrawing the United States from the Antiballistic Missile Treaty, allowing the administration to begin development of a new antiballistic missile defense system. Soon after, the Pentagon began to exempt missile defense projects from traditional reporting requirements and Congressional oversight, an overt attempt to keep the Congress and the American people in the dark about the progress of that system. As the administration requests additional defense funds, the Pentagon is taking further steps to shield cost estimates and time tables from the Congress, making it harder to keep the administration accountable for technical and budgetary assessments.

The Dark Ages were supposed to have ended in about 1000 A.D. They lasted 1,000 years, the Dark Ages. Reminiscent of the Dark Ages, an administration that believes in keeping a Congress in the dark, the American people in the dark, and we are hearing a lot of sword rattling about it. An attack on Iraq—the administration should level with the Congress. It is an equal branch. It is not a subordinate branch to the Government. It never has been, and I hope never will be. Let's hear more about this plan to invade Iraq. Watch out for August when Congress is out of town, or before the election. Who knows?

This reorganization of Government sprang like Aphrodite from the ocean foam, and she was carried on a leaf to the island of Crete. She later appeared in full dress before the gods on Mount Olympus. They were stunned with her beauty.

This is what we see. These ideas sprang from where? This idea to reorganize the Government—and I am concerned it will also reorganize the checks and balances of the Constitution unless we are watchful—sprang from the bowels of the White House, the creation of four individuals who are named in the public press. Not exactly the equal, perhaps, of that committee that wrote the Declaration of Independence—Thomas Jefferson, Benjamin Franklin, Roger Sherman, John Adams, and Livingston, those five. Not exactly.

But look at all the commotion that ideas has created. Look out, the Congress is being stampeded into putting its imprimatur on that idea. Well, some parts of the idea may be OK, but we should not be in too big a hurry.

And that is to say nothing of the fact that these executive actions toward secrecy have occurred during a period in which the President has refused to allow Tom Ridge, in his capacity as the Director of Homeland Security, to testify before the Congress, and in which the Comptroller of the General Accounting Office was forced to sue the Vice President of the United States to obtain information about the White House energy task force and its connections to Enron.

These are not the actions of an administration that believes in the virtues of disclosing information to the public. This is an administration that not only embraces the idea of operating in secrecy, but flaunts its abilities to hide information from the Congress and the American public.

Upon announcing its proposal for a new Department of Homeland Security, the administration bragged to the media about how the plan had been pieced together by just four men and a few trusted aides in the basement of the White House. As the work became more detailed and the working groups expanded, the code of silence was gravely explained to each new arrival. At the end of each meeting, all papers were collected: nothing left that room, we've been told. The work was completed before any member of the Congress was briefed on the plan. White House Chief of Staff Andrew Card even arrogantly proclaimed, "We consulted with agencies and with Congress, but they might not have known we were consulting."

Now, get that. I can hardly believe my eyes, except my eyes have seen this prior to my having stated it on the floor. White House chief of staff Andrew Card even proclaimed—I used the adverb "arrogantly," I will put it back in—White House chief of staff Andrew Card arrogantly proclaimed, "We consulted with agencies and with Congress but they might not have known we were consulting."

What a reflection on Congress. What is he saying about Congress? That is hardly a model of transparency that I want corporate America to follow.

We don't want to hear corporate CEOs saying we shared information with the American public, but they might not have known we were sharing it with them. The administration's euphoria for secrecy seems motivated in large part by its desire to implement a political agenda. That is what it is. A political agenda, regardless of whether it has the support of the American people.

Mr. REID. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRD. I would be glad to yield.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I have been listening to the Senator from West Virginia give his speech, and I am of the opinion maybe the reason all that secrecy takes place is they are running the White House like people run corporations. Rather than having a public institution as the administration and White House should be, maybe they are running the White House like a corporation.

I say to my friend that the White House, this administration is covered with corporate America. Maybe they think the White House is to be run like a corporation.

Mr. BYRD. The distinguished Senator from Nevada introduces an interesting idea. Maybe they do. Maybe anything goes. All is fair in love and in war they say. Now we can add, big business. Big business.

That is not a fair thing to say about many big businesses really because many of the people in big business are honest and try to do the right thing. They are open, they are transparent. It is too bad a few bad apples reflect on the whole barrel. I used to sell produce. I was a produce boy, married, with children coming on, and I found that a few bad peaches would quickly ruin the whole bushel. The same thing with apples and other fruits and so on.

When the administration's polls suggest opposition to certain policies from the American public, it limits access to information about that policy. I fear that the American public, and their elected representatives in Congress, at times are viewed by this administration as some sort of obstacle or hurdle that is to be avoided. There is a contempt, there is an arrogance in this administration, there is a contempt for Congress. They hold Congress in contempt.

This kind of executive mentality can only emanate from the arrogance of an administration that believes the White House is the fountain of wisdom in Washington. Wisdom is the principal thing. Such a mentality is dangerous, it is absolutely dangerous. I was here in the Nixon administration. I remember what happened to that administration. Such a mentality is dangerous. We need only look to the corporate accounting scandals which this administration has so harshly criticized in recent weeks to see why.

Most economic pundits seem convinced that the hyperactive stock market of the late 1990s was the catalyst for a slow, steady deterioration in professional and ethical standards in corporate America. The pressure on CEOs and companies to produce earnings, quarter after quarter, resulted in a kind of competitive behavior that encouraged companies to push the accounting envelope. Rising profits and stock prices provided cover for underlying ethical lapses. The longer the boom lasted, the more brazen these corporations became in cutting corners and taking a little more off the top.

By the end of the boom, many companies appear to have been engaged in the kind of fudging, gamesmanship and ethical corner-cutting that, while legal in some cases, was certainly less than ethical. Unfortunately, it was only after the stock market began its inevitable decline and great piles of money were lost that people began to ask the critical, penetrating questions that should have been asked earlier to prevent this kind of behavior in the first place. Those harder questions are now leading to accounting revisions, executive resignations, lawsuits, and criminal investigations.

So far, the reflexive instinct of the business community and the Bush administration largely has been to blame a "few bad apples," but that assertion is hardly consistent with the fact that the SEC opened 64 financial-reporting cases between January and March of this year, and that almost a thousand companies, not just a handful, have been asked to recertify to the SEC their financial statements through the last fiscal year.

It is somewhat ironic that the actions of chief executives were protected by soaring stock prices, since the administration finds itself in a similar position. Just like soaring stock, as long as the President's approval ratings remain high, presumably propped up by the American public's understandable desire to support the war on terrorism, the more latitude the administration will be granted in restricting information about its executive actions under the guise of national security. This kind of culture can be extremely dangerous. It was allowed to flourish in corporate America during the late 1990s, and now threatens the public trust.

The administration would do well to take some of its own medicine and make itself more transparent to the American public. For all of its expressed concerns about the public's loss of confidence in corporate America, this administration seems to have given little, if any, consideration to the loss of the public's trust in government. That is the most basic of commodities in republican government. I do not refer to it, as many politicians who ought to know better glibly refer to this, our system, as a democracy. They ought to go back and read Madison's 10th and 14th essays in the Federalist Papers. They will finally learn the difference—or be reminded of the difference. They probably have forgotten the difference between a democracy and a republic.

The public's trust in government—when the public loses its trust, when the public's trust is eroded, all is lost: The public trust. And sooner or later, high poll numbers will tumble, as they always do. We have seen them do it before.

Don't read the polls, I say to my colleagues, so assiduously, read the Constitution—which I hold in my hand. Read the Constitution. I say to the administration, I say to the executive branch, read the Constitution. Don't be so enamored with the polls. They are fleeting. Read the Constitution.

This administration's Chief Executive came into office touting himself as the first President to earn a master's degree in business administration. That is certainly more than I have. He announced that he would run the White House like a modern-day corporation. Ha-ha-ha; watch out.

To be fair, the President probably didn't realize at the time that he would be faced with the exposure of a corporate culture—not all his. The President probably didn't realize at the time that he would be faced with the exposure of a corporate culture which encouraged shoddy auditing, negligent or criminal management, and impudent and secretive corporate CEOs.

In hiding its own actions from the public view, this administration is fostering the same kind of arrogant, arrogant culture in which these corporate accounting scandals were allowed to flourish. This administration would do well to take preventive measures to keep the nasty, nasty little seeds of arrogance and secrecy that have affected corporate America from taking root in the executive branch and threatening the public's trust.

I close with a Biblical parable: Pride goeth before destruction, and the haughty spirit before a fall.

I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an article from today's Washington Post titled "Bush Took Oil Firm's Loans as Director"; and an article from today's Washington Times titled "Cheney named in fraud suit."

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

BUSH TOOK OIL FIRM'S LOANS AS DIRECTOR

(By Mike Allen)

As a Texas businessman, President Bush took two low-interest loans from an oil company where he was a member of the board of directors, engaging in a practice he condemned this week in his plan to stem corporate abuse and accounting fraud.

Bush accepted loans totaling $180,375 from Harken Energy Corp. in 1986 and 1988, according to Securities and Exchange Commission filings. Bush was a director of Harken from 1986 to 1993, after he sold his failed oil and gas exploration concern to the company. He used the loans to buy Harken stock.

Corporate loans to officers came under scrutiny after WorldCom Inc., the long-distance carrier that last month reported huge accounting irregularities, revealed it had lent nearly $400 million to Bernard J. Ebbers to buy the company's stock when he was chief executive. He resigned in April as the stock price tumbled.

Bush attacked corporate loans during his speech on Wall Street on Tuesday, when he offered proposals to tighten the accountability of corporate executives while stopping short of the tougher measures headed toward passage in the Senate. "I challenge compensation committees to put an end to all company loans to corporate officers," he said.

A senior administration official, briefing reporters on Bush's plan, said Tuesday that Bush wants public companies to ban loans to their officers, including directors. "Corporate officers should not be able to treat a public company like their own personal bank," the official said.

The contrast between Bush's record as a business executive and his rhetoric in the face of corporate scandals underscores the challenge his administration faces in trying to credibly foster what he calls "a new era of integrity in corporate America."

Bush was investigated by the SEC in 1991 for possible illegal insider trading, although the SEC did not take action against him, and he has admitted making several late disclosures to the agency, which regulates public companies.

Harken's loans to Bush—at 5 percent interest, below the prime rate—were reported several times in filings to the SEC in the years before the debt was retired in 1993 and were noted in news accounts at the time. The loans were for the purchase of Harken stock, which was then held as collateral.

Rajesh K. Aggarwal, a Dartmouth College professor who specializes in executive compensation and incentives, said such loans "are not unique, but are by no means widespread."

White House communications director Dan Bartlett said Harken offered the loans to directors to buy shares in the company as part of an incentive for board members "to have a long-term commitment with the company." Bartlett said the loans to Bush were "totally appropriate—there was no wrongdoing there."

"This is a common practice in small, medium and large companies," Bartlett said. "These recent abuses of certain types of loans led the president to believe that the government should draw a bright line concerning loans going forward. This is one of the main things that undermined the confidence of investors and shareholders."

Bartlett said the loans were for $96,000 in 1986, for 80,000 shares, and $84,375 in 1988, for 25,000 shares. He said that in 1993, Harken changed its compensation policies and discontinued the loan program. He said Harken converted to a program giving directors stock options, allowing them to buy stock later at a fixed price.

Bartlett, asserting that Bush did not profit on the loans, said Bush traded the 105,000 shares being held as collateral for the loans, retiring his debt. Bush then received 42,503 options under the new compensation plan, Bartlett said. The options were never exercised and expired after Bush left the board, Bartlett said.

With administration officials privately expressing concern about the impact of so much fresh attention to old questions about Bush's career, the White House yesterday distributed talking points headlined "If you get asked about Harken" to Bush loyalists who might be contacted by reporters. Bartlett said the fact sheets were sent to members of Congress after they asked for them.

White House press secretary Ari Fleischer said aides to Bush have "talked to the private accountants and private counsels who are involved in the president's private transactions" while preparing answers to reporters' question during the growing debate over corporate responsibility.

Vice President Cheney also is receiving unwanted attention to his corporate past. The SEC is investigating an accounting practice begun by Halliburton Co., the Dallas-based energy services company, when Cheney was chief executive before joining Bush's campaign ticket.

Also yesterday, the White House refused to release records of Bush's service on Harken's board. Bush had pointed to those records during a news conference on Monday when asked about his role in the sale of a subsidiary. The transaction later was used by Harken to mask losses.

"You need to look back on the director's minutes," Bush said.

Bartlett said the administration does not have the minutes and does not plan to ask Harken for them. "He personally would not have access to them," Bartlett said. "These are company documents. I can't release something I don't have."

Harken has declined to release board records ever since questions about Bush's record on the board were raised during his first campaign for Texas governor, in 1994.

Bartlett also said the White House would not accept a challenge by Senate Majority Leader Thomas A. Daschle (D-S.D.) on Sunday to ask the SEC to make public the records of its investigation into whether Bush had engaged in illegal insider trading of Harken stock.

Daschle said on CBS's "Face the Nation" that Bush would do well to ask the SEC to release the file. "We've had different explanations as to what actually occurred," Daschle said. "I think that would clarify the matter a good deal."

Bartlett said Bush will not do that. "Those are documents in the possession of an independent regulatory agency," Bartlett said. "I'm not in a position to call on them to do that. We've made available every relevant document we have in our possession."

Administration officials said they would take the same position about an SEC investigation that resulted in Harken's restating its earnings to show a $12.6 million loss for a quarter instead of an earlier reported loss of $3.3 million. Bush was a member of the board's audit committee.

CHENEY NAMED IN FRAUD SUIT

(By Patrice Hill)

Vice President Richard B. Cheney was named yesterday with the energy company he headed in a lawsuit by investors that cited bookkeeping practices under investigation by the Securities and Exchange Commission.

The lawsuit arranged by Judicial Watch, a government watchdog group, charges that Halliburton Inc. overstated its revenue by $534 million between 1998 and the end of last year by illegally booking revenue from oil construction projects that were in dispute and had not been collected from its clients. The suit says the accounting fraud resulted in overvaluation of Halliburton's stock, deceiving investors.

Mr. Cheney was Halliburton's chief executive from 1995 until August 2000, after he joined the Bush presidential campaign. The White House and Halliburton yesterday said the suit was without merit but both acknowledged that the SEC investigation is continuing.

"We are working diligently with the SEC to resolve its questions regarding the company's accounting practices," said Doug Foshee, Halliburton's chief financial officer. The claims in this lawsuit are untrue, unsupported and unfounded."

SEC Chairman Harvey L. Pitt has vowed to pursue the investigation. "We don't give anyone a pass," he told ABC's "This Week" on June 30. "If anybody violates the law, we go after them."

President Bush on Tuesday called for stronger SEC enforcement and longer prison terms for corporate executives found guilty of the kind of accounting fraud charged in the lawsuit. The suit was filed in the U.S. District Court in Dallas, where Halliburton is based.

A unified Senate approved harsh new penalties yesterday for corporate fraud and document shredding, adding enforcement teeth to Mr. Bush's plan to curb accounting scandals. In a series of unanimous votes, senators added the penalties to an accounting oversight bill moving toward passage.

Also named as a defendant in the lawsuit is the Arthur Andersen firm, Halliburton's former auditor, which was fired in April after the accounting firm was charged with obstructing an SEC investigation of Enron Corp. Andersen was convicted of the obstruction charge last month and is no longer permitted to audit public companies.

The suit says Andersen was a champion of "aggressive" accounting tactics and masterminded the bookkeeping maneuvers that defrauded Halliburton investors.

As evidence of Mr. Cheney's knowledge and approval of these maneuvers, the suit refers to his appearance in a promotional video for Andersen in which he said he got "good advice" from the firm, advice that went "over and above just the normal by-the-books auditing arrangements."

The lawsuit cites a critical accounting change made by Halliburton and Andersen in late 1998. Halliburton was facing losses because of a recession in the oil industry and cost overruns on construction contracts in which the company had negotiated fixed, or lump-sum, payment plans.

Before the accounting change, which was never formally disclosed to investors, Halliburton had booked the cost overruns as losses on such projects as long as they were in dispute and customers had not agreed to pay them.

But starting in 1998, the company booked payment for the cost overruns as revenue if it believed the disputes would be resolved and the customers would pay the bills.

As a result of this change, Halliburton showed a profit for several quarters in 1998 and 1999 when it otherwise would have posted losses, the suit charges. In some years, the disputed revenue appears to account for as much as half of the company's reported profits.

"Halliburton overstated profits that many American citizens relied upon," said Larry Klayman, chairman of Judicial Watch. "That's fraudulent security practices, and it resulted in those Americans suffering huge losses."

The suit says Halliburton and Andersen violated securities laws when they did not disclose and justify the accounting change in a letter to investors. Halliburton's financial statements starting in 1998 do note, however, that it was booking uncollected revenue from cost overruns.

Mr. REID. Madam President, if the Senator will yield for a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. BYRD. Yes. I yield.

Mr. REID. The Senator was allocated 45 minutes. Of course, we have other time. We have an extra 15 minutes. It is my understanding there are 4 or 5 minutes left. Is that right?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There are 3½ minutes remaining.

Mr. REID. If the Senator so desires, we could also allocate 15 minutes to the Senator from West Virginia if he has more to say.

Mr. BYRD. Madam President, I thank the distinguished majority whip for his courtesies and generosity, and for his characteristic ways of helping his colleagues. I think I will let my remarks remain today as they are. I thank him.

I yield the floor.

Mr. REID. Madam President, while there are a couple of minutes remaining of the Senator's time, I am sure the chairman of the committee joins with me in expressing our pleasure at being able to listen to such a profound statement which the Senator made. I think it again is what this is all about. By "this," I am talking about the legislation.

I talked with a friend of mine. We played football together as young men. He runs a company in Las Vegas. He said: HARRY, I took all of my money out of the stock market. I will never invest in the stock market until something is done. He said: I am afraid. I said: We all feel that way.

I think the Senator really condensed what is going on in corporate America. It needs to be changed, and hopefully this legislation will help that.

Mr. BYRD. Madam President, let me express my gratitude to the distinguished Senator for his comments.

And with respect to the manager of this legislation, let me state without any equivocation that this is one of the finest minds I have seen in the Senate. I have been here 44 years. I have seen the equivalent of the entire Senate come and go, and I have never seen a sharper intellect. I have seen some sharp ones—John Pastore, Herman Tamadge, and there are others. I have never seen any sharper than that of PAUL SARBANES, in my judgment. I don't know a great deal about the intelligence quotients. I don't know what the high range is. I assume it could be 150, or 155, or 160—whatever it is. PAUL SARBANES is the brightest.

Also, he has a way about him of not flaunting his intellect in front of others. Most of us—not because of that kind of intellect—have been inclined to speak more often—maybe too much, and perhaps I do already, but not because of that kind of intellect. But I salute the manager and commend that kind of intellect. He applies it. I watch him in the committees, and I watch him on the floor as he manages a bill. He is never a man to act in haste, or to be too rhetoric in haste. I admire his patience. He is plotting; he is studying; he is working; and he is extremely effective.

When I was majority leader, there were certain Senators I would call into my office from time to time. I would try to pick their brains as to what we should do on this or that. Scoop Jackson was one. PAUL SARBANES is always there.

Mr. REID. Madam President, will the Senator yield for a comment?

Mr. BYRD. Yes.

Mr. REID. What the Senator is saying is that the Rhodes Scholar Committee a number of years ago made a good choice in selecting PAUL SARBANES to be a Rhodes scholar. Is that what the Senator is saying?

Mr. BYRD. I am saying exactly that. I am happy the distinguished Senator put it that way.

This bill before the Senate is the product of that kind of mind, that kind of attention, and that kind of dedication.

I hope we can pass this bill with an overwhelming vote, and, also in conference so that when put on the President's desk he can sign it. I am eager to support it in any way I can.

Before I yield the floor, let me say that when we talk about intellect and sharp intellects, this man from Texas, PHIL GRAMM, is another. He is sharp. I have talked to my staff many times about that kind of intellect. He can talk about anything. He doesn't need a script. I have prided myself on working with him on several challenges, and I have found him to be fair and straightforward.

I admire people—like these two—having that kind of sharp intellect.

I was told by an old Baptist pastor, former chief chaplain in the Army during the war—I don't remember which war it was. But he always said: The mark of brilliance is to surround yourself with brilliant people.

I am really proud to look around this Chamber and see people such as PAUL SARBANES and PHIL GRAMM. Sometimes I say that North Dakota has the highest overall quotient, perhaps of all, with its two Senators—Senators CONRAD and DORGAN. I don't know whether they are Rhodes scholars or not. I am not a Rhodes scholar. I was not fortunate enough. I just barely made it by working at night for 10 years just to get a law degree. But these people make me proud to serve in this body.

Let me yield to the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. SARBANES. Madam President, I thank the distinguished Senator for his extraordinarily generous remarks. I am very appreciative of them.

I want to echo what the very able Senator from Nevada said about the Senator's eloquent address just a few minutes ago, which is reflective of the pattern that he has established—which is to go on the floor of the Senate and go to the very fundamentals of what our system is all about. His constant reference to the Constitution draws us back to those fundamentals. The Senator has always put before the Senate this broader and deeper vision of why we are here, what we ought to be doing, and calling us back to our basic principles as a nation—right back to the Founding Fathers—as the Senator pointed out in his talk today. Important aspects of that are being challenged today in a very serious way.

I echo what my colleague said and express my appreciation to the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. BYRD. Madam President, I thank the distinguished Senator. I am going to yield the floor.

Before I yield it, I apologize to the distinguished Senator from Kentucky, Mr. MCCONNELL. He is a Republican and I am a Democrat.

I have been known to go down into Kentucky at his invitation and speak, and I value his friendship. I apologize to him for imposing on his time.

Mr. GRAMM. Before the Senator yields, if he would yield very briefly to me, I thank him for his very sweet comments. I am very happy to be named along with PAUL SARBANES. And someday when I am talking to my grandchildren about the fact that their grandpa actually was a pretty important guy in his day—though his mind, I am sure, at that point will have seemed to have largely slipped away—I will say: I got to serve with the great ROBERT C. BYRD.

Mr. BYRD. I thank the Senator.

AMENDMENT NO. 4200

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kentucky will now be recognized for up to 45 minutes.

Mr. MCCONNELL. Thank you, Madam President.

I rise to speak on behalf of the McConnell amendment which will be voted on sometime in the not too distant future. It is my understanding that my own colleague, Senator ENZI, may make a motion to table at the end of the debate. So let me, at the outset, say I support the Edwards-Enzi amendment.

The second-degree amendment that is pending at the desk, which I will shortly discuss, does not, in any way, change or diminish the Edwards-Enzi amendment. I think it is a good idea.

However, I think it simply does not go far enough.

I also supported the Leahy amendment yesterday after my amendment to combat union fraud was defeated. I will continue to support responsible corporate accountability measures in this bill.

My only point is, corporations do not have a monopoly on misconduct, deception, and fraud. As long as we are addressing professional misconduct, deception, and fraud, we ought to recognize this is a problem in our entire professional culture, not just in corporate culture. Let me repeat that. This is a problem in our entire professional culture, not just in corporate culture.

I understand the mood at the moment is to beat up on corporations. And they deserve it. That is what the underlying bill is about. On the other hand, to ignore other areas of abuse, it seems to me, is to miss an opportunity to address the problem in a broader way.

The Senator from North Carolina raises real problems with the ethics and conduct of corporate lawyers. I commend him for that. And I commend the Senator from Wyoming for that. But I have long sought to curb similar and well-documented abuses in the general practice of law, specifically in the case of personal injury law.

Let me say at this point that the McConnell amendment applies only to Federal claims and Federal courts. We are talking here about Federal claims and Federal courts. My point in offering this amendment is not to obstruct but to extend and enhance our debate on professional conduct.

We ought to set standards for corporate attorneys. I favor that. And we ought to set standards for personal injury lawyers as well. Corporations and corporate attorneys do not have a monopoly on misconduct. We are doing a real disservice to the American public if, during this important debate on professional misconduct, we turn a blind eye to abuses in our society that have been piling up way before—long before—Enron, WorldCom, and Global Crossing.

All too often we hear stories about lawyers who take advantage of their clients by not informing them of the legal fees and costs those clients will incur. This sad practice results in consumers of legal services receiving next to nothing in personal injury and other claims.

Let me recount the story of Diana Saxon. Ms. Saxon was a victim of, among other things, attempted forcible rape. The defendant was convicted, and Ms. Saxon brought a personal injury action against that defendant. The attorney she hired said the fee he was going to charge was 40 percent, plus costs.

Ms. Saxon received an award of $25,000. Of that, per her agreement, $8,300 went to her lawyer in attorney's fees. But an additional $20,716 went to her lawyer for expenses. However, none of those costs was made known to Ms. Saxon during the course of the litigation. She was only informed of them after her case was concluded.

Now, it gets even better—or, for Ms. Saxon's unfortunate situation, it gets worse. After her lawyer charged her his costs, she ended up owing her attorney $4,000—$4,000. That is right. For poor Ms. Saxon, she was actually left over $4,000 in the hole, in debt.

Now, to be fair, Ms. Saxon's lawyer was actually magnanimous in that he waived a few costs and a small portion of his fee so that she was actually able to walk away with the princely sum of $833—$833.

In his letter to her, where he agreed to offer her these few hundred dollars from her award of $25,000, he wrote:

I'm agreeable to pay the sum of $833. This is the only money you will receive from your $25,000 settlement.

So, in sum, even though Ms. Saxon's lawyer told her that the lawyer would get 40 percent of her award, plus costs, in reality, after including these costs, he got 96 percent—96 percent—of her award. That is right, 96 cents on every dollar that Ms. Saxon received.

We need to make sure that consumers of legal services are not duped by this type of inaccurate and incomplete information.

Let me quote Ms. Saxon. She has put the problem better than I could. Here is what she had to say:

This is not how our civil justice system is supposed to work. What happened to me should never happen to anyone again. You have a chance today to make a difference by passing a law to protect people from the kind of thing my attorney did to me. Had I known in advance or at some point along the way how little of my lawsuit was going to benefit anyone but my lawyer, I might have thought different about enduring 2 years of emotional trauma during the litigation.

Summing up what she had to say: Had she had any idea how little of the money she might get, she might not have wanted to endure the trauma of this litigation for 2 long years.

Now, Ms. Saxon, in a sense, was lucky in that at least her lawyer told her she would be liable for costs, although he obviously did not tell her the magnitude of the costs she was looking at and, thereby, completely misled her.

But as these excerpts from the Yellow Pages here in the District of Columbia area phonebook indicate, some lawyers are not even that candid.

So let's take a look at the first chart out of the DC phonebook. On this first chart, we have an ad with the big banner entitled "AUTOMOBILE ACCIDENTS." There is a line almost as big—the fourth line down—proclaiming: "No Recovery, No Legal Fees"—"No Recovery, No Legal Fees." It does not say anything about the cost the plaintiff is going to have to bear and, therefore, does not paint an accurate picture.

Let's take a look at the second chart, again out of the DC phonebook. It has a big banner down the right side entitled "PERSONAL INJURY." At the top is says: "Personal Injury Lawyers Who Put You First." "The Firm Boasts an All-Star Roster of Top Personal Injury [Lawyers]." And it makes the point: "No fee if no recovery." But, again, like the last ad, it does not mention at all anywhere in the ad—nowhere in all of this ad—that the client will be liable for costs.

Let's take a look at chart No. 3. This ad is marginally—marginally—better. At the top of the ad there is a headline, in bold, saying: "Legal Problems Require a Lawyer." Obviously, legal problems require a lawyer. About midway down is a line item saying: "Call Me. I can help." "Call me. I can help." And right below this line, another line says: "No Legal Fee If No Recovery." In a little bit smaller print you will notice, "No Legal Fee If No Recovery." But this lawyer, at least, to his credit, has an asterisk by this line. If you look very carefully, you see an asterisk; and way down here at the bottom of the ad, in minuscule print—which might require you getting your glasses adjusted or to get a magnifying glass—it says: "Cost May Be Additional."

This lawyer at least gets credit in his ad for mentioning that there might be some cost, although you better have your glasses adjusted in order to find it.

Chart No. 4 is a familiar pitch, that there be "no legal fees unless recovery." This lawyer, to his credit, at least has it in print large enough to where you might actually see that line. But there is, of course, an asterisk; down here at the bottom, again, in tiny, minuscule print, "Clients may be responsible for reasonable fees."

This lawyer, at least, gets some credit—be the print ever so small—for pointing out that there could be a cost involved, and maybe a careful client would see that in the ad.

Chart No. 5, really my favorite one, it has a big banner at the top, "accidents," all the way across the top. You wouldn't have any trouble missing that. Underneath, "No legal fee if no recovery." Very enticing observation to an injured client, potential client, and there is an asterisk after it.

Going to the bottom of the page, below the Visa and MasterCard logos, it says, "excluding costs." That is about the smallest print on the ad. But a careful potential client might be able to find that there could conceivably be a cost attached to this.

Frankly, I am not sure if this phrase means that costs are excluded and, therefore, you don't have to pay for these either, or if it means that costs are excluded from the exclusion, which means you do have to pay for them. A consumer of legal services should not be enticed by the prospect of free legal services, including what appears to be an exclusion of cost from the charges for which he is responsible.

As I will shortly describe, the amendment I am offering would help prevent people from being duped by incomplete and misleading representations such as these. Let me repeat that the scope of my amendment is not every court in America but only applies to Federal claims and Federal courts.

Shifting gears for a moment, we also hear stories of ambulance chasers who take advantage of grieving families when they are most vulnerable. For example, at the scene of a 1993 collision between two commuter trains in Gary, IN, witnesses reported seeing lawyers' business cards being passed around at the scene of the accident. And the injured were being videotaped as they were removed on stretchers.

After an August 1987 crash of a commercial airline flight in Detroit, a man posing as a Roman Catholic priest, Father John Irish, appeared at the scene to console families of the victims. He hugged crying mothers and talked with grieving fathers of God's rewards in the hereafter. Then he would hand them the business card of a Florida attorney, urging them to call the lawyer, and then the father would disappear.

We should make sure that misleading ads and shameless ambulance chasing do not occur. I propose a clients' bill of rights for consumers of legal services. We have talked a lot in recent years about a Patients' Bill of Rights to make sure patients are treated properly by health maintenance organizations. We need a clients' bill of rights to make sure consumers of legal services are treated fairly.

This clients' bill of rights would do two things. The first thing it would do is require consumers of legal services to receive basic information at the beginning, during the course, and at the end of the case so that all along the way the client, the consumer of legal services, has a clear understanding of what the financial relationship is between the lawyer and the client.

As the old saying goes: Knowledge is power. My amendment empowers consumers by giving them the knowledge they need to make informed decisions about their legal representation. As I pointed out earlier in one of my examples, there was a lady who had no earthly idea, because of not receiving proper information about the extent of the cost that could be involved in her case, that after getting a $25,000 settlement she would essentially get nothing. The lawyer then benevolently gave her $833.

So clients need information all along the way to make informed decisions about legal representation.

At the initial meeting before they are retained, under the McConnell amendment, attorneys would have to provide would-be clients with the following things—and this is not unreasonable; it's elementary justice—No. 1, the estimated number of hours that will be spent on the case; No. 2, the hourly fee or the contingent fee that will be charged; No. 3, very importantly, the probability of a successful outcome; next, the estimated recovery reasonably expected; next, the estimated cost or expenses the plaintiffs will bear; and whether a client will be subject to fee arrangements with other lawyers.

This is elementary consumer protection. Let me say to my friends in the Senate who are close to and allied with the plaintiffs' lawyers in America: We are not talking about capping anybody's fees. This is not about capping fees. The fee arrangement could still be whatever astronomical amount the lawyer believes he can charge. But we are talking about providing basic information to the client so the client can understand what the fee arrangement is going to be. There are no fee caps in this amendment.

Monthly statements: My amendment would also require lawyers to provide their clients with monthly statements so that consumers of legal services will be informed on a regular basis of the basic progress of their case. Specifically, the lawyers would have to tell clients how much time they are expending on their case, what they are spending their time doing, and what expenses they are incurring in the case. Again, this is basic information clients should receive so they know how their case is progressing and how in essence their money is being spent.

Then an accounting at the end of the case: Clients should receive basic information at the end of the case so they know exactly what they paid for during their representation. To this end, my amendment provides that within 30 days after the end of the case, attorneys shall provide clients with the number of hours expended; the amount of expenses to be charged; the total hourly fee or the total contingency fee in a contingency fee case; the effective hourly fee charged, which would be determined by dividing the total contingency fee by the total number of hours expended.

Again, this is elementary, reasonable information, no fee caps, just providing reasonable information to the client at the end of the case so they can understand just what the legal services have provided.

Madam President, in the age of disclosure, I cannot believe that my colleagues would not support some basic disclosures that the first part of my amendment would provide. It does not limit—I say again—attorney's fees in any regard. There are no fee caps of any sort in this amendment. Frankly, I would like to see that. We have had fee caps under the Federal Tort Claims Act for years, and I am told there is no dearth of lawyers prepared to bring tort claims against the United States. But there are not any fee caps in this legislation. That is something a large number of Members of the Senate do not support. The first part of my amendment simply enables consumers of legal services to make informed choices.

The second thing my amendment does is establish a bereavement rule. A bereavement rule means the provision for a period of mourning, or a period of bereavement, during which lawyers would have to be respectful of injured victims or their families. As I mentioned, this provision is important because there are disturbing stories of ambulance-chasing lawyers who prey upon victims and their families when these people are the most vulnerable.

To address this problem, my amendment simply provides that there will be no unsolicited communication by lawyers to victims, or to their families, regarding an action for personal injury, or wrongful death, for 45 days from the date of death or personal injury—just 45 days to give the victims, or their families, an opportunity to begin to get their feet back under them before they start considering which lawyer, if any, they want to retain to pursue the legal action to which they may be entitled.

Let me repeat. This amendment applies only to unsolicited communications. If the victims or their families are feeling like it 2 days after the event, they are certainly free to call whomever they choose. This only applies to unsolicited communications to victims or their families. Injured parties and their families are free to contact whomever they want whenever they want.

Madam President, there is precedent for this respectful, considerate principle in existing Federal law. In 1996, we passed legislation that prohibited lawyers from engaging in unsolicited communications for 30 days following an airline disaster. Let me say it again. There is precedent for a bereavement rule already in Federal law. In 1996, we passed legislation that prohibited lawyers from engaging in unsolicited communications for 30 days following an airline disaster. Just 2 years ago, in 2000, we extended this prohibition to 45 days from the date of an airline crash. That prohibition is codified at 49 U.S.C. section 1136(g)(2).

The point I am making here is that there is precedent in Federal law already for a bereavement rule, and this simply expands upon that preference and provides this protection for additional victims during a period of mourning.

Madam President, someone who has been killed or injured in a train crash or a shipping accident is just as dead, or just as injured, as someone who is killed or injured in an airline crash. These victims and their families deserve the same type of respect and consideration. All these types of victims and their families are in a vulnerable state where it is easy for them to be pressured or taken advantage of.

The second part of my amendment would afford victims of other tragedies the same protection that we afford victims of airline disasters. The language in my amendment that we used to do so is virtually identical to current Federal law. It would guarantee these people a reasonable period of time to grieve, collect their thoughts, and to think clearly about what action they want to take and who they want to take such action on their behalf.

As I said, there is current precedent for it in Federal law, and I hope my colleagues will support it, along with the disclosure provisions in my amendment.

Madam President, what is the time situation?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has 20 minutes remaining.

Mr. MCCONNELL. Madam President, let me sum up what the McConnell amendment is. There are essentially two parts to it. First, it would require that lawyers provide to their clients all along the way, from initially being retained until the conclusion of the case, adequate consumer protection information so the clients will have a sense at every stage of the case how the case is moving along, what the likelihood of success is and, very importantly, what kind of costs the client may be incurring in the course of the litigation.

Secondly, we provide for a bereavement rule of 45 days to give the victims and their families an opportunity to get back on their feet during an atmosphere in which unsolicited efforts to retain these victims are put off. If, however, the family at any point during that 45-day period decides it is ready to move on and wants to look at its legal options, there is nothing in the amendment that would prevent the victim or victim's families from retaining a lawyer at any time. All this does is protect them from unwanted solicitations for a brief period of 45 days following the occurrence of the event.

As I pointed out, there is already precedent in Federal law for such a bereavement period of 45 days. That applies in the wake of airline disasters.

Finally, let me repeat this because I know this is something that is offensive to many Members of the Senate, particularly on the other side of the aisle. As much as I would like to see fee caps established, this amendment has no fee caps in it. Even though, under the Federal Tort Claims Act, since the late 1940s, we have had a fee cap of 25 percent in tort actions against the Federal Government, no such fee cap is in this amendment.

So I think this is a modest proposal to provide consumer protection to victims of accidents as they contemplate their futures and determine, first, which lawyer to hire, and after hiring the lawyer, have adequate information along the way to make sure they understand what the fee arrangement is.

I yield the floor and retain the remainder of my time and now urge—and I will also do so later—the Senate to adopt this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mrs. CLINTON). Who yields time?

Mr. SARBANES. Madam President, can I inquire as to what the allocation of time is? Let me make a parliamentary inquiry. I understand the vote on a motion to table that will be offered by Senator ENZI is scheduled to take place at 12:45.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct.

Mr. SARBANES. Can the Chair inform us as to the allocation of time from now until quarter to 1?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The unanimous consent agreement provided that the time between the conclusion of Senator MCCONNELL's remarks and the 12:45 p.m. vote will be evenly divided between Senators GRAMM and SARBANES, and Senator MCCONNELL has a remaining amount of time of 16 minutes.

Mr. SARBANES. Sixteen minutes?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct.

Mr. MCCONNELL. Madam President, is it the Senator's thought we move up the vote?

Mr. SARBANES. Staff has made an announcement, and people have planned accordingly. I understand that is the situation on both sides of the aisle for that matter. It was announced earlier on. People, therefore, made plans accordingly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If Senator MCCONNELL used all of his remaining time, each side would have approximately 10 minutes.

Mr. MCCONNELL. I say to my friend from Maryland, I will be happy to hear from the other side on the amendment. I am reluctant to yield back my time until I know the extent of the debate in which we are going to engage. In any event, the vote, Madam President, occurs at quarter to 1?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct.

Mr. MCCONNELL. I retain the remainder of my time until such time we decide otherwise. I have not heard from the other side.

Mr. SARBANES. As I understand the agreement, I do not think others can use time until the Senator from Kentucky uses his time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is the Chair's understanding.

Mr. MCCONNELL. I suggest we divide the remainder of the time between now and the vote. Will that be acceptable?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. SARBANES. I ask unanimous consent that the remaining time between now and quarter of 1 be divided equally to the manager of the bill, to Senator ENZI, and to Senator MCCONNELL. That will give us about 10 minutes each, I think.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from Maryland.

Mr. SARBANES. Madam President, I will speak briefly to the McConnell amendment which has been added as a second-degree amendment to the Edwards-Enzi amendment. Before I address that amendment itself, let me again indicate my very strong support for the underlying first-degree amendment, the Edwards-Enzi amendment, which was very carefully worked out and I believe represents a constructive suggestion. I am hopeful we can get to that amendment and have a vote on it sometime in the near future.

Obviously, the way things are now structured, we have to dispose of the McConnell second-degree amendment in order to get to the Edwards-Enzi amendment, but I think the Edwards-Enzi amendment warrants both the attention and the support of this body. I hope at some point we will be able to do that.

I am not going to address the substance of the McConnell amendment, or perhaps I will discuss it only in passing. I simply wish to observe that it is not relevant to this bill. It is talking about a client's bill of rights which may or may not be a worthy subject to examine.

How we regulate the lawyers is a complicated problem, obviously. It has mostly been done at the State level. The Senator from Kentucky has some sweeping proposals on a national basis, and they may warrant examination, but I certainly do not think they warrant coming into this debate on a very different issue. I do not know that there has been any study of it. I do not think this represents the recommendation or the report of any committee that is putting this forward, having undertaken an appropriate series of hearings in order to examine the subject. I have not had the benefit of testimony from the proponents and opponents. In fact, if the Senator from Kentucky will yield for a question, has a committee of the Senate recommended anything like this?

Mr. MCCONNELL. I say to my friend from Maryland, no committee of the Senate recommended the energy bill on which we spent 6 weeks in the Senate, and the majority leader has bypassed committees consistently throughout the last year. So I do not know that the Senate was constrained in any way—

Mr. SARBANES. It may be a response to say to me it was done somewhere else. I have a very specific question: Has a committee of the Senate recommended this proposal?

Mr. MCCONNELL. I would like to provide my own answer. If the Senator is asking for an answer from the Senator from Kentucky, I would like to be able to express myself, if that is OK with the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. SARBANES. The Senator from Kentucky is very skilled. I watched him on these television programs. I know he is very good when the question is put to him to give the answer he wants to give, even though it is not directed to the question. Obviously, I will have to go through that same experience on the floor of the Senate now.

Mr. MCCONNELL. I thank my friend from Maryland for his compliment and respond, as with many other bills over the last year that we dealt with on the floor of the Senate, it has not been reported by a committee. But many worthwhile ideas have been adopted and made a part of law that have been recommended by both Democratic and Republican Senators that, in the years my friend and I have been here, were not officially reported out of a committee.

Mr. SARBANES. Have any hearings been held on these proposals—the bereavement period and the fees proposal? Have hearings been held on those issues?

Mr. MCCONNELL. I am unaware of any hearings to that effect, but I ask my friend from Maryland why he thinks something as elementary as this, something as obviously as fair as this, and in the case of the bereavement rule, which we adopted in Federal law for families and victims of airline crashes, would not be an appropriate thing to do with or without hearings?

Mr. SARBANES. It seems to me there are complicated issues that are raised by Senator MCCONNELL's proposal, and they certainly should have been preceded by hearings in which the pros and cons could have been carefully examined.

Madam President, I reiterate my point, this amendment is not relevant to the issue before us. It does not come to us on the basis of any hearings that back up or buttress the proposal. It has not worked through any committee. It certainly has not been recommended by any committee, and there have not even been any hearings, as I understand it, by any committee.

At the appropriate time, I will be very strongly supportive of the motion to table that will be offered by the able Senator from Wyoming. This is, of course, the second McConnell second-degree amendment we have had to deal with on this legislation.

I hope the Senator from Kentucky does not view this as a kind of fair hunting game to bring forth at each step along the way, whenever there is an opening for a second-degree amendment, whatever sort of pet project he has been harboring in his office for whatever period of time.

I reserve the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. MCCONNELL. I yield myself some of my time to respond to my friend from Maryland.

As I listened carefully to my friend from Maryland, he is straining to think of a good argument against this worthwhile amendment. It has been my experience over the years in the Senate that when we start saying there has been no committee action, there have been no hearings, we are having a hard time thinking of a good argument against the proposal on the merits.

So let me repeat again what the merits are. It seems to me we do not need committee hearings or committee action to convince us that a 45-day bereavement rule for victims and their families, which we have already adopted in Federal law for victims and families of plane crashes—we do not need committee action to tell us this is a fundamentally appropriate thing to do.

Do we need hearings and committee action to tell us that in Federal claims and in Federal cases it is appropriate and only right that lawyers provide information to their clients at the beginning, during, and at the end of their handling of the case as to the possible costs involved? That is what is before us, not the issue of whether or not we should have hearings on this or whether or not the committee should act. My goodness, we spent 6 weeks on an energy bill that the committee did not pass out of the Energy Committee. We do that frequently. The Senate is not known to be constrained by tight rules of germaneness, nor by official committee action.

So I urge my colleagues to look at the amendment itself, not these rather extraneous arguments seeking to divert our attention away from what the amendment itself provides, which is protections for consumers of legal services.

I reserve the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maryland.

Mr. SARBANES. Madam President, on the energy analysis, I simply point out that the Energy Committee held extended hearings over a long period of time on the energy issue. Then, they did not actually evolve a bill, but they had a very full set of hearings and a lot of recommendations available to be included in an energy package.

On the other, I say to my colleague, I forbore from discussing the substance because I did not want to prejudice the Senator on some future occasion by having to go substantively into the weaknesses and deficiencies of the proposal that is before us. Since the time is limited and that would take quite a while to do, I intend to continue to do that out of a sense of consideration to my colleague because presumably, if this amendment is tabled, he will be back visiting with us on another day, perhaps on an appropriate vehicle. I do not know. One would have to wait and see whether that would be realized.

Out of some deference of respect for my friend from Kentucky, I simply thought I would not undertake to go into this point by point on the substance because it is really not appropriate. We ought to recognize that and go ahead and table the amendment, and maybe when it finally comes up in an appropriate context, we can then address its substantive weaknesses or strengths. Perhaps at that time it would have evolved into a different animal.

I reserve the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

The Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. ENZI. Madam President, I yield myself such time as I may consume. At 12:45, I will be making a motion to table the McConnell second-degree amendment to amendment No. 4200. We are working on a bill that I have spent hundreds of hours on, part of them in hearings, much of the time in drafting my own legislation, then working with Senator GRAMM to come up with an even better bill, and then working with Senator SARBANES to come up with the bill we have before us.

There is a crisis in the stock market. Two days ago, it dropped by 185 points. Yesterday, it dropped by 285 points. Some suggest that is because Congress is working on this issue and it is scaring the heck out of the people of the United States. I hope that is not the case. I hope it is a sign that they do want to have a solution, and they want to have a solution quickly. We do have the solution that, combined with the House bill, can serve the purpose of restoring the confidence of American investors.

The McConnell amendment is a clients' bill of rights to reform the way attorneys treat their clients. It is not about securities and exchange. It is all about attorneys. Senator EDWARDS and I modified our amendment so it applies only to action before the Securities and Exchange Commission. That was so that if this debate draws out with multiple second-degree amendments well beyond the time we have the cloture vote, our amendment will still be germane.

A standard that the Senator from Texas, Mr. GRAMM, has put on amendments is that they be germane. He did an extensive speech last night about the need to do germane amendments and get this finished.

This amendment is good and well intended. It requires attorneys to do a number of things in representing those who put their trust in attorneys' hands, and this includes requiring attorneys to provide written disclosure to their clients on the number of hours that will be spent on their case, the attorney's hourly or contingent fee, the probability of successful outcome, estimated recovery of costs, and bereavement.

Under normal circumstances, I probably would be very excited about this bill. The reason I am opposing it is simply because it does not have any place in the accounting reform bill that we are debating today. I realize it does not change anything in my amendment. It is not a substitute amendment, but it is an addition that will cause problems further down the road. It will delay actually getting accounting reform into place. The accounting reform bill is being used as a vehicle to provide a free ride for a non-germane, unrelated amendment. I will probably use that same line again on a number of other amendments that come up later—it is non-germane.

The McConnell amendment needs to hitchhike on a different road with a different vehicle at a different time.

Over several months, I and my esteemed colleagues on both sides of this aisle have worked hard on the accounting reform bill. We have worked hard to keep out surplus, nonrelevant issues so we can get through the process of getting accounting legislation through in a timely fashion and in a bipartisan manner. We have been very successful at keeping out exact amendments even that deal with how to do accounting and have set up a process where people who are knowledgeable on that can figure out the right way to do it and the right way to do it faster than before.

I strongly believe this bill cannot afford to be held up any longer just for Members on both sides of the aisle to score political points on hot button issues. A lot of us have pet projects and issues we would have liked to add on, but we resisted and we encouraged our colleagues on the Banking Committee to do the same thing.

We are now in the amendment process, but amendments should be germane to the contents of the underlying bill and amendment. That is not a requirement until after cloture, but we need to get the bill done. There is no reason we even need to go to cloture if we would get the germane amendments done and get this into a conference committee so we can get the work done.

The McConnell second-degree amendment, while well intended, is not germane. It does not deal solely with securities laws or those attorneys appearing and practicing before the SEC. It does not deal solely with attorneys working for publicly traded companies but to any attorney and any client practicing any form of Federal law. It does not deal with an attorney's professional responsibilities of reporting Federal securities law violations to its corporate client. It is much broader than the underlying amendment which does deal strictly with Federal securities laws, attorneys appearing and practicing before the SEC, and internal reporting by an attorney within a publicly traded company.

In addition, the McConnell amendment is going to require study and debate, meaning more time spent diverting passage of the much needed accounting reform bill. We are running out of time before the next recess and have several important bills yet to consider, including Homeland Security Department legislation.

While the McConnell amendment is well intended, the timing is simply wrong. I respect my colleague from Kentucky and his constant support and earnest effort to make attorneys play it straight with their clients. But I must respectfully oppose this amendment at this time. I hope we will be able to debate and vote on it on another day. When the time is appropriate under the agreement, I will make a motion to table the amendment.

I yield the floor, and I reserve the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. McCONNELL. Madam President, let me say first with regard to whether this is appropriate to be added to this bill, the ranking member of the Banking Committee, the manager of the bill on this side, supports my amendment. Obviously, it is not his view that this is in any way inappropriate for this legislation.

I also say to my good friend from Wyoming, this will not slow down the bill. This amendment will be voted on at 12:45. There is a time agreement on it. We certainly are not in any way trying to slow down the passage of the underlying bill which I fully expect to support.

The issue is whether we are only interested in corporate defense counsel misbehavior. Why are we only interested in corporate defense counsel misbehavior? My amendment applies to the other side, the plaintiff's side. It would apply to cases, for example, brought under the Federal Employers Liability Act, which governs injury and wrongful death actions against railroads in interstate commerce by railroad workers and their families. It would apply to cases brought under the Longshore and Harbor Workers Compensation Act, which establishes no-fault compensation for employees injured on navigable rivers. And it would apply to plaintiffs bringing action under the Price Anderson Act amendments of 1998, which creates a Federal cause of action for nuclear accidents. It would also apply to the Federal Tort Claims Act, which creates Federal causes of action for tort claims against the U.S. Government. It would apply to lawyers representing clients bringing cases under the Public Health Service Act, which are suits against certain federally supported health centers and their employees brought under the Federal Tort Claims Act. And finally, it would apply to lawyers representing clients bringing actions under part of Federal law, very important in my State, the Black Lung Benefits Act of 1972, which establishes a compensation scheme for coal miners allegedly suffering from black lung disease and survivors of miners who died from or were totally disabled by the disease.

Let me sum it up again: it is not my intent to slow the bill down. This amendment will be voted on at 12:45, so it clearly is not slowing anything down. It seems to me entirely consistent with the underlying amendment dealing with corporate defense counsel misbehavior to also address the question of a plaintiff's lawyer's misbehavior.

Beyond that, we are talking simply about providing consumers of legal services with basic information, at the beginning, during, and at the end of a lawsuit, and a modest 45-day bereavement rule giving the victims and their families a chance to get back on their feet before they are contacted by lawyers seeking to represent them in court. It would not in any way prevent families from contacting a lawyer during that time but would protect them from unwarranted solicitation of legal services for a mere 45 days.

This is a very modest proposal. I would love to go a lot further. I like the fee caps in the Federal Tort Claims Act. That is not what we have offered. That is not what I offered. There is no impact on fees, no caps on damages. This is strictly consumer protection in the area of legal services. It is a very modest proposal which I hope the Senate will adopt when we vote on it at 12:45.

I reserve the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. ENZI. Madam President, I will give a little explanation for the point raised that this particular bill—because a time has been set for the vote—will not hold things up. There are about 60 amendments out there; there are probably 10 that actually deal with what is in the bill. There has to be some point where we have to ask, Can we not concentrate on what is in the bill instead of bringing up the other things? I am sorry that yours is the bill on which we are starting that.

Mr. McCONNELL. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. ENZI. Sure.

Mr. McCONNELL. It was my understanding that cloture was filed last night. Would my friend from Wyoming not agree, that cloture vote brings the bill to a conclusion? I am not in any way trying to delay the passage of the bill. I support the underlying bill. I believe my amendment is appropriate to be considered.

Mr. SARBANES. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. ENZI. Yes.

Mr. SARBANES. Actually, I will use my own time, and the Senator may reserve his time.

We must table this amendment. Otherwise, it becomes an invitation for others to come in and offer second-degree amendments that are not relevant to the bill. This amendment is not relevant to the bill—nowhere close. If we start this process now, opening up the bill to these nonrelevant amendments, what will happen to the relevant amendments, some of which are germane under cloture and others of which might miss the tight test of germaneness but are relevant material, which are pending, which other colleagues have offered, if they want to get to those amendments?

We could have done the Edwards amendment yesterday and moved on to something else, but we came in with a second-degree amendment, not relevant—not only not relevant to the Edwards amendment, not relevant to the bill.

Frankly, we are well beyond the point where we at least ought to set aside amendments that have no relevance to the underlying legislation.

Mr. MCCONNELL. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. SARBANES. Certainly, I yield.

Mr. MCCONNELL. I ask my friend from Maryland, if he believes my amendment may have some merit, whether he would support taking it up as a freestanding measure with a time agreement.

Mr. SARBANES. No, I would not support that.

Mr. MCCONNELL. I thank the Senator.

Mr. SARBANES. Why would I support a request like that? Surely the Senator from Kentucky is just making a joke on the floor of the Senate by making that inquiry. That must be apparent to all. I appreciate the Senator's sense of humor in that regard. I also appreciate his indication, just a moment or two ago, he intends to support the underlying bill. Of course, we are gratified to hear that.

I yield the floor and reserve whatever time I may have left.

What is the time situation?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has 33 seconds, Senator MCCONNELL has 4 minutes 38 seconds, and the Senator from Wyoming has 3 minutes.

Who yields time?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. MCCONNELL. It was my understanding that Senator SANTORUM was on the way. But if he has not arrived yet, I suppose the best thing to do would be to enter a quorum call knowing full well my time is running.

I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. REID. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. REID. Madam President, I will alert Members we are going to have a vote later. The two members of the Appropriations Committee have finally gotten a meeting with the House appropriators on the supplemental appropriations bill. I think it would be in everyone's best interest that they are allowed to go forward with that most important meeting.

We received a request from the chairman of the Appropriations Committee, Senator BYRD. Therefore, I ask unanimous consent that the order that is now in effect be modified and that Senator ENZI would be recognized at 2 p.m. to move to table the amendment, and that 8 minutes prior to that would be devoted to debate between the two managers of the bill, Senator SARBANES and Senator GRAMM, and that Senator ENZI would be recognized for 2 minutes, and Senator MCCONNELL for 2 minutes—a total of 8 minutes. All other provisions of the unanimous consent agreement now in effect would remain the way they are.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. REID. Madam President, the vote will occur at 2 o'clock today. In the meantime, I ask there be a period from now until then for morning business, with the time equally divided between Senator DASCHLE or his designee or Senator LOTT or his designee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. REID. I suggest the absence of a quorum, and I ask the time be charged equally between Senator DASCHLE and Senator LOTT.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mrs. CLINTON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MILLER). Without objection, it is so ordered.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE EXTENSION

Mrs. CLINTON. Mr. President, I rise in this period of morning business to raise a continuing and serious problem that we believe most acutely in New York but which I know is shared in other parts of our Nation.

Last month, the Nation joined New Yorkers in our reflection and sorrow as the workers at ground zero removed the final debris from the 16-acre World Trade Center site.

While this event, which was accomplished ahead of schedule and below budget by the most dedicated workforce that I think you could find anywhere in the world—unionized building trades and construction workers who worked on that pile for 12- to 15-hour days, 7 case days a week, for months, and, therefore, because of their heroic efforts we moved one step closer to the beginning of the rebuilding process—there are many workers who have not been able to begin rebuilding their lives simply because there are not enough jobs right now.

Many of us will remember a photograph shortly after September 11 that the press ran showing hundreds of people standing in lines at a job fair that was held in the city, people who had lost their jobs, both directly because of the attack on the World Trade Center and indirectly because of the ripple effect through the economy.

There were workers—and I have met with scores and scores of them—whose jobs were literally destroyed when the Twin Towers collapsed. They were the janitors. They were the doormen. They were the waiters and waitresses. They were the secretaries and the messengers. They went to work every day in that huge complex of offices. There were those who served the small businesses that took care of the workers in those buildings. And, of course, then there were those throughout the city who may not have worked at ground zero but who lost their jobs because of the aftermath on the entire economy because of the terrorist attacks.

We all know that thousands of hard-working Americans have been thrown out of work because of the combination of the jobless recovery and the terrorist attacks.

Prior to September 11, our economy was beginning to slow down. Our national unemployment rate rose from 4.5 percent a year ago to 4.9 percent in September and to 5.9 percent today. But I think that somehow does not even tell the whole story because what we have seen occurring since September 11 is this so-called jobless recovery.

The Wall Street Journal just ran an article about it stating that employment has now shown 13 consecutive months of decline through April. That exceeds the 11 straight months of loss in the 1990-91 recession, the only recent comparable period, about a decade ago.

I ask unanimous consent that article be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Wall Street Journal]

UNEMPLOYMENT HIT 5.9% IN JUNE; REVISIONS
SHOW GRIM JOB PICTURE

(By Greg Ip)

WASHINGTON—With weak stock prices and corporate scandals damping companies' hiring plans, the recovery is starting for workers to look as bad as, if not worse than, the "jobless recovery" of 1991-92.

The number of nonagricultural jobs rose just 36,000 in June from May, and the unemployment rate edged up to 5.9% from 5.8%, the Labor Department said Friday. Government statisticians once again revised down prior months' levels of employment, revealing a job market far weaker than previously thought.

"The economy is on the road to recovery [though] the recovery is a bit anemic," said Labor Secretary Elaine Chao. "The labor market lags behind changes in real economic activity."

While the Labor Department regularly revises its payroll estimates, those revisions have been strikingly negative this year, with every month's report being revised downward—often sharply. The agency originally said payrolls rose 66,000 in February, but now it says they fell 165,000. An originally reported gain of 58,000 jobs in March is now a loss of 5,000, and a gain of 43,000 in April is a loss of 21,000. May's gains were revised down to 24,000 from 41,000.

A "benchmark" revision a month ago also reduced employment throughout last year. Employment in November 2001 was 340,000 below original estimates.

As a result, employment now shows 13 consecutive monthly declines through April. That exceeds the 11 straight losses in 1990–1991, though those declines were steeper. Back then, job losses continued intermittently through 1991 and into early 1992. A similarly tough spell could be in store for workers now, with the recovery so far subpar and employers more determined than usual to boost output per employee rather than the number of employees.

Lois Orr, acting commissioner of the Bureau of Labor Statistics, said recent revisions haven't been statistically significant, but she couldn't explain why they have been overwhelmingly negative. Data compiled by the Federal Reserve Bank of Philadelphia show that in 1991, as the economy emerged from recession, early payroll revisions were alternately positive and negative, though benchmark revisions years later sharply lowered employment levels.

While job creation was stagnant last month, there were still signs in the jobs report that the economy is continuing to grow. The average work week rose to 34.3 hours from 34.2 hours, and in manufacturing it jumped to 41.1 from 40.9 hours. When firms see an increase in business but aren't sure if it will last, they often boost the hours of current employees before hiring new ones, because it is easier to cut back hours later than to sack workers.

Temporary employment, another way for firms to raise output without adding to permanent payrolls, edged up by 9,000. Manufacturing payrolls fell 23,000, though that was one of the smallest declines in two years. In services, losses in retail trade were offset by gains in health care and government.

"Businesses are hesitant to expand, due to concerns about the stock market and heightened uncertainty over the geopolitical outlook," Bank Credit Analyst, a financial-markets research firm, said in a report Friday. "The attack on accounting standards and concerns about re-regulation are additional factors keeping corporate executives from expanding."

Long-distance phone company WorldCom Inc. announced 17,000 layoffs two weeks ago when it disclosed it had understated operating expenses by $3.8 billion. Electronic Data Systems Corp., a major supplier to WorldCom whose accounting has also come under scrutiny by investors, said last week it would lay off about 2,000 employees in response to sluggish demand for its computer services.

The weak job market doesn't mean a shrinking economy because firms are squeezing increased production out of their current employees.

Merrill Lynch estimates that productivity, or output per hour worked, expanded at more than a 3% annual rate in the second quarter, down from the first quarter's remarkable 8.4%, but still robust.

Mrs. CLINTON. So here we are with a national unemployment rate of 5.9 percent, and the situation in New York is even worse. In our State, it is 6.1 percent unemployment, and in New York City, 8 percent unemployment.

We did the right thing a few months ago when we passed unemployment insurance and disaster unemployment assistance for 13 weeks. Those are both very important programs.

The disaster unemployment assistance, which comes through FEMA, goes directly to those workers who actually lost their jobs because of the physical destruction of September 11. Unemployment insurance, as we know, is triggered when there is a lack of jobs for whatever reason. And, of course, more people are out of work in New York and throughout our Nation because of the impact of September 11.

Unfortunately, these extensions, which provided a very needed safety net for thousands of workers, are about to expire for many of those workers. Nationally, 686,000 individuals will have exhausted their benefits with no job to enter.

On Monday, I participated in an announcement of a study that was commissioned by a group called the 9/11 United Services, which is a coordinating group that tried to bring all the charities together. A very accomplished corporate executive was asked to come in and serve as the temporary chairman. He immediately said: We don't have any data. We don't know what the facts are.

He commissioned a study by McKenzie and Company to try to figure out what the economic challenges are that we are confronting. Their survey, which was announced on Monday, showed that approximately 45,000 workers in New York City whose jobs were affected continue to suffer an income loss of more than 25 percent. Approximately 28,000 are still unemployed. In other words, we got down to about 45,000, and of those 45,000, about 17,000 did get a job, although it cut their income considerably, and 28,000 are still unemployed.

It is clear, despite the very best efforts of private charities and very extraordinarily generous people, we just cannot make up the losses of income and joblessness that we are still confronting.

The New York State Department of Labor confirmed these figures from the McKenzie study, but, in fact, theirs are even more dire, and they are the official figures. They show that 105,000 people were on unemployment insurance as a direct result of the World Trade Center attacks. We have an increasing number who are running out of time. Nearly 7,000 of the 24,000 are still unemployed, looking for jobs, and have exhausted all their benefits. There is no job in sight.

The disaster unemployment assistance expired, dropping 1,100 people who still have not found a job, who have not been placed anywhere else because their companies, if they are still in New York—as many, thankfully, are—have downsized, have moved, and have not been able to provide all the jobs that were once there.

I have provided these statistics just to give you some insight. But, of course, the personal stories are what are most wrenching and what I encounter every time I am in the city, or my caseworkers and staff, as they field phone calls, e-mails, and letters from people who worked at jobs for 18 years, 25 years, who put two children through college, and now have nothing to fall back on, who are on the brink of being evicted from the apartment they have lived in for decades, or are about to be foreclosed on in the homes they have struggled to buy.

I know that it is sometimes difficult to think about these faceless people out there, but we have tried very hard to do the right thing in the wake of the World Trade Center. We certainly tried to provide the resources that businesses needed to get back on their feet.

This body and the President and the House were extremely generous to provide the public funds that we needed to begin the rebuilding process, to clean up the debris, to do what we needed to get back on the right track in Lower Manhattan. But I just do not want to see our workers—people who were gainfully employed, doing the right thing—forgotten.

Certainly, I have a great deal of sympathy for people in other parts of the country who are really caught up in this so-called jobless recovery as well.

I am introducing two pieces of legislation, along with Senators SCHUMER and KENNEDY, to extend both unemployment insurance and disaster unemployment assistance for an additional 13 weeks. It is our hope that the jobs will start coming back into the economy.

In fact, experts certainly agree that extending unemployment insurance is more likely than anything else we can do to get money into the economy that people will have to start spending because they do not have any choice.

Over the last five recessions, every $1 spent on unemployment benefits generated a $2.15 increase in the gross domestic product. I went back and looked. What did we do the last time we were in any kind of comparable period?

Mr. President, the period of 1990–91 was the most recent time in which to compare this. In the early 1990s, benefits were extended four times, for it became clear, in the absence of that safety net, that lifeline, we would have even greater problems with which to deal.

What are we going to do with people who get foreclosed on and evicted? Not everybody has a family to go to and crowd on to a sofa bed or into a spare room. We are going to have increases in homelessness. We are going to have all kinds of problems that at least we can try to forestall and, hopefully, eliminate.

These benefits would be extended for just an additional 13 weeks—half the time they were extended back in the early 1990s.

Clearly, I think we need systemic changes to the unemployment insurance system. I think it is kind of an odd position for us all to be in: Coming back, asking to extend it whenever it is needed, that we have to have new congressional action. There ought to be some ways where we can also be more sensitive to different parts of the country.

I know there are parts of the country—there are parts of my State—that are below the national average in unemployment. But there are concentrated pockets that we don't, frankly, want to spread and have more expensive problems to deal with, which is one of the additional reasons I hope the Senate will support this action.

I am very appreciative of all of the support that New York and New Yorkers have received over the last many months. This has been obviously a traumatic and terrible time for many families. Certainly nothing we can say or do will bring back a loved one or even bring back a job that was there for 20, 25 years. But we do have to continue to try to send out this lifeline, the help that is needed, so people can try to get themselves back on their feet and that we don't claim more victims because of the horrific attack on September 11.

Mrs. CLINTON. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. REED. I ask unanimous consent the time be equally charged to both sides during the course of the quorum calls.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

INVESTOR CONFIDENCE

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I rise in strong support of the Sarbanes legislation.

We have been buffeted over the last several months on a daily basis with news of companies with accounting practices that have led them to bankruptcy, have left them without the means to carry on their business, have left their workers without jobs, and have devastated their pension funds. Day after day after day, a litany of accounting irregularities surface on the front pages of America. It has translated into a growing lack of confidence in our markets.

We are here today with the critical role of reassuring the American public that we will pass legislation quickly that will restore their confidence in our financial system.

This crisis is deepening with each day. Therefore, we must move forward deliberately, carefully but very quickly, to ensure that we can communicate with the American people and let them know we are aware of these problems and we are correcting them.

I just came from a press conference to which we invited representatives who manage public pension funds. It is a staggering sense that we are seeing out there, not just problems on Wall Street but problems on Main Street. Essentially what has happened is that the American public has become invested heavily in our capital markets, in our equities, not just individually but particularly through pension funds. Sixty percent of the assets of defined contribution plans are invested in equities or mutual funds. About 70 percent of all of these funds together is creating a situation in which, when Wall Street has a problem, it translates to every corner of the country.

We have to step forward. We are stepping forward. The Sarbanes bill is a strong bill. It has been made even stronger with the adoption yesterday, in a bipartisan vote, of the Leahy amendment. We are going to create an oversight board for accountants that will truly be independent and will have the force and the teeth to get the job done.

The Sarbanes bill also proposes the serious separation of the auditing function and other consulting functions that accountants can perform. If you are going to be an auditor, you have to be an auditor, not an auditor and consultant. This is an important step forward.

Also importantly, the Sarbanes bill will require that the SEC receive the necessary resources to get the job done. There have been for decades extensive security laws on our books. Unless these laws are enforced, they are not effective. Frankly, some of what we are discovering is a lack of enforcement. You have the SEC that is overwhelmed with filings and not capable of reviewing all those filings, not capable of taking the kind of proactive action which is necessary to avert the crisis we have seen.

We are indeed at a critical moment in our history. We have seen the market over the last few days take huge losses. That suggests that not just the American public but the world is growing more and more concerned with our accounting practices, our transparency, whether or not a financial statement by an American publicly traded company can be relied upon.

One of the ironies of this is a year or 2 ago, 3 or 4 years ago certainly, we were out offering our market to an emerging economy in Russia as the model; in a way, sort of looking at them, saying: Boy, if only they would adopt our accounting practices, the kind of tough rules we have, it would be a huge step forward in their development as a market economy.

Well, ironically, today we have discovered that what we thought was a very thorough, comprehensive system is not as thorough and comprehensive as we thought and did not have the kind of integrity we need to ensure investors that when they read a report from an American company, that report is accurate. That used to be the standard.

I mentioned previously that I had the occasion to attend a press conference with representatives of public pension funds. One of the individuals was the first comptroller of New York City.

Let me give you an idea of the dimension of a problem we are talking about. On an annual basis, the city of New York has been contributing about $600 million a year to their pension funds in order to make sure those pension funds are actuarially sound, that they can pay the benefits for all of their retirees. They still can do that today, but the pricetag has gone up to over $1 billion a year. They estimate, if the market continues, that they will be paying on the order of $3 billion in a few years. That money comes from taxes paid by the people of New York, and it comes from cutting other programs. It is a huge problem.

At the core of the problem is this lack of confidence, the daily spate of news reports saying essentially that the accounting practices of major publicly held companies are absolutely erroneous. We have to reverse that tidal wave, and we have to do it quickly. We can begin to do that by strong support of the Sarbanes bill.

Many people have called this an investors' bill of rights. I think they are correct. I commend and compliment the chairman of the Banking Committee, Senator SARBANES.

This is an example of how legislation should be done. This is an example of a careful, thoughtful process through the committee. I know the Presiding Officer, as a member of that committee, contributed substantially to that process. It was a delight and pleasure to work with Senator SARBANES on the Banking Committee, to see that careful, thoughtful approach—with 10 hearings, witnesses from every sector of our economy, including perspectives from those who manage pensions, those who are security experts, and those who are business leaders. All of those perspectives were brought together in this legislation, which is thorough, comprehensive, and, in my view, outstanding.

Then, also, to be able to fashion a bipartisan group of support was critical here and throughout our country. This is a textbook example by a master of how to move legislation through this body, but, more importantly, how to respond to the compelling needs of the American public. I commend and thank Senator SARBANES and his staff for their great effort.

We are at a point we can begin to see—if we move forward in the next few days—a new regime of securities laws that will feature an independent, full-time professional oversight board to monitor the behavior of accountants. We will also see guidelines on which nonaudit services are prohibited, so there will be a separation between the audit and nonaudit services. That should prevail. This is very important.

I was an attorney in private practice and did corporate work. Frankly, I assumed that what I saw in that report, signed by a distinguished auditing firm, was gospel and not to be contradicted; that it was the final judge about disputes on costs and facts about what the company was doing and what they were disclosing and what they didn't have to disclose. I always assumed that it was the accountants who were answering those tough questions. They were literally the bad guys. There were a lot of creative CEOs, CFOs, and lawyers. In fact, they were often satirized, and the most uncreative part of the management was that auditor who was telling you, no, you cannot do this. That, obviously, over the last few years, has eroded tremendously.

With the Sarbanes bill, we will clearly delineate those activities that can and should be performed by an auditor. It will also shore up tremendously corporate responsibility and require CEOs and CFOs to certify the accuracy of the company's financial statements. It will also increase the amount of the financial disclosure that a company must conduct in the course of their business.

Many of the exotic arrangements that brought down Enron were never disclosed to shareholders and the investing public. As a result, those entities, when discovered—such as CHEWCO—were the instruments of the demise of that company. Those kinds of off-balance-sheet transactions will have to be disclosed if the bill passes, and I think it is necessary to do that.

We are also dealing with the very real need for increasing funding for the SEC. That is a critical component of the legislation.

The President was in New York City making a speech, calling for $100 million—or probably closer to $300 million, or more—that we need to ensure that the SEC has to conduct their activities. So we are moving forward and ensuring that, I hope, we do this.

Our record over the last several years has not been as aggressive as I would have liked it to be. I supported a measure a few years ago—in fact, I think last year—in which we passed legislation that lowered various fees that are involved in securities transactions, with the idea that we would, at the same time, increase the pay within the SEC to attract better workers and more sophisticated individuals there, to complement what is going on in the private market where legal salaries are very high. The transaction reduction fee went down, but the pay parity never went into effect. So I think we have to follow through not only with this authorization but also with appropriations to make sure that can occur.

So we have a situation where we are moving forward and in which the Sarbanes legislation, I hope, will be complemented by legislation proposed by Senator KENNEDY to directly affect pension operations in the United States. These two pieces of legislation—hopefully brought together quickly, passed through this body and by the other body, and signed by the President—will send a signal to the American public, the investing public in the U.S. and around the world that our markets are the best in the world, that they can rely upon every word in a financial report, and to have fully disclosed the financial conditions of publicly held companies in the United States. If we do that, it will be a huge benefit not just to Wall Street but to Main Street.

I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GRAMM. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. GRAMM. Mr. President, I support the McConnell amendment. I think it is a good government amendment. I think it is a full disclosure amendment. I don't even see why we are voting on it. I am convinced it will be defeated because any good government amendment that has anything to do with plaintiffs' attorneys is routinely defeated in the Senate.

Having said that, I make note of the fact that the Dow is down again today. I do not believe the primary problem in the markets today is the disease we are fighting. The primary problem we have now is fear about the absurd prescription of the doctor. I believe there is concern that in this frenzy, things are going to be done that will have a long-term negative impact on the capital market.

If you take the bill the House has already passed and the Senate bill as it is now, and you take the President's position reiterated yesterday by the Secretary of the Treasury, we have the makings of a good bill that can be broadly supported.

I reiterate my hope and desire that we bring this debate to a close. We could, by unanimous consent, have a vote on cloture today. We could deal very quickly with germane amendments. We could pass this bill tonight, and next week we could be going to conference. That would be prudent policy.

We are going to have a lot of amendments offered, if my list is indicative, that if anyone really believed they would be adopted, would be terribly frightening to investors.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's 2 minutes has expired.

Mr. GRAMM. I ask unanimous consent for 1 additional minute.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. GRAMM. If anybody took this list of amendments seriously, they would not be willing to risk thousands, millions, or billions of dollars. But they should not take this list seriously because these amendments are not going to become law.

The sooner we bring this debate to an end, the sooner we pass this bill in the Senate, the sooner we go to conference, the sooner we put together a bill that will represent a compromise, the more certainty there will be on Wall Street and the quicker we will rebuild equity values in America and rebuild confidence in our market.

I urge my colleagues, let's move ahead. Nothing good is going to happen today to this bill. Nothing bad is going to happen either, I make that clear, but it will not be clear to people watching this debate. The sooner the debate ends, the better off we will be. The sooner we get to conference, the sooner we will have a bill. That cannot come soon enough to suit me.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

The Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. McCONNELL. Mr. President, I expect shortly my amendment will be tabled. That will be further evidence that there is not a majority of the Senate willing to confront the issue of either union corruption as we discovered yesterday or, in the case of the amendment about to be voted on, plaintiff's lawyer misconduct.

The underlying amendment, the Edwards-Enzi amendment, addresses the issue of corporate counsel, defense counsel misconduct, and it seemed only appropriate to me that we deal with the other side of the equation; that is, the lawyers who represent plaintiffs in Federal claims and in Federal courts.

This is a long overdue matter to be dealt with. If not now, when? My good friend from Maryland said this is an inappropriate bill to deal with it, so I suggested maybe he would support me in bringing up my matter freestanding with a time agreement; he smiled, but clearly the answer was no.

Mr. SARBANES. Will the Senator yield?

The answer was no. I didn't smile. I said no and smiled along with it.

Mr. MCCONNELL. Mr. President, I respectfully correct the observation, in case the Senator from Maryland misunderstood. I didn't doubt that his answer was no. He doesn't want to deal with this at any point, ever—not now, not tomorrow, not ever.

The issue before the Senate is whether it is appropriate to deal with client misbehavior when they are representing plaintiffs, as well as when they might be representing defendants.

My amendment is very simple. I would love to have gone further. My amendment does not cap fees, does not cap damages. It simply deals with the following: Providing, for the client, information about the arrangements under which the client is retaining the lawyer at the beginning, in the middle, and at the end of the case so the client fully understands the terms of the arrangement; second, that there be a 45-day bereavement rule established 45 days after the occurrence of the accident where the victims and their families would not be harassed by those seeking to represent them. It is just a 45-day bereavement rule which we already did under Federal law for airplane accidents.

I hope this amendment will be adopted. It is very reasonable and very appropriate to this bill.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time? The Senator from Maryland.

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, what is the time situation? I have 2 minutes?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maryland has 2 minutes and the Senator from Wyoming has 2 minutes. The Senator from Maryland.

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, I urge my colleagues to table this amendment. I do not know what amendment the Senator from Kentucky will come with next out of his grab bag, but he has obviously got a whole set of pet projects that he has been husbanding there in his committee and that he will seek to offer. They are not relevant to this legislation.

Here we are again trying to deal with an issue that is relevant. I suggest to the distinguished Senator from Kentucky that he allow the second-degree amendment staffer to take the weekend off so we do not have to continue to go through this exercise of being confronted with these second-degree amendments not relevant to the legislation. We have important legislation to deal with here. We have some good amendments pending out there. This repeated effort to just gum up the works is difficult to understand.

In any event, I urge my colleagues on the vote that is shortly to come to vote to table the McConnell amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wyoming is recognized.

Mr. ENZI. Mr. President, we have, I think, before us, about 60 amendments. I join my ranking member, the Senator from Texas, in his comments about how we need to get this bill done as quickly as possible. The stock market is dropping. It may be because of what we are doing. It may be because of the need to have this bill done. Either way, getting this bill done will give some assurance to the stock market both that we are not dabbling in it anymore, and that we have completed our work and have provided a solution.

As a result—and I regret that it is on this amendment with my friend from Kentucky—I will begin making tabling motions on amendments that do not have a direct aspect to the bill. I also would be doing that to amendments that put specific accounting language into the bill, even if it is relevant. This bill is not designed to put in specific accounting language; it is designed to set up a process for getting to specific accounting language. That is a very fine distinction and a very important one if we want to have the kind of stock market and the companies that we envision.

With those comments, at this time I move to table the McConnell amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada.

Mr. REID. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The majority leader.

Mr. DASCHLE. I ask unanimous consent we be permitted 1 minute to make an introduction.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

INTRODUCING THE HONORABLE PAT COX, PRESIDENT OF THE EUROPEAN PARLIAMENT

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. President, one of the privileges accorded the majority leader is the opportunity to welcome and introduce our fellow legislators from the European Parliament. This is a tradition that was begun in 1972, and has continued every year since.

I find it especially meaningful, because although the Atlantic Ocean separates us from our European friends, we are connected by a belief in the rule of law, and a commitment to the betterment of the people we serve, and the world we share.

This afternoon I have the distinct honor of introducing The Honorable Pat Cox, President of the European Parliament. This is an exciting time of growth and change in the European Union, and as President of the European Parliament, Pat Cox has been instrumental in fostering greater European unity and advocating for EU expansion.

As Europe becomes ever more unified, the extension of EU membership to free and democratic nations will be crucial to ensuring that diversity and pluralism accompany unification. In the face of persistent disputes among EU nations and political factions, President Cox has not wavered in his support for expansion, or in his denouncement of far right politicians who do not express the views of most Europeans. For that, we are all grateful.

Mr. President, Mr. Cox will be available to meet our Senate colleagues here on the floor during this vote.

Let me, on behalf of the U.S. Senate, welcome President Cox.

AMENDMENT NO. 4200

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CARPER). The question is on agreeing to the motion to table amendment No. 4200. The yeas and nays have been ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. NICKLES. I announce that the Senator from North Carolina (Mr. HELMS), the Senator from Ohio (Mr. VOINOVICH), and the Senator from Idaho (Mr. CRAPO) are necessarily absent.

I further announce that if present and voting the Senator from North Carolina (Mr. HELMS) would vote "no."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there any other Senators in the Chamber desiring to vote?

The result was announced—yeas 62, nays 35, as follows:

Mr. DASCHLE. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The majority leader.

AMENDMENT NO. 4269 TO AMENDMENT NO. 4187

(Purpose: To address procedures for banning certain individuals from serving as officers or directors of publicly traded companies, civil money penalties, obtaining financial records, broadened enforcement authority, and forfeiture of bonuses and profits)

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. President, I have an amendment I send to the desk on behalf of Senator LEVIN.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. DASCHLE], for Mr. LEVIN, for himself, Mr. NELSON of Florida, Mr. HARKIN, Mr. CORZINE, and Mr. BIDEN, proposes an amendment numbered 4269.

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(The amendment is printed in today's RECORD under "Text of Amendments.")

Mr. DASCHLE. I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, this amendment is offered—and I thank the majority leader—on behalf of myself, Senator BILL NELSON, Senator HARKIN, Senator CORZINE, and Senator BIDEN.

Our amendment would grant the SEC administrative authority to impose civil fines on persons who violate securities laws, regulations, and rules. Now the SEC has to go to court, which is difficult and burdensome.

We, just the other day, decided we wanted to give the SEC the power to remove directors and officers from public companies who violate rules and regulations and laws without having to go to court.

Of course, those decisions administratively by the SEC are subject to an appeal. That is always true and always must be true. The same approach is essential relative to the imposition of civil fines. If the SEC is going to have power, without a lot of cumbersome, costly, and expensive procedures, to really take on those directors and those auditors who violate the law, who violate rules and regulations, the SEC must have the same authority which other regulatory bodies have to impose civil fines.

A few examples: The Commodity Futures Trading Commission has authority to impose civil fines up to three times the monetary gain from a violation plus restitution of customer damages. The Department of Transportation can impose civil fines. The Consumer Product Safety Commission can impose civil fines. The Occupational Safety and Health Administration, OSHA, can impose civil fines. The Federal Communications Commission can impose civil fines.

As a matter of fact, the Securities and Exchange Commission can impose civil fines on some of the people it regulates—brokers. But unless we act today, there will be a great gap in the enforcement power of the SEC, a continuing gap. That gap is, it does not have the power, without legislation, to impose an administrative civil fine on auditors and members of boards of directors who violate rules and regulations in the law of the land.

Our amendment would give the SEC that authority to impose administratively civil fines on those people who violate our securities laws and regulations and rules. That includes officers, directors, and auditors of publicly traded companies.

I emphasize, these fines would be, and must be, subject to judicial review, as are the other SEC administrative determinations which they have authority to answer at this point. That is the first objective of the amendment.

Secondly, our amendment would significantly increase the civil fines the SEC can impose on law violators. I particularly thank Senator NELSON of Florida for highlighting the problem and supporting the inclusion of these provisions in the amendment.

The civil fines that currently can be imposed on broker-dealers administratively have maximum amounts that start at $6,500 per violation. That is the maximum amount under the so-called tier 1 civil fine. If a broker-dealer now violates the securities laws under so-called tier 1 where there is a violation found, not yet proven to be fraudulent but a violation nonetheless, $6,500 is the maximum fine under current law. Tier 2 for individuals is a $60,000 fine. That is where you find fraud, deceit, manipulation, and deliberate or reckless disregard—$60,000 for an individual for that violation.

It is laughable. The current structure of fines which can be imposed on those people who administratively can be subject to a civil action or civil fine by the SEC is so low, these fines are a joke. We are talking about people who frequently are walking away, lining their pockets, violating rules and regulations for millions of dollars, sometimes tens of millions of dollars. To have a system where the maximum fine under tier 1 is $6,500 for an individual and under tier 2 is $60,000 is just simply inadequate.

Here is what the SEC staff said in June of this year: The current maximum penalty amounts may not have the desired deterrent effect on an individual or a corporate violator. For example, an individual who commits a negligent act is subject to a maximum penalty of $6,500 per violation.

This is the conclusion of the SEC staff: The amount is so trivial that it cannot possibly have a deterrent effect on the violator.

I would say that is an understatement: $6,500, given the current amount of money flowing through these violations of rules and regulations, is pitifully trivial. In fact, it is no deterrent at all. It might as well not be there. If we are going to have a deterrent system, we have to have fines which have some bite, which are real, which have an impact on people.

We would, under our amendment, increase the maximum fines from a range of $6,500 to $600,000, which is the current range for tiers 1 through 3, to a range which goes from $100,000 to $5 million in fines per violation.

We are seeing these corporate restatements and misconduct involving $2 billion, $4 billion, and even $12 billion. These new fine amounts are critical if they are to have the desired deterrent and punitive effects on wrongdoers in the corporate world.

Our bill also has language which is similar to the language in the Leahy and Lott amendments that were adopted relative to the removal from office. We do this for the sake of completeness, so that we can lay out the entire structure being proposed in our bill for administratively imposed civil fines. That part of the amendment is the same as the removal from office provisions adopted by the Senate yesterday in the Leahy and Lott amendments.

Finally, our amendment would grant the SEC new administrative authority, when the SEC has opened an official investigation, to subpoena financial records from a financial institution without having to notify the subject that such a records request has been made. This authority would allow the SEC to evaluate financial transactions, to trace funds, to analyze relationships, without having to alert the subject of the investigation to the SEC's action.

Under current law, the SEC either has to give the subject advance notice of the subpoena or to obtain a court order that can delay notification for no longer than 90 days. That is a huge impediment to enforcement by the SEC. We ought to change that.

The staff of the SEC wrote the following relative to this amendment:

This amendment would enhance the Commission's ability to trace money and relationships quickly and effectively. The Commission typically requests bank records when it has reason to suspect possible relationships between persons or entities and that passage of money between those persons or entities may be relevant to violations of the securities laws. Identifying those relationships and quickly identifying assets obtained or transferred in connection with possible unlawful activity is critical to the Commission's ability to obtain orders freezing assets and other appropriate relief.

In many situations, the Commission could proceed much more effectively if it could obtain relevant bank records without providing notice to the persons whose account records are sought.

Under current law, however—

the right to the Financial Privacy Act generally requires the commission to provide those persons with notice and a substantial period—10 to 14 days—in which to file a contest to the commission's authority to obtain the records.

Let me continue with the SEC staff analysis of this language that is in our bill:

Because Congress recognized that the notice requirement can, in some cases, compromise important and legitimate commission investigative objectives, Congress provided in section 21(h) of the Exchange Act that the commission may seek court authorization to obtain relevant bank records without notifying the customer for at least 90 days. Unfortunately—those important investigative objectives are also compromised by the inherent delay in obtaining the necessary court order.

The proposed amendment to section 21(h)—

Our language in this amendment—

addresses both the notice and delay problem by allowing the commission the discretion only in those cases in which it has already authorized a formal investigation to proceed without notice to the customer. The proposed amendment also reiterates and strengthens the commission's authority to require that financial institutions not compromise investigations by notifying any persons or entities that their bank records have been subpoenaed.

Mr. NELSON of Florida. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. LEVIN. I will be happy to yield for a question, but I do have an additional thought.

Mr. NELSON of Florida. I am proud to be here today with my colleague from Michigan to offer these reforms aimed at preventing and punishing perpetrators of corporate fraud. The questions I wanted to ask the very distinguished Senator from Michigan, who has the foresight of why we need this at this particular time, are these: Would it not intrigue the Senator from Michigan and other Senators here that all of this is happening in an environment when 17,000 workers at WorldCom have received pink slips and have realized losses of over a billion dollars in their retirement plans; and at the same time they were receiving pink slips, the corporate executives were attending a retreat in Hawaii? That would not surprise the Senator, would it?

Mr. LEVIN. It would not surprise me at all.

Mr. NELSON of Florida. I doubt that it would surprise the Senator that one of those executives, by the way, was putting the finishing touches on a $15 million mansion, derived from that money from WorldCom. Would it surprise the Senator that late last year Global Crossing laid off 1,200 people, giving them no severance package, while the CEO of that company walked away with hundreds of millions of dollars?

Mr. LEVIN. I am afraid very little would surprise me about some of these violations and deceptions these days.

Mr. NELSON of Florida. I know it would not surprise the Senator, but I will ask him this anyway. After what went on with Enron last summer, while Enron executives were selling their shares for hundreds of millions of dollars and protecting their portfolios, their retirees and employees lost more than a billion dollars in retirement savings. Does that surprise the Senator?

Mr. LEVIN. Tragically, it is not a surprise.

Mr. NELSON of Florida. It is unconscionable. One of those we had testify in our Commerce Committee was Janice Farmer, an Enron retiree who lost her entire life savings that she had built up in a retirement plan from Enron. In her case, it was $700,000. She has nothing now.

And then, I suppose it also would not surprise the distinguished Senator that, while we are talking about these excesses of corporate irresponsibility and corporate greed, the Florida pension fund for the Florida retirement system had a loss of $335 million—more losses than any other State—from Enron stock purchases, and that the money managers of that Florida pension fund, which covers all of the public sector retirees in Florida—the money managers kept buying Enron stock, based on the assertions from the company's management that everything was OK, that doesn't surprise us either, does it?

Mr. LEVIN. No surprise. I am afraid that the public, having lost so much of its pension money, is disgusted but no longer surprised.

Mr. NELSON of Florida. The management said everything was OK, but it was not OK. While the stock was dropping like a rock, but not before the company's management had unloaded their shares, the money managers were buying that stock as it dropped like a rock, and it caused to a dozen or so pension funds, retirement systems, public pension funds in this country over a billion dollars in losses. My State had the most losses of $335 million.

So we have seen in the last year and a half corporate abuses of monumental proportions, and it is time for us to stop it. I am grateful to the Senator from Michigan for his leadership in bringing forth the amendment that he has described, which is basically going to give some additional teeth to the Securities and Exchange Commission to cause disclosure and to cause some hurt when these corporate managers, motivated and operated by greed, cross the line.

I thank the Senator for his leadership.

Mr. LEVIN. I very much thank the Senator from Florida for his comments and his questions, and also for the active role he has taken in shaping this language. He has identified the feeble nature of the fine structure that we have in the current law. We have some ruthless people out there who have lined their own pockets in violation not only of law and regulation, but of any code of morality and fiduciary duty. We have some ruthless people.

We also have some toothless laws. The SEC, when it has to go to court to impose a civil fine, is put through hoops that other regulatory agencies are not put through. They can impose civil fines administratively—always subject to an appeal by the respondent or the defendant. But they have the capability to seek civil fines administratively—these other agencies. I have given examples of some of them. But when it comes to the SEC—outside of the brokers, where the SEC has that power—they have to go through the cumbersome proceedings of going to court.

Now, we have cured some of this already in the bill. When it comes to the removal from office, yesterday we took action to give the SEC the ability to act administratively and to order the removal of directors or executives from office. What we didn't do yet, and what this amendment does, is add a critical component to regulatory effectiveness, which is the ability to impose civil fines administratively.

This is what the administration said in supporting the grant to the SEC of the power to remove directors from office, which we have now already done. It says that if we didn't do that—and now I am quoting the Statement of Administration Policy:

It would continue to require the SEC to expand significant time and resources in order to attempt to gain similar relief in the Federal courts.

That is what we are talking about now with civil fines.

If we do not adopt this amendment, if we do not give the SEC these enforcement tools that other agencies have relative to directors and auditors, we will be requiring the SEC to be wasting time and wasting resources that they otherwise should be using to chase these corrupt and immoral people.

Mr. NELSON of Florida. Will the Senator yield for another question?

Mr. LEVIN. I will be happy to yield.

Mr. NELSON of Florida. The distinguished Senator from Michigan has laid out how this amendment will give stronger enforcement measures to the Securities and Exchange Commission. We have a saying in the South: It is beyond me. It is beyond me why there are other people in this Chamber, when confronted with such corporate and auditor misconduct, would not want to strengthen the law to prevent and punish such corporate abuse.

Does the senior Senator from Michigan have any idea why people would oppose us trying to strengthen existing law and, indeed, strengthen the underlying bill?

Mr. LEVIN. I am hopeful there will be broad support for this amendment, just for the reason the Senator from Florida gives. There should be. This is not novel. This capability of imposing civil fines administratively belongs to other regulatory agencies. The protection is always an appeal to the court, but without this tool, the SEC has a weaker capability. They are not in a position then to do what other enforcement agencies can do in the face of some of the worst deception this country has ever seen—the deception which is now unfolding in too much of corporate America.

This is of the worst attack on our system we have seen. It is unfolding in front of our eyes, and the SEC should be given the powers to deter it or punish it—all the power.

We want the court to be able to review administrative actions. I think most Members of this body do not want any administrative agency to be able to act without court review if they are excessive or if they are wrong. I think most of us believe in that. I believe in that. But I also believe an administrative agency has to have enforcement tools.

We have given the SEC some additional tools in the last few days. Senator LEAHY and Senator LOTT, for instance, in the criminal law area, toughened the criminal penalties, and the SEC now has the capability to impose fines against the stockbroker, although they are pitifully small.

Our amendment would include directors, corporate executives, and auditors in the purview of the SEC power to act administratively and would toughen the fines so they would be far more realistic and could have some deterrent effect. The current fine structure against a limited class of people is useless; it is toothless.

This is a huge gap in the bill before us. This is a terrific bill, by the way, and I do not want anything I say to suggest otherwise. The Banking Committee has given the Senate, and hopefully the country—if we can get some support for it from the administration and if it can get through conference—the Banking Committee has come up with a very strong law. We have strengthened it so far on the floor.

This amendment will strengthen it further by filling a gap that exists in the toolbox. It is the missing tool in the toolbox of enforcement capabilities that the SEC should have.

Mr. NELSON of Florida. The Senator's timing is just uncanny. We need look back no further than to yesterday when the stock market dropped almost 300 points, all the way down close to 8,800, the stock market being a reflection of the confidence of the American people in their investments in public corporations. Lo and behold, that confidence is sinking, and the American people need some greater sense of confidence that, indeed, they will not be hoodwinked, that they will not be fooled by greedy corporate executives or greedy auditors who blur the lines on what their auditing duties ought to be and instead get in bed with those who would mismanage the finances of a corporation. The people of America who invest their hard-earned dollars ought to have the confidence that when they see the financial reports, those financial reports are accurate. That confidence is not there, and we saw it yesterday in the reaction of the people in their purchases and sales in the stock market.

I thank the Senator from Michigan for his timeliness in trying to put some teeth in the authority of the Securities and Exchange Commission to give greater confidence to the Joe and Jane Citizen of America who invest their money because they want to invest in the future of their country and they need to do it and know they are getting accurate figures. I thank the Senator.

Mr. LEVIN. I thank the Senator from Florida.

Mr. President, I wish to expand for one moment on the question of the notice provision in our amendment.

As I indicated before, where there are allegations that officers, directors of companies are misusing the accounting rules and abusing their powers, the SEC has to be able to look at financial records without giving the account holder an opportunity to move funds or to change accounts or to further muddy the investigative waters. Other agencies have that power, and this agency must have that power.

We have carefully circumscribed that power in a number of ways. We have not just simply said you can subpoena any documents you want. We have criteria for doing that or else they have to give notice.

One of the criteria is that it has to be an official investigation that has been ordered by the Commission. That is an important safeguard. This is not just the beginning of an investigation. This is not during a discovery process. This is where the Securities and Exchange Commission has initiated an official investigation, which is a very formal act on the part of the Securities and Exchange Commission.

At that point, they should be able to subpoena documents under certain circumstances. These are the circumstances that we set forth in the amendment:

If the Commission so directs in its subpoena, no financial institution or officer, director, partner, employee, shareholder, representative or agent can directly or indirectly disclose that records have been requested or provided in accordance with subparagraph (A).

In other words, you cannot disclose to the subject of the investigation that you, as a financial institution, have been subpoenaed for those records if the Commission finds reason to believe that such disclosure may—and then we set forth the rules, and the rules are intended to make sure that the Commission can act after it has announced or determined there should be an official investigation but does not want to risk that the subject of the investigation is going to remove documents or remove money or hide assets.

So we set forth the protections, and they are: If the Commission finds reason to believe that disclosing the fact of the official investigation to the subject of that investigation by a financial institution would, one, result in the transfer of assets or records outside of the territorial limits of the United States. So if the Commission says, hey, we have reason to believe if that person is notified in advance of those records being obtained by us or if there is a delay in our obtaining records that person may transfer assets or records outside of the United States, there could be nondisclosure.

The second criteria which, if it exists, would permit this to happen is if the disclosure would result in improper conversion of investor assets.

The third cause for the requirement that there be nondisclosure is that if such disclosure would impede the ability of the Commission to identify, trace, or freeze funds involved in any securities transaction. That speaks for itself.

The fourth way in which nondisclosure would be permitted is that if it endangers the life or physical safety of an individual. If the Commission has reason to believe the life or physical safety of an individual would be compromised by disclosure, surely we ought to not require disclosure.

Fifth, if it results in flight from prosecution, if they have reason to believe that could happen, or if the Commission has reason to believe that the disclosure may result in destruction of or tampering with evidence, or if such disclosure may result in intimidation of potential witnesses or otherwise seriously jeopardize an investigation or unduly delay a trial.

Those are carefully set forth reasons for why disclosure should not be required. These are similar to what other agencies have in terms of powers, and it seems to me with this careful delineation of this subpoena power that we should surely give the Securities and Exchange Commission that power.

Again, staff has given the reasons for the importance of that amendment, and I hope that reasoning of the SEC staff would be persuasive on this body. We have to give the SEC some administrative authority to impose civil fines. It would provide a tool that is now missing from the toolbox. It would add this tool, this weapon, to their arsenal. Without this weapon in their arsenal, they still have one hand tied behind their back. Without this amendment, they do not have the same administrative authority that other agencies have.

Given the environment we are in, that we must use all legitimate means to put an end to the abuses and the deceptions of too many of our corporate leaders, corporate executives, corporate directors, and auditors, we must surely bring our laws up to date in terms of the powers we give to the SEC, and in terms of the civil fines we authorize them to impose, always subject to an appeal to the courts.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CORZINE). The Senator from Texas.

Mr. GRAMM. Mr. President, some of my colleagues change positions on issues like privacy so quickly that it gives me whiplash, and I will get to that point. I do not know how many people have seen the movie "Minority Report." If you have not, I want to tell you the story. I never thought I would see a real-life example of what happens in this movie, but I have found one right here on the floor of the Senate.

In the movie "Minority Report," you have a cop who has almost supernatural powers, and his job is to arrest people before they commit a crime. It starts with three people, two guys who naturally do not have very much ESP, and then you have this lady, who naturally is quite attractive, who has these massive powers of ESP. They visualize crimes that are going to happen, their brain waves activate a computer, and then it prints out what they are seeing. They see crimes happening that have not yet occurred.

The action in the movie begins with a guy finding his wife in bed with another man. The husband is obviously a nice guy—probably an accountant—and he is leaving his house. His wife seems so eager for him to leave, he figures out something is going on. He is sort of an old, balding fellow and as he is leaving, he misses his bus. While he is waiting for the next bus, a young guy comes in and walks in his front door. Needless to say, the husband is upset about it. (Who wouldn't be upset about it? No one would want that to happen to them or anybody they knew.) So the husband goes in and he is sort of in shock. He finds himself in the bedroom, sitting by the bed. He goes crazy, and picks up a pair of scissors.

At this point, the computer system (hooked up to the people with ESP) alerts this superwarrior for law enforcement that there is about to be a murder. He jumps in this sort of minijet that flies fast and stops on a dime. The officer zooms in—have you seen this movie, Senator McCain?—and just as the guy is getting ready to stab his wife, the officer grabs the knife, puts the handcuffs on the husband, takes him off and they put him in prison for murder.

Mr. MCCAIN. Will the Senator yield? That is a better description than the movie was.

Mr. GRAMM. Now, I thought, the whole thing is sort of a moral question: Were these people really going to commit these crimes? They put them in prison for life. They put them in these metal cylinders and wired them up to control their brain waves. It is not very pleasant. So the question is, Do you have a right to do this to people who have not yet committed a crime simply because some person with extrasensory perception said it was going to happen?

That is what the movie is about. It is a big hit movie. It made over $100 million the first week. It sounds silly when I tell it, but they got $100 million and I am giving this speech.

In any case, I thought, what an absurd plot. Who in the world could ever believe—this is the U.S. of A, by the way. This movie is off in the future.

Why would we ever have a law under which people can be punished for what they might do? Is that absurd? Can anybody believe that would happen? If you think not, you are wrong.

Let me read from this amendment. This is in general. It is talking about authority of the Commission to assess monetary penalties. This is from the amendment that is pending.

In general, in any cease and desist proceedings under subsection A, the commission may impose a civil monetary penalty if it finds on the record, after notice and opportunity of hearing, that a person is violating, has violated, or is about to violate or has been or will be the cause of violation.

Senator LEVIN is going to fine people because we are concluding that they are about to do something before they have done it. Or that they "will be" the cause of a violation.

I submit, first of all, this is not from the SEC. The SEC has not asked for this provision. This is from staff at the SEC—maybe "a" staff person, for all I know.

The point is, do we really want to say we are going to penalize people because they are about to violate the law or we believe they are going to? How can you tell? How are you going to tell that they will be the cause of a violation? I submit that is a standard I am unaware has ever existed. If so, I didn't know about it or I would have tried to change it.

Let me mention a second problem. The second problem has to do with financial records. Correct me, my colleague on the Banking Committee, if somehow I have fallen into a time warp and am in a different world than last year. Was it not last year we were going to shut down the Internet, we were going to put people in prison for putting out your mailing address or for mailing you a letter where someone could read your address off of it and go murder you? Were we not just in this time warp where privacy was the be-all and end-all of society?

I get whiplash, we change positions so often.

Let me state what the current law is and then read what Senator LEVIN is proposing. The current law is the following: The SEC and other Federal agencies have the power to get your financial records, and they can do it through administrative subpoena or judicial subpoena.

Now, normally there is one little inconvenience. Normally, they have to tell you they have taken your financial records. Not an unreasonable thing, it would seem to me, if this is still America. But we are talking about business people here, and there is a different standard. Two consenting adults can engage in any activity other than commerce, with full constitutional protection, but if they engage in job creation or wealth creation, they stand naked before the world in terms of any rights whatever.

Under current law, the Government can come in and take your financial records, but they have to tell you they have done it—"except." And there are three reasons they can do it without telling you. I think we all would say they make reasonably good sense. They cannot tell you if they have reason to believe that there is going to be a flight from prosecution; or if they believe there is going to be destruction of or tampering with evidence; or if telling you would otherwise seriously jeopardize an investigation of official proceedings, or unduly delay a trial of an ongoing official process.

That is the current law. What is unreasonable about that? If the Government believes someone is doing something wrong, they can come in and take their records. Unless they believe there is going to be a flight from prosecution or there will be tampering with evidence or it will jeopardize the investigation, they have to tell you they took the records. That is not unreasonable. But if they believe any of these things to be the case, they can go in and take your records and not tell you.

Now, what does the amendment of the Senator from Michigan do? It says notwithstanding—that is always dangerous—notwithstanding sections 1105 or 1107 of the Right To Financial Privacy Act of 1978—that law has been around here a long time. But notwithstanding it, which means throw it out, the Commission may obtain access to and copies of or information contained in financial records of any person held by a financial institution, including financial records of a customer, without notice to that person.

If you think someone is going to flee prosecution or destroy evidence or that will jeopardize an ongoing investigation, maybe we would accept the limits of our individual liberty. But under the Levin amendment, you don't have to find any of those things. The government doesn't have to find that any of those circumstances is the case to be able to go in and take financial records.

Since this bill is a bill that amends our securities laws and our financial laws, this bill falls under this jurisdiction. So what this literally means is that a government agency, without ever going to the courthouse, could come and take all of your financial records—your banking records, your investment records, any financial records you have or have ever had—and without finding that there is any risk that you are going to flee from justice or destroy evidence or jeopardize an investigation, they can take them and not tell you about it.

There is a limit, it seems to me, to the logic in this case. If the Senator had an amendment that simply raised these fines for people who are criminals, that would be an amendment I could support. It shows how far we have flown from reality when we are talking about penalizing people because they are "about" to violate the law; or that "will be" the cause of a violation.

It is very hard to know when someone is going to violate the law. I have not yet gotten any kickback, I am not a stockholder even. I don't think I have received a contribution from the PAC of the people who made the movie I've described—though if they had any decency, they would have contributed to my campaign over the years. But if you watch this movie, you are going to see what the problem with the Levin amendment is.

The problem with the Levin amendment, as it turns out, is these psychics are not always right, and they don't always agree. Sometimes there is a "Minority Report." The superwarrior cop discovers this. It turns out they try to frame him for a murder. A good movie. I recommend seeing it.

In any case, I am opposed to this amendment. It is a thick amendment. There are a lot of things in it. There are some things in it that I support. But I do not support penalizing people for what you think they are going to do. I do not support taking people's financial records without telling them about it. It sounds to me as if somebody at the SEC has got the idea that maybe they are living in a different era in a different country and they are saying: Look, if we didn't have to fool with civil liberties, if we could get rid of the Bill of Rights, we could be a more effective law enforcement agency. If we could arrest people we think are going to violate the law, we could be more efficient. We don't live in that country.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, first let me assure my good friend from Texas that I have seen "Minority Report."

Mr. GRAMM. You have?

Mr. LEVIN. I have.

Mr. GRAMM. Then you got the idea from it.

Mr. LEVIN. As a matter of fact, I got the idea for the protections we write in here from "Minority Report" just because, as a tribute to the protections and civil liberties that are defended and protected in "Minority Report," I had to be absolutely certain we would put these protections in our bill, to make sure that only if there were reason to believe a transfer of assets was going to go outside of the United States, or there would be conversion of assets, or it would endanger the life or physical safety of an individual, or result in flight from prosecution—those very criteria, carefully delineated, that are a tribute to the civil liberties and protections and privacy rights in this country to which my good friend from Texas just referred.

I can assure my good friend from Texas, the lesson of "Minority Report" is carefully reflected in this amendment. I saw that because I knew the Senator from Texas was going to raise that movie. With that kind of foresight, I decided, knowing just how he does this so beautifully on the floor of the Senate, I had better see "Minority Report." That is why I want to assure the Senator from Texas that these very protections which he is so careful to delineate are in fact set forth in this amendment. We have these criteria laid out in this amendment.

Mr. REID. I don't want to take away from the seriousness of the debate, but I haven't seen "Minority Report." I have seen "Big Fat Greek Wedding," and I would recommend that.

(Laughter.)

Mr. LEVIN. It sounds as if I have not been doing too much else, but I have also seen that—since we are giving testimonials to movies here.

The language to which the Senator from Texas objects, about penalizing people for what they are going to do—that is language which the good Senator from Texas, as chairman and ranking member of the Banking Committee, has overseen for years. That is the same language that currently exists in the SEC law. We are not adding anything new here. This is the SEC law, section 77(h)(1): Cease and desist proceeding, authority of the Commission.

If the Commission finds after notice and opportunity for a hearing that any person is violating, has violated or is about to violate any provision—

That is existing law. The Senator from Texas has overseen that for all these years. He has done a brilliant job as chairman and ranking member of the Banking Committee, and we are just simply following the language that exists already in the SEC law and applying it to folks who are not now covered.

Mr. GRAMM. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. LEVIN. For a question, I will be happy to.

Mr. GRAMM. What the Senator is saying is they can issue cease and desist orders under these circumstances, but they can't fine somebody. You are not only ceasing and desisting them—I have no problem. In the movie—and that is where you got this idea from. I thought it was.

In the movie, I don't object to them grabbing the guy who is about to stab his poor wife. It is putting him in prison, not for attempted murder—he did that—but for killing her when she is not dead.

Mr. LEVIN. The Senator from Texas raises an issue which, I am afraid, is also addressed in current law. It is not just cease and desist orders, it is the implementation of civil fines. We are following the same language. But what we are saying is, if the SEC has power to impose a fine on a broker, based on the standards which exist in this law, there is no reason the SEC should not have the same power to impose a fine on an auditor or on a director who violates the regulations and laws of this land. This is the same language. We haven't added anything new.

What is new here is that for the first time there will be the potential, the power in the SEC, subject to an appeal to the court—which is another protection of our civil liberties—subject to an appeal to the court, to impose a civil fine, administratively, on people who are now let off the hook. There is no reason for this gap in the law.

If, in fact, there is a problem that the Senator has raised, with language, that language is in the existing law for SEC. It is in the existing law for FDIC, the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation:

If, in the opinion of the appropriate Federal banking agency, any insured depository institution, depository institution which has insured deposits, or any institution affiliated party is engaged or has engaged, or the agency has reasonable cause to believe that the depository institution or any institution affiliated party is about to engage—

The words which the Senator from Texas mocks are in existing law, in the FDIC law, in the SEC law.

There may be reasons the Senator wants to maintain this gap in enforcement, but that cannot be used as the reason. That cannot be used.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arizona.

MOTION TO RECOMMIT WITH AMENDMENT NO. 4270

(Purpose: To require publicly traded companies to record and treat stock options as expenses when granted for purposes of their income statements)

Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President, I move to recommit the bill to the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs with instructions to report the bill back forthwith, with the following amendment that I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the motion.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Arizona (Mr. MCCAIN) moves to recommit the bill (S. 2673) to the Committee on Banking, Housing and Urban Affairs, with instructions to report back forthwith with the following amendment, numbered 4270:

At the appropriate place, insert the following:

SEC. . STOCK OPTIONS MUST BE BOOKED AS EXPENSE WHEN GRANTED.

Any corporation that grants a stock option to an officer or employee to purchase a publicly traded security in the United States shall record the granting of the option as an expense in that corporation's income statement for the year in which the option is granted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 4271

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Nevada [Mr. REID], for Mr. EDWARDS, for himself, Mr. ENZI, and Mr. CORZINE, proposes an amendment numbered 4271 to the instructions of the motion to recommit S. 2673 to the Committee on Banking.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

Mr. MCCAIN. I object. I would like to hear what the amendment says.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard. The clerk will continue to read the amendment.

Mr. REID. I say to my friend, I will be happy to have it read, but it is the exact same amendment that was pending beforehand.

Mr. MCCAIN. Thank you.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

(Purpose: To address rules of professional responsibility for attorneys)

At the end of the instructions add the following:

“(c) RULES OF PROFESSIONAL RESPONSIBILITY FOR ATTORNEYS.—Not later than 180 days after the date of enactment of this section, the Commission shall establish rules, in the public interest and for the protection of investors, setting forth minimum standards of professional conduct for attorneys appearing and practicing before the Commission in any way in the representation of public companies, including a rule requiring an attorney to report evidence of a material violation of securities law or breach of fiduciary duty or similar violation by the company or any agent thereof to the chief legal counsel or the chief executive officer of the company (or the equivalent thereof) and, if the counsel or officer does not appropriately respond to the evidence (adopting as necessary, appropriate remedial measures or sanctions with respect to the violation), requiring the attorney to report the evidence to the audit committee of the board of directors, or to another committee of the board of directors comprised solely of directors not employed directly or indirectly by the company, or to the board of directors.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There appears to be.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 4272 TO AMENDMENT NO. 4271

(Purpose: To address procedures for banning certain individuals from serving as officers or directors of publicly traded companies, civil money penalties, obtaining financial records, broadened enforcement authority, and forfeiture of bonuses and profits)

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I send a second amendment to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Nevada [Mr. REID], for Mr. LEVIN, for himself, Mr. NELSON of Florida, Mr. HARKIN, Mr. CORZINE, and Mr. BIDEN, proposes an amendment numbered 4272 to amendment No. 4271.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(The amendment is printed in today's RECORD under “Text of Amendments.”)

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I appreciate the cooperation of the Senator from Arizona. There are other ways we could have gotten to the point we are now. This just made it a lot easier. I appreciate that very much.

I say this, before I yield the floor, to my friend from Arizona. We are now in the exact same posture we were in prior to the Senator from Arizona offering his amendment—his instructions, I should say.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arizona.

Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President, before the Senator from Nevada leaves the floor, I wonder if he would respond to a question. Do we intend to vote on these pending amendments and the motion to recommit?

Mr. REID. I say to my friend, we have been trying very hard. I have received instructions—it is probably the wrong word, but Senator EDWARDS has been here for 2 days, and he left here for a while this afternoon waiting to vote on his amendment. Senator LEVIN has been here for several days—2 days. We would like very badly to vote on the Levin second-degree amendment and the Edwards first-degree amendment.

I have spoken to the manager of the bill for the minority. It appears very unlikely that we are going to be able to do that. I think that is a disappointment. I think some of these relevant—I shouldn't say some—I think all of these relevant amendments we can get up to prior to the cloture vote, we should try to dispose of.

But I understand the rules of the Senate. I am disappointed to say, my friend from Texas also understands them, so even though I would like votes, it does not appear we are going to be able to have votes.

Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President, I thank my friend from Nevada for his candor. I think it is pretty obvious. Everybody ought to understand what is happening as we go through these arcane procedures.

The whole purpose of this—the whole purpose of what we just went through—is to not have a vote on anything that has to do with stock options. Let's be very clear what that is all about.

Whatever side you are on on the issue, the fix is in, as we say all too often in the sport of boxing. The fix is in and we will now have cloture invoked and there will not be a vote on stock options.

While my friend from Nevada is still here, I can tell him, I understand the rules of the Senate. I have been through other difficult issues on which I have been blocked from getting votes. I tell my friend from Nevada, and all of my colleagues, we will have a vote on stock options. We will have—sooner or later—a vote on stock options. And I only regret that we cannot do it now, get it over with, and get everybody on record.

I also would make one additional comment. I hope I do not harm the feelings of any of my colleagues. This is an important issue. This is a very important issue, no matter where you stand on the issue of stock options and how they should be accounted. It is a very important issue.

Why is it that this body would not take up the issue and have an up-or-down vote on how stock options are treated? I would ask the manager of the bill, why would we not at least allow a vote up or down?

I will read editorials. In fact, it may be sometime before I give up the floor because I have a lot to say about this issue. I will read from Mr. Greenspan's speech, a fairly widely respected individual, who says—well, I will read his speech in just a minute. He is in favor of treating stock options as an expense.

So is Mr. Stiglitz and Mr. Buffett, and so many others, who are aware of this issue and its impact and the way it has been terribly abused by the same people we are trying to go after, the same people we are after.

Mr. SARBANES. Will the Senator yield for a response to his question?

Mr. McCAIN. According to a recent analysis from 1996 to 2000, Enron issued nearly $600 million in stock options, collecting tax deductions, which allowed the corporation to severely reduce their payment in taxes. According to reports that I think I have here, over $1 billion in stock options were issued to the senior executives of WorldCom.

This is an important issue. I respect the views of my colleagues who disagree with my position and that of Mr. Greenspan, Mr. Stiglitz, and Mr. Buffett in various op-eds and editorials in newspapers throughout America. But why would we not vote on it? That is the question.

Why would the distinguished Senator and friend from Nevada feel it incumbent upon himself to not allow a vote on stock options? I guess that question can be answered by observers.

But here is the deal. I want to tell my friend from Nevada again, there will be a vote on how stock options are treated. I will repeat the amendment. I will repeat the amendment and will repeat it again several times before I finish discussing this issue. The issue, no matter how you feel, should be addressed. But through the invocation of cloture, everybody knows that the amendment and the motion to recommit will fall.

I want to repeat. The amendment is fairly clear-cut, fairly simple. We deal with a lot of arcane issues in the discussion of this regulatory reform. But I repeat:

Any corporation that grants a stock option to an officer or employee to purchase a publicly traded security in the United States shall record the granting of the option as an expense in that corporation's income statement for the year in which the option is granted.

It is very simple. It does not say anything about the tax treatment of it. It does not say anything about a number of other rather controversial aspects. It just says it will "record the granting of the option as an expense in that corporation's income statement. . . ."

Mr. President, it is curious to me—actually, it is not curious to me—why a vote on this amendment is blocked. It is because every lobbyist in this town for the high-tech community has said: Don't do it. Don't do it. The one thing that the folks in Silicon Valley are scared of more than anything else is that they would lose their precious stock options—all of it, of course, in the interest of the employee, only the employees, the secretaries, the workers, those people who are down there toiling in the bowels of the corporation, trying to get some incentive to stay there and have their retirement.

Meanwhile, Mr. Ellison, the CEO of Oracle, last year, cashes in $706 million worth of stock options, $706 million worth of stock options in 1 year. Are we going to vote on it? Yes, we will vote on it. Maybe not now, but unless there is cloture on every single bill that comes before this body, there will be a vote on stock options. I want to assure my friend from Nevada of that.

I will just remind him, there were many who wanted to block a vote on campaign finance reform for a long period of time. Well, we got our vote on campaign finance reform, and we will get a vote on stock options.

We have to end the double standard for stock options. Currently corporations can hide these multimillion-dollar compensation plans from their stockholders or other investors because these plans are not counted as an expense when calculating company earnings.

I want to make it perfectly clear to all, I am not in favor of doing away with stock options. Stock options have a valuable place in American corporate life. What we are addressing here is how they are treated so investors can know exactly what the profit and loss of a corporation is.

I repeat: I am not in favor of eliminating stock options. What I am trying to do is exactly in accordance with Mr. Greenspan's comments from which I will quote. Federal Reserve Chairman Alan Greenspan, New York University, March 26, 2002:

Some changes, however, appear overdue. In principle, stock-option grants, properly constructed, can be highly effective in aligning corporate officers' incentives with those of shareholders. Regrettably, the current accounting for options has created some perverse effects on the quality of corporate disclosures that, arguably, is further complicating the evaluation of earnings and hence diminishing the effectiveness of published income statements in supporting good corporate governance. The failure to include the value of most stock-option grants as employee compensation and, hence, to subtract them from pretax profits has increased reported earnings and presumably stock prices. This would be the case even if offsets for expired, unexercised options were made. The Financial Accounting Standards Board proposed to require expensing in the early to middle 1990s but abandoned the proposal in the face of significant political pressure.

The Federal Reserve staff estimates that the substitution of unexpensed option grants for cash compensation added about 2½ percentage points to reported annual growth in earnings of our larger corporations between 1995 and 2000. Many argue that this distortion to reported earnings growth contributed to a misallocation of capital investment, especially in high tech firms.

Especially in high-tech firms? Where is most of the opposition coming from to the proper accounting of stock options? From the high-tech firms. I repeat:

Many argue that this distortion to reported earnings growth contributed to a misallocation of capital investment, especially in high tech firms. If market participants indeed have been misled, that, in itself, should be surprising, for there is little mystery about the effect of stock-option grants on earnings reported to shareholders. Accounting rules require enough data on option grants be reported in footnotes to corporate financial statements to enable analysts to calculate reasonable estimates of their effect on earnings.

Some have argued that Black-Scholes option pricing, the prevailing means of estimating option expense, is approximate. But so is a good deal of other earnings estimates, as I indicated earlier. Moreover, every other corporation does report an implicit estimate of option expense on its income statement. That number for most, of course, is zero. Are option grants truly without any value?

I repeat Mr. Greenspan's question: Are option grants truly without any value?

Critics of option expensing have also argued that expensing will make raising capital more difficult. But expensing is only a bookkeeping transaction. Nothing real is changed in the actual operations or cash-flow of the corporation. If investors are dissuaded by lower reported earnings as a result of expensing, it means only that they were less informed than they should have been. Capital employed on the basis of misinformation is likely to be capital misused.

Critics of expensing also argue that the availability of options enables corporations to attract more-productive employees. That may well be true. But option expensing in no way precludes the issuance of options. To be sure, lower reported earnings as a result of expensing could temper stock price increases and thereby exacerbate the effects of share dilution. That, presumably, would inhibit option issuance. But again, that inhibition would be appropriate, because it would reflect the correction of misinformation.

I am not sure this debate is between me and the high-tech community. I think the debate is somewhat different. When you look at the preponderance of opinion, not only that stock options need to be expensed but the incredible effect that it has had on the whole distortion of the market, then it is an important issue.

I ask again: How can we really address the entire issue we are facing without addressing the issue of stock options? That is like playing a baseball game without third base.

Mr. Joseph Stiglitz, noble laureate professor of economics at Columbia University on Tuesday, March 12, 2002:

Some contend that it is difficult to obtain an accurate measure of the value of the options. But this much is clear: zero, the implicit value assigned under current arrangements, is clearly wrong. And leaving it to footnotes, to be sorted out by investors, is not an adequate response, as the Enron case has brought home so clearly. At the Council of Economic Advisers, we devised a formula that represented a far more accurate lower bound estimate of the value of the options than zero. Moreover, many firms use formulae for their own purposes, in valuing stock options (charging them against particular divisions of the firm). However, Treasury, in its opposition to the FASB concerns, was singularly uninterested in these alternatives. I leave it to others to hypothesize why that might have been the case.

If we are to have a stock market in which investors are to have confidence, if we are to have a stock market which avoids the kind of massive misallocation of resources that result when information provided does not accurately report the true condition of firms, we must have accounting and regulatory frameworks that address these issues. As derivatives and other techniques of financial engineering become more common, these problems too will become more pervasive. While headlines and journalistic accounts describe some of the inequities—those who have seen their pensions disappear as corporate executives have stashed away millions for themselves—what is also at stake is the long run well being of our economy. The problems of Enron and Global Crossing are part and parcel of the current downturn.

I was under the impression this legislation was all about trust and transparency—regaining the trust of the American people and investors in the stock market and, frankly, the economic system that drives America and has been so successful, and transparent. Perhaps under this legislation, by beefing up many of the penalties and regulations and many other things—many of which I have recommended and strongly supported and will have in further amendments, but how in the world do we say that we have given transparency when, in the view of most experts, this is one of the greatest hindrances to transparency in the system as it exists today?

I would now like to read the opinion of Mr. Warren Buffett, in the Washington Post, April 9, 2002, Stock Options and Common Sense:

In 1994 seven slim accounting experts, all intelligent and experienced, unanimously decided that stock options granted to a company's employees were a corporate expense.

Six fat CPAs, with similar credentials, unanimously declared these grants were no such thing.

Can it really be that girth, rather than intellect, determines one's accounting principles? Yes indeed, in this case. Obesity—of a monetary sort—almost certainly explained the split vote.

The seven proponents of expense recognition were the members of the Financial Accounting Standards Board, who earned $313,000 annually. Their six adversaries were the managing partners of the (then) Big Six accounting firms, who were raking in multiples of the pay received by their public-interest brethren.

In this duel the Big Six were prodded by corporate CEOs, who fought ferociously to bury the huge and growing cost of options, in order to keep their reported earnings artificially high. And in the pre-Enron world of client-influenced accounting, their auditors were only too happy to lend their support.

The members of Congress decided to adjudicate the fight—who, after all, could be better equipped to evaluate accounting standards?—and then watched as corporate CEOs and their auditors stormed the Capitol. These forces simply blew away the opposition. By an 88-9 vote, U.S. senators made a number of their largest campaign contributors ecstatic by declaring option grants to be expense-free. Darwin could have foreseen this result: It was survival of the fittest.

The argument, it should be emphasized, was not about the use of options. Companies could then, as now, compensate employees in any manner they wished. They could use cash, cars, trips to Hawaii or options as rewards—whatever they felt would be most effective in motivating employees.

But those other forms of compensation had to be recorded as an expense, whereas options—which were, and still are, awarded in wildly disproportionate amounts to the top dogs—simply weren't counted.

The CEOs wanting to keep it that way put forth several arguments. One was that options are hard to value. This is nonsense: I've bought and sold options for 40 years and know their pricing to be highly sophisticated. It's far more problematic to calculate the useful life of machinery, a difficulty that makes the annual depreciation charge merely a guess. No one, however, argues that this imprecision does away with a company's need to record depreciation expense. Likewise, pension expense in corporate America is calculated under widely varying assumptions, and CPAs regularly allow whatever assumption management picks.

Believe me, CEOs know what their option grants are worth. That's why they fight for them.

It's also argued that options should not lead to a corporate expense being recorded because they do not involve a cash outlay by the company. But neither do grants of restricted stock cause cash to be disbursed—and yet the value of such grants is routinely expensed.

Furthermore, there is a hidden, but very real, cash cost to a company when it issues options. If my company, Berkshire, were to give me a 10-year option on 1,000 shares of A stock at today's market price, it would be compensating me with an asset that has a cash value of at least $20 million—an amount the company could receive today if it sold a similar option in the marketplace. Giving an employee something that alternatively could be sold for hard cash has the same consequences for a company as giving him cash. Incidentally, the day an employee receives an option, he can engage in various market maneuvers that will deliver him immediate cash, even if the market price of his company's stock is below the option's exercise price.

Finally, those against expensing of options advance what I would call the "useful fairy-tale" argument. They say that because the country needs young, innovative companies, many of which are large issuers of options, it would harm the national interest to call option compensation as expense and thereby penalize the "earnings" of these budding enterprises.

Why, then, require cash compensation to be recorded as an expense given that it, too, penalizes earnings of young, promising companies? Indeed, why not have these companies issue options in place of cash for utility and rent payments—and then pretend that these expenses, as well, don't exist? Berkshire will be happy to received options in lieu of cash for many of the goods and services that we sell corporate America.

At Berkshire we frequently buy companies that awarded options to their employees—and then we do away with the option program. When such a company is negotiating a sale to us, its management rightly expects us to proffer a new performance-based cash program to substitute for the option compensation being lost. These managers—and we—have no trouble calculating the cost to the company of the vanishing program. And in making the substitution, of course, we take on a substantial expense, even though the company that was acquired had never recorded a cost for its option program.

Companies tell their shareholders that options do more to attract, retain and motivate employees than does cash. I believe that's often true. These companies should keep issuing options. But they also should account for this expense just like any other.

A number of senators, led by Carl Levin and John McCain, are now revising the subject of properly accounting for options. They believe that American businesses, large or small, can stand honest reporting, and that after Enron-Andersen, no less will do.

I think it is normally unwise for Congress to meddle with accounting standards. In this case, though, Congress fathered an improper standard—and I cheer its return to the crime scene.

This time Congress should listen to the slim accountants. The logic behind their thinking is simple.

One, if options aren't a form of compensation, what are they?

Two, if compensation isn't an expense, what is it?

Three, and if expenses shouldn't go into the calculation of earnings, where in the world should they go?

Mr. President, I have to admit to you that I stood fifth from the bottom of my class at the Naval Academy. I don't pretend to understand a lot of the nuances and hidden workings of the stock market or many of the issues we are facing today because there were some very imaginative CEOs and corporate officers who have deprived investors of their money and hundreds of thousands of people of their jobs. But even I can understand Mr. Buffett's questions:

If options aren't a form of compensation, what are they?

If compensation isn't an expense, what is it?

And if expenses should not go into the calculation of earnings, where in the world should they go?

Mr. President, that is why this amendment is simple:

Any corporation that grants a stock option to an officer or employee to purchase a publicly traded security in the United States shall record the granting of the option as an expense in that corporation's income statement for the year in which the option is granted.

That is not a complicated issue, and there will be discussion from time to time about what the tax implications are and all those things. I would be glad to have smarter people than I figure it out.

I want to read a letter to the editor of the New York Times by Steven Barr, senior contributing editor of CFO Magazine, April 5, 2002. Reference: "Leave Options Alone" by John Doerr and Frederick W. Smith:

What if, in the mid-1990s, accounting-rule makers had not caved in to lobbyists and instead had forced companies to recognize options as a compensation expense on financial statements?

There would still have been a technology boom, a bear market, and a period of recession. Such cycles are immutable. But there may have been less of the accounting gamesmanship that is now the object of government investigation and investor ire.

Options should count as an expense to the corporation, and the ability to exercise them should be based on stock performance that exceeds an index of peers.

Mr. President, one of the more egregious activities we have seen with some of these really unsavory people has been that while their company stock was declining, they exercised their stock options and sold them, making hundreds of millions of dollars.

As I said earlier, in the case of Enron—I heard WorldCom was $1.8 billion, or Enron, I am not sure which—at the same time in the case of Enron, the employees, in testimony before the Commerce Committee, said they were urged to hang on to the stock, hang on to the Enron stock. Meanwhile, the executives were selling the stock. I do not know of anything quite as egregious as that.

As I mentioned, according to a recent analysis from 1996 to 2000, Enron issued nearly $600 million in stock options, collecting tax deductions which allowed the corporation to severely reduce their payment in taxes.

I repeat, no other type of compensation gets treated as an expense for tax purposes without also being treated as an expense on the company books. This double standard is exactly the kind of inequitable corporate benefit that makes the American people irate and must be eliminated.

If companies do not want to fully disclose on their books how much they are compensating their employees, then they should not be able to claim a tax benefit for it.

The Washington Post, Thursday, April 18, 2000:

Alan Greenspan, perhaps the nation's most revered economist, thinks employee stock options should be counted, like salaries, as a company expense. Warren Buffett, perhaps the nation's foremost investor, has long argued the same line. The Financial Accounting Standards Board, the expert group that writes accounting rules, reached the same conclusion eight years ago. The London-based International Accounting Standards Board recently recommended the same approach. In short, a rather unshort list of experts endorses the common-sense idea that, whether you get paid in cash or company cars or options, the expense should be recorded. Yet today's Senate Finance Committee hearing on the issue is likely to be filled with dissenting voices. There could hardly be a better gauge of money's power in politics.

The Washington Post said:

There could hardly be a better gauge of money's power in politics.

Why does this matter? Because the current rules—which allow companies to grant executives and other employees millions of dollars in stock options without recording a dime of expenses—make a mockery of corporate accounts. Companies that grant stock options lavishly can be reporting large profits when the truth is they are taking a large loss. In 2000, for example, Yahoo reported a profit of $71 million, but the real number after adjusting for the cost of employee stock options was a loss of $1.3 billion. Cisco reported $4.6 billion in profit; the real number was a $2.7 billion loss.

Mr. President, those numbers are staggering. Let me repeat:

Yahoo reported a profit of $71 million, but the real number after adjusting for the cost of employee stock options was a loss of $1.3 billion. Cisco reported $4.6 billion in profits; the real number was a $2.7 billion loss. By reporting make-believe profits, companies may have conned investors into bidding up their stock prices. This is one cause of the Internet bubble, whose bursting helped precipitate last year's economic slowdown.

It is not surprising, therefore, that the expert consensus favors treating options as a corporate expense, which would mean that reported earnings might actually reflect reality. But the dissenters are intimidated by neither experts nor logic. They claim that the value of options is uncertain, so they have no idea what number to put into the accounts. But the price of an option can actually be calculated quite precisely, and managers have no difficulty doing the math for purposes of tax reporting. The dissenters also claim options are crucial to the health of young companies. But nobody wants to ban this form of compensation; the goal is merely to have it counted as an expense. Finally, dissenters say that options need not be so counted because granting them involves no cash outlay. But giving employees something that has cash value amounts to giving them cash.

The dissenters include weighty figures in both parties. Sen. JOE LIEBERMAN (D-Connecticut) is the chief opponent of options sanity in the Senate, and last week President Bush himself declared that Mr. Greenspan is wrong on this issue. What might be behind this? Many of the corporate executives who give generously to politicians are themselves the beneficiaries of options—often to the tune of millions of dollars. High-tech companies, an important source of campaign cash, are fighting options reform with all they've got. But if these lobbyists are allowed to win the argument, they will undermine a key principle of the financial system. Accounting rules are meant to ensure investors get good information. Without good information, they cannot know which companies will best use capital, and the whole economy suffers in the long run.

Mr. President, again, transparency and trust. Transparency and trust. Without transparency, we are not going to have trust.

A Washington Post, April 21, 2002, editorial; byline David S. Broder. Mr. Broder writes:

Thanks to the Enron scandal, the public is getting to know about a scheme that corporate executives have used for years, but that most of us were not smart enough to understand.

I include myself in that group that Mr. Broder describes.

You can call it the have-your-cake-and-eat-it-too ploy.

It involves stock options, the rights to buy company stock some time in the future at the (presumably bargain) price at which it is selling currently. Stock options awarded to senior management by their (usually hand-picked) boards of directors mushroomed from $50 billion in 1997 to $162 billion just three years later. As Business Week pointed out in its April 15 issue, boards have been "lavishing options on executives" so profiligately "that they now account for a staggering 15 percent of all shares outstanding."

This is obviously a good deal for the executives. One of them, Oracle Corporation's Lawrence Ellison, exercised options worth $706 million in one week. A nice mouthful of cake, by any standard.

But here's how his company—and all others like it—can have its cake, too. The value of the stock options granted Ellison is a cost to Oracle for tax purposes, but it doesn't come off the bottom line when Oracle is reporting its earnings for the year.

This would seem to defy common sense—and it does. Almost a decade ago, as the options craze was getting under way, the Federal Accounting Standards Board—the watchdog group—said that when options are granted, they should be treated as an expense in company reports as well as in tax returns. The corporate CEOs and the accounting firms they hire went nuts, and the next thing you knew, the Senate in 1994 was passing a resolution . . . telling the watchdog: forget it.

Mr. GRAMM. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? I do not want to break in, but a key point I would like to make—and I thought the Senator might want a breather—

Mr. MCCAIN. I would appreciate it if the Senator would phrase it in the form of a question, as he is very adept at doing. I will be glad to yield for his question.

Mr. GRAMM. I thought it was very important to make this point. What happened almost a decade ago when we saw this blossoming of stock options? The answer is, in 1993, we passed a law that said that if you paid a corporate executive more than $1 million a year in a plain old paycheck, you could not deduct it as an expense in running the business.

At that time, the largest companies in America—and I am trying to make a point that is in no way contradicting anything the Senator says, though I do not agree with a word of it, but what we said was you could not pay a corporate executive, through their paycheck, more than a million a year, even though the 50 largest companies in America were paying their corporate executives $3 million a year, on average.

When we passed that law, what happened? What happened is that corporate America, being clever—you do not make $3 million a year if you are not pretty smart—figured out ways around the law. Some of the ways around the law were getting loans from the company at low interest rates and getting stock options, which are now criticized as giving corporate leadership a very short-term horizon.

The only point I want to make is that everybody has forgotten that in 1993 Congress, in a demagogic amendment aimed at "rich people," started this whole process.

It struck me when you were saying this group of accountants got together in 1994, what they were doing was responding to a bad law, and the bad law helped trigger this. One of the things—and God knows it is not going to happen in the environment we are in now—but one of the things Congress ought to do is to repeal that law so General Electric could pay its CEO with a paycheck, like everybody else, instead of trying to find all these ways around the law. I just wanted to get in that advertisement.

Mr. MCCAIN. I would like to respond to the Senator's question by saying that I think the Senator makes a very valid point. I think this is probably none of Congress's business as to what salaries should be bestowed on a corporate executive, with truly independent boards of directors and with a voice of the stockholders.

Let me say to the Senator before he leaves, I am not talking about doing away with stock options. I am talking about how they are treated. They may have gotten around that, but it is how they are treated. As we get into the debate further, I would be glad to hear him respond to Mr. Buffett's three questions.

Mr. GRAMM. I would be happy to respond to Mr. Buffett.

Mr. MCCAIN. I ask unanimous consent for Senator GRAMM to respond without me losing my right to the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. GRAMM. I would be happy to respond to him. First, I would have been happy to have voted on the Senator's amendment.

Mr. MCCAIN. I thank the Senator.

Mr. GRAMM. Second, this is something I am happy to debate. The only point I wanted to make is that while we are all damning corporate America, our law, which said if you paid somebody more than $1 million a year it could not count as a business expense, really helped trigger all of this. One of the things we ought to be doing in the name of reform is to repeal that law.

When I tried today in Finance—the Senator said this would not be brought up in Finance, but today in the Finance Committee I thought we ought to have one Good Government amendment, and it failed, like logic and truth, for the lack of a second. That is my only point.

Mr. MCCAIN. I thank the Senator. I especially thank him for agreeing because the Senator from Texas—we have had our agreements, mostly agreements and occasional disagreements—has never, in all the years we have known each other, which goes back to our days in the other body, wanted to deprive anybody of a vote on an issue, no matter where he stood on that issue.

I regret deeply that it is clear, as I said earlier, the fix is in; there is not going to be a vote on this issue before cloture is invoked, but I want to again assure my colleagues there will be a vote. There will be a vote on this issue, just like when I was blocked for a long time on the line-item veto, I was blocked for a long time on campaign finance reform, I have been blocked on a lot of other issues but we always got a vote because that is my right as a Senator to get a vote.

It is not my right as a Senator to determine the outcome, but it is my right as a Senator to get a vote on an issue, particularly when, in the view of any observer, stock options are a key issue in this entire debate.

Again, I respect the views of the Senator from Texas who disagrees with my position. I think it is a respectful disagreement that we have. I look forward to debating him. I do so at some disadvantage because he is a trained economist and former professor of economics.

I can also see why he would want to do away with that million-dollar cap because I am sure the Senator from Texas will make more than a million dollars when he leaves this body, and justifiably so given his talent, expertise, and experience. I wish him well. I wish him every success in doing so.

At least the Senator from Texas is in agreement that we should have a vote on this issue.

The question is going to be raised by me and others, time after time: Why did we not have a vote on this issue? If we are truly committed to reforming the system, restoring trust and transparency to the system, why do we not have a vote on it? That is a very legitimate question. There will be a vote.

I will return to Mr. Broder's editorial. He talks about that:

The Federal Accounting Standards Board said that when options are granted, they should be treated as an expense.

And the Senate passed a resolution telling the watchdogs, forget it.

And that has had a truly wondrous effect. On average, the Federal Reserve Board estimates, the ruling has boosted the reported earnings growth of corporations by 3 percentage points from a realistic 6 percent to an inflated 9 percent. Enron, it is estimated, used that same ruling in 2000 to inflate its earnings by more than 10 percent. Overstated earnings, of course, boost stock prices, thus benefiting the executives who have been given stock options.

By the way, I might add, not only stock options but it increases compensation because the stock value is inflated.

But that is not the end of it. Because these stock options are deductible for tax purposes, and their cost can be carried forward for years, they also enable companies that hand out a lot of options to stiff-arm the IRS. In Enron's case, they allowed the company to cut its tax bill by $625 million between 1996 and 2000.

Especially on my side of the aisle, there is this continuous drumbeat: Let us make the tax cuts permanent; let us do away with the death taxes; let us make the tax cuts permanent; let us help the American taxpayer. Should we not try to make a corporation pay its legitimate taxes? In Enron's case, because of the use of stock options, they allowed the company to cut its tax bill by $625 million over a period of 4 years. Amazing.

Thanks to Enron, another push is under way to stop the double-dealing. But it faces tough sledding. The Coalition to Preserve and Protect Stock Options, which includes 32 influential trade associations, is flooding Congress with 'talking points' claiming that 'stock options are a vital tool in the battle for economic growth and job creation . . . (and) to attract, retain and motivate talent.'

The coalition is trying to kill a bill that would not end stock options but simply specify that companies could not use them to reduce their taxes unless they also report them as an expense in their financial statements.

The bill has bipartisan sponsorship: Democratic Senators CARL LEVIN of Michigan, MARK DAYTON of Minnesota and DICK DURBIN of Illinois; Republican Senators JOHN MCCAIN of Arizona and PETER FITZGERALD of Illinois. FITZGERALD is particularly interesting. He is from a wealthy banking family and is a staunch conservative, but Enron has made him almost a raging populist.

It has had no such effect on President Bush. Concerned as always for the deserving rich, he told the Wall Street Journal he opposes this kind of legislation. . . . But Federal Reserve Board Chairman Alan Greenspan testified recently in support of expensing stock options. The only issue, he said, is whether under current rules, "is income being properly recorded? And I would submit to you that the answer is no."

That is what Alan Greenspan says: Is income being properly reported? And I would submit to you that the answer is no.

And superinvestor Warren Buffett, who hands out bonuses but not stock options to his employees—

By the way, I have not heard of any bad morale or failure to attract employees out at Berkshire Hathaway out in Omaha, a lovely place to live—for years has been asking three questions: "If options aren't a form of compensation, what are they? If compensation isn't an expense, what is it? And if expenses shouldn't go into the calculation of earnings, where in the world should they go?"

That is what Mr. Broder has to say.

Paul Krugman, on May 17, 2002:

On Tuesday Standard & Poor's, the private bond rating agency, announced that it would do something unprecedented: It will try to impose accounting standards substantially stricter than those required by the federal government. Instead of taking corporate reports at face value, S&P. will correct the numbers to eliminate what it considers the inappropriate treatment of "one-time" expenses, pension fund earnings and, above all, stock options—a major part of executive compensation that, according to federal standards, somehow isn't a business expense. S&P.'s estimate of "core earnings" for the 500 largest companies slashes reported profits by an astonishing 25 percent.

Why does S&P.—along with Warren Buffett, Alan Greenspan and just about every serious financial economist—think that current accounting standards require a drastic overhaul? And if such an overhaul is needed, why doesn't the government do it? Why does S&P. think that it must do the job itself?

To see the absurdity of the current rules, consider stock options. An executive is given the right to purchase shares of the company's stock, at a fixed price, some time in the future. If the stock rises, he buys at bargain prices. If the stock falls, he doesn't exercise the option. At worst, he loses nothing; at best, he makes a lot of money. Nice work if you can get it.

Yet according to federal accounting standards, such deals don't cost employers anything, as long as the guaranteed price isn't below the market price on the day the option is granted. Of course, this ignores the "heads I win, tails you lose" aspect; executives get a share of investors' gains if things go well, but don't share the losses if things go badly. In fact, companies literally apply a double standard: they deduct the cost of options from taxable income, even while denying that they cost anything in their profit statements.

So how could it possibly make sense not to count options as a cost? Defenders of the current system argue that stock options align the interests of executives with those of investors. Even if that were true, however, it wouldn't justify ignoring the cost—no more than it would make sense to deny that wages, which provide incentives to workers, are a business expense. Furthermore, it's now clear that stock options, far from reliably inducing executives to serve shareholders, often create perverse incentives. At worst, they handsomely reward managers who run their companies as pump-and-dump schemes, executives at Enron and many other companies got rich thanks to stock prices that soared before they collapsed.

I hope the opponents of this provision, including my friend from Texas, will put it into the real-world context. It is nice to talk about economic theory. I know of no one better at that than the Senator from Texas. What happened at Enron? What happened at Enron when it cashed in $600 million worth of stock options and the stock tanks and there are 10,000 or so employees out of work? And there was a period of time where the employees were not allowed, because they were undergoing some managerial change of their portfolio, to cash in their stock options. But the executives were not prohibited from doing so. They kept on doing it. They kept on doing it.

So I hope we can have this debate not in the world of theories of economics. I am not a CPA, nor am I a professor of economics, nor am I as smart as most of the Members of this body, but I know what happened to these people. I know of the thousands left penniless. I know of the thousands whose retirement savings were wiped out.

Meanwhile, the very people this whole stock option deal was supposed to be protecting were not protected, and yet somehow the executives all made out like bandits.

Perhaps my colleagues, as they oppose this legislation, can talk about the real-world examples—not the theoretical world of economics, which I will immediately grant them a distinct advantage on. I would like for them to have the opportunity to meet some of these employees, as I have, who were told by the executives of the corporation the stock was in great shape, while they were dumping the stock. I would like for them to talk to the employees or the retirees who invested enormous amounts of their money and their life savings, in some cases in a stock, and were told by their employers and executives that everything was great, things could not be better, estimates of double the stock value over the next few years.

That is the framework of this debate, not the framework of whether certain economic theories are valid or not.

Options are only part of an accounting system in deep trouble. As David Blitzer, S&P.'s chief investment strategist, recently wrote, "Financial markets are as much a social contract as is democratic government." Yet there is a growing sense that this contract is being broken, undermining the trust that is so essential to the operation of financial markets. Clearly, major reforms are needed. And bear in mind that this isn't a left-right issue; it's about protecting investors—middle-class and wealthy alike from exploitation by self-dealing insiders. So who could possibly be opposed? You'd be surprised.

Harvey Pitt, the accounting industry lawyer who heads the Securities and Exchange Commission, has clearly been dragging his feet on reform.

Bear in mind, this is not a left-right issue. It is about protecting investors, middle class and wealthy alike, from exploitation by self-dealing insiders. So who could possibly be opposed? You would be surprised. Harvey Pitt, the accounting industry lawyer who heads the Securities and Exchange Commission, has clearly been dragging his feet on reform. Mr. Blitzer of S&P points out that in previous periods of corporate scandal, legislatures and prosecutors took the lead with public concerns over the market.

It is a sad commentary on our leadership that this time he believes he must do the job himself—referring to Standard and Poors—and announced that it would impose accounting standards substantially stricter than those required by the Federal Government.

Boston Globe, June 10, 2002:

Stock options have become the currency of choice to reward high ranking executives in part because under current rules the company need not count them as an expense with much of their compensation. Depending on the difference between the option price of the stock and the market price, it is no wonder that some executives have used trickery to show quarterly growth and inflate the worth of their companies. Excessive reliance on stock options is a license for some executives to drive their companies along treacherous roads.

I have a number of other views, but I think I have made my point. The point is this: Why should we, in the name of restoring confidence, trust, and transparency to the American people on an issue of this import, not have a vote? That is the first question.

The second question that needs to be answered is Mr. Buffett's question, not mine; not mine because I don't claim to have a corner on expertise and knowledge on this issue. But I believe that Mr. Buffett does. I believe that Mr. Greenspan does. I believe that literally every outside observer and economist does. If options aren't a form of compensation, what are they? If compensation isn't an expense, what is it? And if expenses shouldn't go into the calculation of earnings, where in the world should they go?

I know what I will hear in response. In fact, most of those have already been responded to so I don't intend to engage in extended debate about it. We all know where the majority stock options have gone—to the executives, not to the workers. Mr. Buffett, and many others, have been able to attract good and talented employees and retain them without having to resort to stock options.

But the real question is not whether stock options are good or bad because the intent of the amendment is not to do away with stock options. The intent of the amendment is simply to give an accurate depiction of what stock options are. And that is clearly compensation. Depreciation is listed as an expense. In the view of many, that is much harder to calculate than a stock option.

Another argument I anticipate will be, how do you treat it taxwise? Frankly, I would be glad to treat it taxwise as to how the smartest people at the SEC would say it should be treated. I would leave that up to the two experts. But to not treat it as an expense, as Mr. Buffett says, of course is just Orwellian. It is Orwellian.

Mr. LEVIN. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. McCAIN. I am sorry my colleague will not allow a vote. I will be glad to respond to my colleague from Michigan.

Mr. LEVIN. I appreciate the Senator's yielding for a question. I wonder if the Senator would agree that the following individuals and organizations support the change in accounting for stock options, which the Senator has outlined: Alan Greenspan, Paul Volcker, Arthur Levitt, Warren Buffett, as the Senator mentioned, TIAA-CREF, Paul O'Neill, Standard &

Poor's, Council for Institutional Investors, Consumer Federation, Consumers Union, AFL/CIO—among others? Would the Senator agree that those organizations support a change in the accounting for stock options?

Mr. MCCAIN. I would say to my friend, yes. I think there is another important organization, the Federal Accounting Standards Board—I believe it is—the international.

Mr. LEVIN. There are some additional organizations.

Mr. MCCAIN. Yes.

Mr. LEVIN. I wanted to give the Financial Accounting Standards Board.

Mr. MCCAIN. Yes.

Mr. LEVIN. Does the Senator remember, as I do very vividly because I appeared before the Federal Financial Standards Board in the middle 1990s to support their independence, when they decided that you had to expense options, that it was compensation, that it had value like all other forms of compensation?

Does the Senator remember what the Financial Accounting Standards Board decided when they left it optional, as to whether or not to either expense options or to show them as a footnote—just to disclose them without actually expensing them? Because if the Senator does not, I would like to read what the Financial Accounting Standards Board said about the pressure they were put under, the horrendous, horrific pressure they were put under, and how they could have, indeed, been put out of existence if they went forward with what they believed was right, which is what Warren Buffett says.

If the Senator does not remember those words, I wonder if he might yield to me to read them, without losing his right to the floor.

Mr. MCCAIN. Yes.

Mr. LEVIN. This is what the Financial Accounting Standards Board said. They had proposed that stock options be expensed. That was their proposal. This is the board of accountants.

The debate on accounting for stock-based compensation, unfortunately, became so divisive that it threatened the Board's future working relationship with some of its constituents. Eventually the nature of the debate threatened the future of accounting standards setting in the private sector. The Board continues to believe that financial statements would be more relevant and representationally faithful if the estimated fair value of employee stock options was included in determining an entity's net income, just as all other forms of compensation are included. To do so would be consistent with accounting for the cost of all other goods and services received as consideration for equity instruments. However, in December 1994, the Board decided that the extent of improvement in financial reporting that was envisioned when this project was added to its technical agenda and when the Exposure Draft was issued was not attainable because the deliberate, logical consideration of issues that usually leads to improvement in financial reporting was no longer present.

That is the climate that was created for this Board in 1994. And when the accountants, the Board, the Financial Accounting Standards Board of this country, said they have value, these options, they are compensation, they should be accounted for in the financial statement, they were hit upon so hard that even when they said we are throwing in the towel because it could destroy us, even when they said we will allow it to be shown as a footnote, not required to be taken as an expense—even then, they said this is not the right way to proceed.

We are now creating—I should ask a question, I think, given the request I made.

Does the Senator not agree that ideally what we should be allowing here is an independent Financial Accounting Standards Board to determine the rules?

Mr. MCCAIN. I could not agree more with the Senator from Michigan. I think he knows how strongly I believe that options should be expensed because they are compensation and they have value and there is no other form of compensation that is not expensed. It is a stealthy form of compensation and has driven the excesses of the 1990s. These options have driven the deceptions that make these financial statements for corporations look better than those corporations' situations really are because they have created so much value in those options that then executives—mainly executives—were able to cash in on these options and make tens of millions of dollars based on financial accounting which was deceptive.

Would the Senator agree with that and agree that ideally these standards should be set by an independent financial accounting standards board?

Mr. MCCAIN. I say to my friend from Michigan, first of all, it was the Senator from Michigan who first initiated discussion with me on this issue several years ago. We were treated as virtual pariahs for having the audacity to challenge what was then, as we now know, a high-tech bubble in the way stock options were being disbursed.

By the way, let's do away with the myth that these stock options are for the average worker. The fact is the overwhelming majority of the stock options have gone to the chief executives. That is just a matter of record and fact.

But I think the Senator is correct. I think the Senator has also an additional, I think important, corollary to this amendment, that we could have certain direction from FASB, as it is known. But I think it is also a clear-cut, black-and-white issue as to how stock options should be treated.

I would be glad to agree with the Senator from Michigan that some of these aspects of it can be better handled by the experts.

Finally, the Senator from Nevada and the Senator from Maryland are in the Chamber. I hope they will reconsider and allow a vote postcloture at some time on this important amendment. I do not see how you can possibly go to the American people and say: Look, we have discussed and debated all these issues, but we wouldn't allow a vote on the issue of stock options.

There is no observer who does not believe that the issue of stock options is one of significant importance in this entire scenario of returning trust and transparency so we can regain the confidence of the American investor.

Again, I assure my friends, we will have a vote on this issue at some time, whether it be now on this bill or whether it be the next bill or the bill after that. So I hope my colleague from Nevada and my colleague from Maryland will allow an up-or-down vote on this amendment.

Mr. LEVIN. Will the Senator yield for one last question?

Mr. MCCAIN. I am glad to.

Mr. LEVIN. Assuming cloture is invoked, there is still, does my friend agree, the possibility at least of voting on germane amendments relating to this subject? So the amendment which is germane postcloture does not state what the Senator from Arizona and I believe, which is that unless we deal with this, we are missing a huge problem, we are not addressing a huge problem that has driven the situation that we now face in terms of deceptive financial statements. But, in any event, will the Senator from Arizona agree that at least postcloture, if an amendment is germane which says it is determined that FASB or an independent accounting board reviewed this matter, that at least there could be a vote at that time on something which carries out the spirit of what the Senator from Arizona and I have been fighting for, which is that an independent accounting board be allowed to proceed without threatening its very existence to determine what is the proper accounting for stock options?

Mr. MCCAIN. I apologize to my colleagues for taking as much time as I have on this subject. As I said, I believe it is one of transcending importance in the minds of average American citizens. Yes. I would support the Senator's amendment postcloture. But I would also have to add that it doesn't address the issue completely. Here is why.

The Senator from Michigan just talked about how these boards have been intimidated and bullied into backing off of a position they had before. I can't have the confidence that any board that is subject to the kind of intimidation and bullying that has happened in the past would properly carry out what is a pretty simple operation.

I understand the Senator's point. I will support his amendment postcloture. I think it is an important one. But there has to be a clear signal sent. That clear signal is this: As Mr. Buffett says, if it isn't compensation, what is it? If options are not a form of compensation, what are they? If compensation is not an expense, what is it? If expenses shouldn't go into the calculation of earnings, where in the world should they go? This answers Mr. Buffett's question. We know where it should go—as an expense.

Again, I am not trying to do away with stock options but how it is treated so the American people can restore their confidence.

Mr. LEVIN. Will the Senator yield for a couple of questions which his comments have raised?

Mr. SARBANES. Will the Senator yield? The Senator directed a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arizona has the floor.

Mr. MCCAIN. I would be glad to yield to the Senator from Maryland for a comment without yielding my right to the floor.

Mr. SARBANES. I wanted to respond at this point because the Senator just directed a question. We are not trying to prevent a vote on your amendment. We have been trying repeatedly to get votes on these amendments. Senator EDWARDS has had an amendment pending in here for now more than a day. We can't get a vote on it. Senator LEVIN has had an amendment pending. We have a list of people who want to offer amendments. We have been trying to work through these amendments. Now the Senator has come with his amendment. There are a lot of amendments around here on which people are trying to get votes. I think they are entitled to those votes.

I know you have a problem. But I take some umbrage as sort of having it placed on my shoulders. In fact, I think that is totally inaccurate, and I just want to make sure I put that on the record.

Mr. MCCAIN. Thank you.

I ask unanimous consent that the McCain amendment be allowed postcloture.

Mr. REID. Objection.

Mr. MCCAIN. So you see.

Mr. SARBANES. No. That doesn't approve anything. The Senator wants his amendment—

Mr. MCCAIN. I have the floor.

Mr. SARBANES. And denies everybody else.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arizona has the floor.

Mr. MCCAIN. I thank the Chair.

I think I have made my point.

Mr. SARBANES. No. You haven't made your point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arizona has the floor.

Mr. MCCAIN. I would like to respond to the question of the Senator from Michigan, if he would like.

Mr. SARBANES. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. MCCAIN. I would be glad to yield, if the Senator from Michigan would be glad to yield.

Mr. SARBANES. It is a very clever trick, but you haven't made your point. There are other Members here with amendments that are very important to them which they are trying to have considered. We have been trying to process those amendments in an orderly way. The Senator arrives on the scene and apparently thinks, well, there should be a special set of rules for the Senator to do his amendment. So he just now tried to jump ahead of other people, and a reasonable objection was made. And I think it ought to have been made. The Senator from Arizona comes in, and, all of a sudden, there is going to be a special set of rules to deal with his amendment. The Senator doesn't even recognize what is in the bill, which does try to address to some extent this problem with independent funding and FASB that this legislation provides for—which everyone agrees is long overdue and is an important contribution.

But we have these people lined up here who want to do amendments. We have the Edwards amendment, we have the Levin amendment, and we have a whole list of people with amendments. We have been trying to process those amendments, and we have not been able to do it.

As one who is down here trying to work overtime to get these amendments processed, I want to very strongly register that point.

Mr. REID addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arizona has the floor.

Mr. MCCAIN. I still have the floor. I thank the Senator from Maryland. I appreciate his hard work managing the legislation. I have managed bills in my time. I know that sometimes it gets very frustrating and difficult.

I have some suggestions. One is that the Senator oppose cloture so that we can address all of these issues and prevail on his colleagues to do so so that we can have relevant amendments considered.

I also think—it is not just in this Senator's view but in the view of almost everyone, in the view of Alan Greenspan, in the view of Warren Buffett, in the view of the Washington Post and the New York Times, and everybody—that this is a serious and vital issue.

So my suggestion is that we not have a cloture vote, and that we go ahead and take up the amendments in an orderly fashion. The Senator from Nevada, obviously, will not allow my amendment to be considered postcloture.

The Senator from Michigan has a question. Would the Senator from Nevada, the distinguished whip, like to wait until the Senator from Michigan is finished, or would you like to go ahead?

Mr. LEVIN. My question was actually touched upon by the Senator from Arizona relative to the independence of the Financial Accounting Standards Board, and as to whether or not the Senator was aware—at least now in this bill—that we have the source of financing for that board which hopefully will not only allow it to reach its own conclusion, as it did once before, that options have value and should be expensed but also that it carry through with it without threatening their own survival.

I think that is an important part of this. But at least that gives us hope this time that when the Financial Accounting Standards Board reviews this matter—if it does—it will reach a conclusion not only that it believes it, but it can then implement it through an accounting standard.

That was my question about that funding source in this bill.

Mr. MCCAIN. I would like to respond. I understand that. I did know it is part of the bill. I also know what has happened in the past. The fact is that we have not made the changes which are necessary because of enormous pressures that have been brought to bear.

The Senate should be on record on this issue. This is not a minor issue. This is not a small item. The Senate should be on record on this issue, and it apparently will not be at this time.

I thank my colleagues, though I do think that it is an important step forward. But I also believe this is something that we could address in a straightforward fashion.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, will my colleague yield for 60 seconds so I can make a statement on this subject prior to a unanimous consent, or an address on a different part of my amendment?

Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President, I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I thank Senator MCCAIN for his steadfast support of the issue which is critically important.

Unless we address the way stock options are dealt with in this country—the fact that it is now a free ride, and stealth compensation which has caused, in large measure, the problems because accepted accounting practices, as we have seen, are significantly driven by the option accounting which allows options to be left off the financial statements as an expense, and, therefore, cashed in when those books of the company show great value, which is not reality, but nonetheless drives up stock prices—I want to say that I agree with the Senator from Arizona. Unless we address this issue, we are leaving a huge gap in our reform efforts.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, the Senator from Maryland has tried now for several days to figure out a way to have amendments. We have tried to negotiate. We have had those which have been arbitrated. We have had some cajoling. We have had a little bit of begging. We have gotten nowhere. But the rules of the Senate are the rules of the Senate. Therefore, it would be contrary to my beliefs to have a special set of rules for the Senator from Arizona, as well intentioned as his amendment may be.

I have had phone calls. I have had personal visits from at least 15 Democratic Senators saying they have amendments that they believe in very strongly. They and their staffs have worked on some of these amendments for months. They are not going to be able to offer those amendments.

Mr. GRAMM. There are 58 Democratic amendments.

Mr. REID. So it would be totally unfair to have a nongermane amendment that would be available for us postcloture. That is why I object. If I had to do it again, I would do the same thing.

But let me say this. People can complain—and I have no problem with their doing so—that we have not been able to go through the relevant amendments, but this legislation that has been brought to us by the Banking Committee and has now been improved upon by the Judiciary Committee's amendment of Senator LEAHY is a very fine piece of legislation.

Let's not lose track of that. This is a very fine vehicle. Maybe we could do a better job—put some rearview mirrors on both sides of it, maybe improve the upholstery a little bit, but the legislation we have that will be voted on and approved by the Senate is very good.

The Public Company Accounting Reform and Investor Protection Act would establish the Public Company Accounting Oversight Board to set standards for auditing public companies.

It would inspect accounting firms. It would conduct investigations into possible violations of its rules and impose a full range of sanctions. It would restrict the nonaudit services a public accounting firm may provide to its clients that are public in nature. It would require a public accounting firm to rotate its lead partner and review partner on audits after 5 consecutive years of auditing a public company.

It would require chief executive officers and chief financial officers to certify the accuracy of financial statements and disclosures. It would require CEOs and CFOs to relinquish bonuses and other incentive-based compensation and profit on stock sales in the event of accounting restatements resulting from fraudulent noncompliance with Securities and Exchange Commission financial reporting requirements.

It would prohibit directors and executive officers from trading company stock during blackout periods. It would require scheduled disclosures of adjustment statements. It would establish bright-line boundaries to prohibit stock analyst conflicts of interest.

It would authorize about $300 million more than the President's budget for the SEC next year to enhance its investigation and enforcement capabilities.

I will not go through all the details of the amendment that has been approved by the Senate, offered by Senator LEAHY, making certain things criminal in nature and increasing the penalties.

This is a fine piece of legislation. But I do say this. The Senator from Maryland is in the Chamber. I am confident the Senator from Maryland would agree to a unanimous consent request that on relevant amendments, determined by the Parliamentarian, we have a half hour on each one, and as soon as the half hour is up, vote on them.

I ask the Senator from Maryland, you would agree to that, wouldn't you?

Mr. SARBANES. It would be one way of trying to deal with these amendments and dispose of them. A request of that sort ought to be carefully considered, certainly.

We have this problem. Members have amendments pending. We have been trying to move the amendments forward. We have not been able to do that. I know how frustrated they are. I share their frustration.

(Mrs. CARNAHAN assumed the chair.)

Mr. REID. But in spite of all this, I want the RECORD to be spread with the fact that we have a good piece of legislation. I would like, as I said before, to have some of the fancier upholstery—

Mr. SARBANES. If the Senator will yield, it is interesting, in the debate we just had, until the Senator from Michigan underscored the fact, it was not pointed out that we provide independent funding in this legislation for the Financial Accounting Standards Board, which has the responsibility of setting these accounting standards.

Their problem in the past has been that they are voluntarily funded from the industry. They have to go to them and beg for money in order to carry out their activities. And if the industry thinks they are going to do a ruling that is contrary to what they want, then they are not as willing to support their activity.

We eliminate that in this bill because we have a mandatory fee that must be paid by all issuers, and the Board will be funded out of that money. So that, in itself, is a very important and significant step in establishing the independence of the Accounting Standards Board.

Mr. REID. Madam President, I have spoken with the Presiding Officer and staff on several occasions. Yours is our next amendment in order. You have been waiting 2 days to have that amendment offered, a very important amendment. And you are just one of several. You are fortunate in that you are the next one, if we can ever get to the next one.

I would ask my friend—

Mr. GRAMM. I have the next Republican amendment.

Mr. REID. We know we have to be burdened with a Republican amendment once in a while.

I say to my friend, would the Senator consider my proposal to have relevant amendments debated—and the relevancy would be determined by the Chair—for a half hour on each one of those and, at the end of the half hour, have a vote up-or-down on that amendment?

Mr. GRAMM. The Senator is already in a big fight with Senator MCCAIN. I do not know why he wants to try to pick one with other people.

Where we are is, we are going to cloture. And there are rules in the Senate. And postcloture, for an amendment, the ticket to get into the arena is it has to be germane, which means it must be directly related to a provision in the bill. It cannot amend the bill in more than one place. There is a certain set of rules.

If the Senator would indulge me a second, we have 36 Republicans who want to offer an amendment. My amendment is next on the list. I am the ranking member of this committee, and it appears I am not going to get an opportunity to offer an amendment. Now, I could cry and pout about it, but it would not change anything and would not change the world either. There are 58 Democrat amendments.

The point is, we all agree on one thing: Whether you like this bill or you do not like it, it is an important bill and we need to get on with it. We need to pass it. We need to go to conference. We need to work out an agreement with the House and with the White House. If we sat here and tried to do 36 Republican amendments and 58 Democrat amendments—and some of them having to do with things such as the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals and bankruptcy law—we would literally spend 3 or 4 months. So there is no other alternative than following the rules of the Senate. And that is exactly what I want to do.

Mr. REID. Reclaiming the floor, I have always enjoyed the Texas drawl of my friend, the senior Senator from Texas. But even through the drawl, I understood that to be a no.

Mr. GRAMM. Yes. Yes, it was a no.

Mr. REID. My friend, the other Senator from Arizona, is on the floor. We are waiting for the Republican leader. I assume that will be soon.

I ask my friend from Wyoming, when the Republican leader does appear, if he would be kind enough to allow us to attempt to enter into an agreement.

I ask the Senator, if you see him come to the floor, would you be so kind as to yield the floor for just a short time? It would be appreciated.

Mr. ENZI. I would be happy to interrupt my remarks at that time. I would hope my remarks would appear as uninterrupted.

Mr. REID. I would agree.

UNANIMOUS CONSENT REQUEST—

Mr. REID. Madam President, the Republican leader is on the floor. I will propound a unanimous consent request. This relates to H.R. 5011, the military construction appropriations bill.

I ask unanimous consent that a time to be determined by the majority leader, following consultation with the Republican leader, the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 486, H.R. 5011, the military construction appropriations bill; and that it be considered under the following limitations: that immediately after the bill is reported, all after the enacting clause be stricken and the text of Calendar No. 479, S. 2709, the Senate committee-reported bill, be inserted in lieu thereof; that debate time on the bill and substitute amendment be limited to a total of 45 minutes, with an additional 20 minutes under the control of Senator MCCAIN; that the only other amendment in order be an amendment offered by Senators FEINSTEIN and HUTCHISON of Texas which is at the desk, with debate limited to 10 minutes on the Feinstein and Hutchison of Texas amendment; that upon the use or yielding back of time on the amendment, without further intervening action or debate, the Senate proceed to vote on adoption of the amendment; that all debate time not already identified in this agreement be equally divided and controlled between the Chair and ranking member of the subcommittee or their designee; that upon the disposition of the Feinstein-Hutchison amendment and the use or yielding back of the time, the substitute amendment, as amended, be agreed to; the bill, as amended, be read three times; that section 303 of the Congressional Budget Act be considered waived; and the Senate then vote on passage of the bill; that upon passage of the bill, the Senate insist on its amendment and then request a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses; and that the Chair be authorized to appoint conferees on the part of the Senate without further intervening action or debate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. LOTT. Madam President, reserving the right to object, first, I would say that I am glad we have reached the point where we are prepared to start trying to move some appropriations bills. We are way late in the year. But ordinarily, we move anywhere from as few as five to as many as nine in July. I hope we can begin to get on a roll here pretty soon on the appropriations bills because there are a lot of things we need to do, but there are a few things we must do. One of them is, we have to pass the bills to fund the Government for the next fiscal year, and the fiscal year ends the 1st of October.

I am glad this is being asked for consideration now. I want to thank the managers and both sides of the aisle for allowing time for Senator MCCAIN and others to review the managers' package. I understand that has been worked out and has been cleared. I think this is a good way to consider this legislation.

There may be objection, but I want the RECORD to reflect that I strongly support this unanimous consent request and I support this legislation. It is more than what the President asked for in this particular category, but it still has to go to conference. I hope that it can be worked out in such a way that it would be acceptable to the President.

There are those who are worried that any time a bill of this nature moves through the process, they lose an opportunity for critical matters to be considered. For instance, let me be specific, because I think Senator KYL may talk about this, there are those from the West and maybe other areas that have had fires in their States—we know some of those in Colorado, Arizona, and New Mexico—and floods, such as the one they have had in Texas. There has probably been well in excess of $1 billion used, involved in fighting the fires. Now that is going to be needed to deal with the floods in Texas.

Those funds have been provided by transfer of funds from other accounts. One of two things is going to happen: We are going to replenish the funds taken from those accounts or those accounts are going to come up short. Understandably, the Senators from the States affected want to make sure there is going to be an opportunity for them to provide the funds that have been used or replace the funds that have been used to make sure money is there for upcoming needs.

I am sympathetic to that. I don't think this is the last train out of the Senate. If this bill moves, there will be another one, and hopefully we will be moving two or three appropriations bills every week.

There may be other considerations about what do we do if we don't get an agreement on the supplemental this week. I hope that within the next 24 hours something can be worked out on the supplemental appropriations bill, which, by the way, has been hanging around now for over 100 days, probably closer to 120 days by now. It is time to get an agreement. At some point, if we don't get the supplemental funds, we may wind up not having adequate funds for our airport security workers, the Transportation Security Agency, and it will begin to affect the Defense Department. I hope we can get all of this worked out.

I am sympathetic to those worried about that and the fires. But I don't think that is justification for not moving forward on the military construction appropriations bill. I support this request. I want the RECORD to be clear about how I feel about the request and the legislation.

With that, I withdraw my reservation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

The Senator from Nevada.

Mr. REID. Madam President, I know there is another reservation, but I just want to respond to the leader because I want him to be able to retire to his office when he feels necessary.

I had the opportunity to chair the Military Construction Subcommittee and worked as ranking member. It is an extremely important subcommittee for the military. With what has been going on in Afghanistan, it is compounded as to its importance. That is why the two Senators who run this committee, the Senators from California and Texas, Mrs. FEINSTEIN and Mrs. HUTCHISON, have worked so hard getting it in a posture that has been signed off by literally everyone, including Senator MCCAIN, who has reviewed the work done. They have done a wonderful job.

I would also say to my friend from Arizona, Nevada, last year and the year before, was scourged with terrible fires. We didn't have forest fires; we had range fires that burned millions of acres. We were able to get money to help replenish those rangelands so depleted as a result of the fires.

I have been here a long time. I never remember a time when we did not respond to take care of the needs caused by fires in this country. Most of the fires occur in the West. We have always handled that.

We have 12 other appropriations bills coming through here. With all due respect, I say to the junior Senator from Arizona, this is not the time to hold up this legislation. There are at least 12 other bills. We reported another one out of the committee today.

I would say to my friend, the Republican leader, I had the opportunity to speak to Senator BYRD a short time ago. There is hope that the supplemental conference will be completed tomorrow. Great progress is being made. I hope we can move forward on this bill. This is so important that we get it out of here and get it to the House.

I have no doubt, as tight as money is, that we will take care of the fire needs of the western part of the United States. We always take care of emergency needs, whether it is fire or flood. We will do so in the future.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arizona.

Mr. KYL. Madam President, I object, and I would like to explain the reason why. I concur with the comments Senator LOTT has made about the importance of moving this legislation forward. I have conferred with the ranking member of the committee, the Senator from Texas, who makes a strong case that the legislation has been carefully crafted, and it is important to move it forward. I totally concur with her on that.

I also have no problem with the way in which the unanimous consent agreement has been constructed in terms of moving forward as soon as it is possible to do so. I have no objection to any of that.

I do simply want to, as the minority leader said, preserve the option of dealing with the subject of the recent floods and droughts on this appropriation bill. The reason is as follows: The ranking member of the committee, the chairman of the Appropriations Committee, and the ranking member of the Energy and Water Subcommittee are all meeting today with other people, including the Director of the OMB, the Senator from Texas, and others, to try to figure out the best way to deal with the new issue of the fire and flood and drought damages that have occurred in this country since the supplemental appropriations bill was put together.

My personal view is that the supplemental would probably be a preferable place to include the disaster relief to replenish the funds for the forest fires to the BIA and the Forest Service. There are those, however, who disagree. If the Director of OMB and chairman and ranking member of the Appropriations Committee believe that it is not appropriate to use the supplemental as the vehicle for doing that, then one of the other appropriations bills will be appropriate, and the first one before us is the military construction bill. That would be the next appropriate vehicle.

I am simply preserving their option to decide which is the best vehicle for moving this forward. The reason specifically for wanting to do it right now—in response to the Senator from Nevada, I am confident that we will deal with this issue because it has to be dealt with.

Here is the very practical problem. We have had about one-fourth of the entire budget of the Forest Service now consumed in fighting forest fires; whereas, ordinarily it is something like 4 percent of their budget, or something like that. So they have borrowed from other accounts in order to pay these firefighters.

The fires in Arizona cost almost $50 million to fight. As a result, they have had to borrow that money from other accounts. The result of that is that right after the fire is over, before it is even cool, they will not be able to go into the area of these fires and prevent the erosion that inevitably occurs as soon as the rains start, and now the rainy season is beginning, and the planting of the grasses and trees and so on that further inhibits that erosion. They literally want to go in as soon as they can after the fire to stabilize the ground. If they wait too long, it doesn't do any good. So they have to do that right away.

The problem is, they have spent all the money in the restoration accounts. The head of the Forest Service put a stop on the expenditure of any money that doesn't have to be spent almost on an emergency or daily operations basis. So right now, both the Department of the Interior and the Department of Agriculture are significantly precluded from doing the other things Congress mandated that they do.

We need to make sure they know they are going to have the funds to restore those accounts so they can get on with the jobs we have asked them to do; and, most importantly, in the very near term they can get into the area of these fires and begin the restoration that is essential in a timely fashion. That is why the first vehicle in terms of an appropriations bill that can be used should be used for this process—whether it is the supplemental or this appropriations bill.

There have been suggestions that the Interior Appropriations bill would be a better vehicle. From a purely substantive point of view, that is true, but that will not come before us for another month, or 6 weeks, or 2 months. That is, obviously, way too late.

That is the reason why we need to preserve this particular option. I hope we can move quickly to the consideration of the MILCON bill, both for the purpose of completing the work of the Senator from Texas, as well as the work we are talking about.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas is recognized.

Mrs. HUTCHISON. Madam President, I am the ranking member of the Military Construction Subcommittee. I have worked very hard with Senator FEINSTEIN, the chairman of that committee, to produce a bill that takes into account all of the priorities of the Department of Defense, the administration, and the Members' requests. I think we have done a good job. We didn't give every Member everything they asked for, of course, but I think we have done a terrific job in meeting the needs of the military and the requests of the administration.

We need to pass this bill. I appreciate the support of Senator LOTT, along with, of course, Senator REID and Senator DASCHLE and Senator FEINSTEIN, that we need to move this forward. However, I wanted to say that although Senator KYL has objected—and I disagree with his decision to do so—I understand his frustration, and Senator REID said he understands his frustration. We see it every night on the news—the fighting of these incredible fires, people being put out of their homes, ruining vast hundreds of thousands of acres of our forestland in this country, and we are running out of money.

I hope that people have also seen the floods in my home State of Texas. The Governor is now saying that the damage is estimated to be $2 billion. It only happened last week, so I cannot tell you exactly what we are going to need to clean up the floods. But I know that the people are suffering. I am going to be there tomorrow with Joe Albaugh, head of FEMA, to look at the damage myself because I want to make sure we are doing the right thing for the people of Arizona, the people of Colorado, the people of New Mexico, the people of Idaho, and the people of Texas. We have always done that.

So I understand Senator KYL's frustration. I am sorry he is holding up this bill, but I am committed to seeking a vehicle for an amendment that would ensure that the money is there to fight the forest fires in this country and to clean up the flood damage that we see happening in Texas. We will do that. We will find the vehicle to do it. I commit that we will. We are not going to appropriate money that isn't needed. We are going to have a contingency appropriation so that if the money is needed, it is there.

We all want to be careful with taxpayer dollars, but there has never been an earthquake, or a flood, or a fire that we have not responded to as a country and said we are not going to let people suffer when they have nowhere to turn but to us. We will be there for them. So I am committed to trying to find the right vehicle. I want to make the decision now so we can get on with MILCON. If military construction is the right vehicle, let's put that emergency appropriation on military construction. I would prefer to see it on the supplemental appropriations on which we are having a conference tomorrow. I would like to put it there.

This is an emergency. We have had a change in circumstances since the President sent his request to Congress. It seems to me that it is common sense that we have had a change in circumstances that would warrant a change in the cap. That would be the preferred way to handle this emergency, which we all acknowledge we need to do. If we cannot do that, I want the commitment for Senator KYL, for Senator DOMENICI, for the Senator from Colorado, that we will handle this issue. So if it is not going to be on the supplemental, then I am willing to try to help them put it on military construction. If it is not military construction, then I don't think we will be handling any appropriations bills until we get a commitment to address this issue.

I yield the floor to my colleague from New Mexico.

Mr. DOMENICI. I don't need the Senator to yield for a question, but I will talk for a moment. Sometime yesterday I raised this issue when most of the Republican Senators were in a meeting. It seemed, from the feedback, that most of them agreed with the comments that were made then. Essentially, we don't often have this situation, but what really happened—I used the word “yesterday”—the supplemental has been around here for so long that it has run into a new problem. It ran into the problem of forest fires—huge ones—and into flooding that has been described by those who come from States where flooding has occurred. But there is no question that the forest fires and the floods, because they came a long time after these urgent supplementals, should have cleared it.

In normal times you would be beyond the supplemental and you would be waiting for something else; but the supplemental bumped right into the fires and the floods, it took so long to get its rightful place here on the Senate floor. It didn't seem to be very urgent when it took 2 months to get done. But now we want to try to live by the facts the White House put into the budget before this new set of facts occurred. After that meeting yesterday, I was very pleased to note that the distinguished Republican leader joined with us and submitted to the White House, to the Budget Director for the executive branch the fact that this was going to happen sooner or later, that most of the people we had talked to and that he had talked to—and shortly thereafter we started talking with Democrats—that there was going to be substantial support, if not 100 percent.

So I am pleased that we are at a point where we are going to put this amendment on one of the bills.

I understand our distinguished ranking member of Appropriations has concurred with others and doesn't want it put on the supplemental. That is all right with me, provided we are standing in line with commitments from those who we need commitments from, that the fire and flood money will be on the next appropriations bill that comes by. Since I don't want to take additional time, I assume that is where we are.

I will ask the Senator from Nevada a question: Are we now at a point where we are going to decide on which appropriations bill we are going to be free to put the emergency language for the floods and the fires?

Mr. REID. I say to the distinguished senior Senator from New Mexico that we are trying to move these bills.

I cannot imagine that Senator BYRD and Senator STEVENS would have the fire money in the military construction bill. We reported, as the Senator knows, another bill out of the committee, the legislative branch appropriations bill. There are other bills coming up. As the Senators from New Mexico and Arizona said, fire money should be in the supplemental, but it is not. I just do not think it is going to be in the military construction bill. That is why we should get it out of the Senate and get it to the President. There are some significant military needs that will be satisfied.

I say to my friend who is so aware of everything that goes on around here because of his position on the Appropriations Committee and the Budget Committee, I can never ever remember a time when we have not taken care of fire needs and the flood needs of this country, and we will do it this year also. If there needs to be another supplemental, we will do that, or if we have to put the money in the Interior appropriations bill or other bills, we will do that. I just do not think this is the vehicle on which to do it.

Mr. DOMENICI. Madam President, I said yesterday that I do not recall—I have been here a few years longer than the Senator from Nevada—a situation where we would not pay for an emergency of forest fires and the damages and costs that ensued.

Frankly, there are a lot of people in the West, particularly in Nevada and my State, who have seen these fires and now hear on the television that the Forest Service does not have money in its budget to pay for them. They do. They are borrowing from another account.

As the Senator said and I have said, they are going to get reimbursed shortly. The sooner we do it, the sooner we keep faith with the hundreds of thousands of people in Arizona, Nevada, Utah, New Mexico, and Colorado who have been watching. It would be good if it is sooner rather than later. While we are paying for many things, we should pay for their account also. I assume that is what you are going to try to do in the Senate.

Mr. REID. Yes, and I say to my friend, these moneys are so important to the people of our respective States, there is no question about that. I think it is a shame, for lack of a better description, that we do not have it in the supplemental. I repeat that. If there ever was an emergency, this is it. We have not budgeted for these moneys, and the fire that swept Arizona is 400,000 acres.

We had a fire in Nevada at Lake Tahoe—we are so thankful it did not ravage that basin—of only 1,000 acres. In the last 2 years, we have had over 2 million acres burn in Nevada, not forestland but rangeland.

We need to take care of this emergency. It should be done in the supplemental, but the majority leader, myself, and anyone on this side who has jurisdiction will do whatever we can to speed this up as quickly as possible.

Mr. DOMENICI. I thank the Senator. I say to those who want to make sure the supplemental not only passes but is signed, the Senator from New Mexico is on their side. I am with them. I am certainly not going to do anything to delay that, although it does seem strange to this Senator, an urgent supplemental, which is intended for urgent supplemental needs, would have to be isolated from this need because some kind of arrangement has been made. The arrangement comes very late, but it is an effort to get the bill done and to get the important parties to agree.

I yield the floor.

PUBLIC COMPANY ACCOUNTING REFORM AND INVESTOR PROTECTION ACT OF 2002—Continued

Mr. REID. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that there be a vote immediately on or in relation to the Levin amendment, the second-degree amendment. Following disposition of that amendment, we vote immediately on the Edwards amendment; and following that, we vote on cloture, which motion was filed yesterday.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. GRAMM. Reserving the right to object, I noticed the McCain amendment was not listed. Was that an inadvertent error or was it the intention to exclude that amendment which was offered after the two listed?

Mr. REID. The last two amendments offered were the Levin and Edwards amendments.

Mr. GRAMM. Madam President, I have to object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard. The Senator from Texas.

Mr. GRAMM. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the vote on cloture occur immediately; that we proceed with the process of dealing with germane amendments; and that we set the time of 8 o'clock for all debate on the bill to end.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. LEVIN. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

AMENDMENT NO. 4269

Mr. ENZI. Madam President, I do have to answer some of the questions. I am sorely disappointed that the Senator from Arizona left the floor. He asked some important questions. He has asked three questions about accounting. I don't get to answer questions about accounting very often. I was very excited about that.

Now, I do warn people who may be watching in their offices, or somewhere else, that accounting questions often put people to sleep. So it might not always be that exciting for them.

But I do have to say, from what we saw, there is no passion like the passion of a repentant sinner. This is not the first time somebody has said we are going to tell FASB what to do.

On May 4, 1994, the Senate said: We do not care what you said in your multiple pages of FASB rules, we are going to tell you what to do. And the vote was 88 to 9 the last time we interfered with FASB. I have to tell you, the Senator from Arizona was in the 88. He was one of the people who said: I know how to do this. I know how to do this better than FASB. So listen to me: I am going to vote my conscience on this and dictate how FASB is going to handle accounting on stock options.

If he and several other people had not voted to tell FASB what to do at that time, we wouldn't be having this discussion at all.

Now we have another amendment. It is very important to pay attention to the wording.

What I am trying to do is—as I mentioned, there is no passion like the passion of a repentant Senator—I am trying to keep people from sinning again. There are some very important reasons. We cannot take a complex situation such as stock options, which I think all of us can spell but for which not all of us can account, and put it into a simple little paragraph on how it should be handled. This amendment, which is just one sentence which makes up the whole paragraph, says:

Any corporation that grants a stock option to an officer employee to purchase a publicly traded security in the United States shall record the granting of the option as an expense in that corporation's income statement for the year in which the option is granted.

One of the problems we are having right now is investors are a little bit shaken because there are restatements of income being done. Not all restatements are because something was hidden. Some of those restatements are because of changes in rules. This will be one of the biggest changes in rules we have made in decades, and the way this is written, while it is intended to move to an expense system, does not really say that. It says that you have to expense it in that corporation's income statement for the year in which the option is granted.

There are a lot of options that are already granted. Some of them are outstanding maybe 25 years. It is more common that it be 2 or 3 years. The new stock options are done on a much shorter period of time. Even if it is just 2 or 3 years, what this amendment is saying is, redo your income statements and restate them for the last 3 years for all of your options that are outstanding. We did not make you do that before; now we want you to show a huge change or maybe just a small change, but at any rate a change, and every time a company announces a change—and I have had some call and say: I am going to have to do a restatement and that restatement is going to be upward; you know what it is going to do to my stock; I am showing an increase in profit, and it is going to destroy me. All I can say is, it is the law; you have to restate.

This will cause the biggest restatement in the history of the United States, the way it is done. One cannot dictate in very simple language something that will take multiple pages to be able to explain and to allow reconciliation. If we listened to the explanation earlier, it sounds as if companies are writing this stuff off and nothing ever happens with it. That is not true. Every time there is an exercise, every time somebody trades their option for real stock, there is an accounting for it. At the end of each year there is a reconciliation for it to make sure the taxes are paid on the stock options that are exercised.

We heard something earlier about $625 million that we are losing because of Enron. It is because they went bankrupt. It is not because they are not reconciling, because they are not paying taxes. They do not have anything with which to pay the taxes.

One of the problems with this bill is that we have gotten into a feeding frenzy. I think of Enron as this huge, dead carcass. In Wyoming, we have kind of a pecking order of feeding. There are the grizzly bears, there are the wolves, and there are the coyotes. Each of them come up and take their bite out of the carcass, but not until the previous one has finished, and that is kind of the way that we are handling this bill.

We have this huge carcass of Enron, and we are trying to figure out how to get rid of it and make sure we do not have any more carcasses. We have a bill that has the primary right to feed on it. Then we have the wolves, which are the germane amendments, that have the right to feed on it. Then we have the coyotes, which do not have any right until everything else is finished. Those are the nongermane amendments.

What we are trying to say is let us get this carcass finished off before we have a whole bunch more carcasses, before the stock market has more problems. They are a little bit worried about us working on this stuff at all, and if they see an amendment like this with the oversimplification being thrust on this legislative body to make a massive accounting decision, they ought to panic. We do not want that to happen.

There are a lot of reasons this amendment should not be passed should it ever come to a vote, and I hope everybody would do that. Now, I have an option I had drafted up. I have over 25 cosponsors from both sides of the aisle now. It deals with stock options. What it does is put it back on FASB to come up with a proper solution and gives them some guidelines to look at. That would be the way to handle a massive problem like this with a lot of detail for which none of us, including me, have the expertise.

I am kind of fascinated that Warren Buffett is the main authority on stock options these days. As I look at it, there are several camps of people that are opposed to stock options, not opposed to the accounting of stock options. They are flat out opposed to stock options. Warren Buffett is one of those. And that is because when stock options are exercised, it dilutes his stock. I think he probably has more stock than anybody else in the whole world, and I guess if I had more stock than anybody else in the whole world I would have gotten there by being sure that every single piece of that was accounted for. Unfortunately, that is not the case. But that would give one some compunction to make sure that none of it can be diluted, which is what stock options have the possibility of doing.

It is also based on the premise that the company is going to grow and expand, and that is why all of the people who are employees are willing to take stock options instead of hard cash. I think all of them would love to have hard cash as Berkshire is doing.

I suspect that the hard cash does not come to quite as much as the increase in value of the stock. So given an option between hard cash and potential in a company that you yourself can work in, you yourself believe in, you yourself know can grow, you want to participate in all of that economic growth. So stock options would be something that might lure you from another company, that might lure you into a startup company, that might lure your expertise to where you can make this company grow.

One of the questions that was asked was: If stock options are not a form of compensation, what are they? At the time they are granted, they are not anything. There is no assurance of them being worth anything. They are a potential liability, and there are some models for determining how to calculate that. They are very complicated. I am not even sure an accountant can handle all of those things. I think they have computer models now that are designed by engineers that go through this thing to calculate what that worth would be so they could put down some number on their balance sheet. Or they can use the other option, which is to disclose it in a footnote. If I wanted to devote more time to this, I would bring over a chart that shows the disclosure that is in the footnote.

So if people read the annual report of the corporation, they know what the potential dilution and value of those stock options are.

Then the next two questions are: If compensation is not an expense, then what is it? And if expenses should not go in this calculation, where should they go? Those are two questions built on a false premise. That is why it makes it difficult to answer the last two questions. If you answer the first one, the next two are not answerable.

Like I said, if I were one of those people such as Warren Buffett who wanted to do away with stock options, that is the attack I would take. I would appreciate it if they were a little more honest: We just want to do away with stock options.

There is another group of people who say all the stock options go to the top employees and consequently they do not want stock options either, but the honest part of that is that they do not want stock options either.

I heard all the references to the newspapers that say expense these things. Of course, I know that all the newspapers have all the technical expertise to make that kind of an evaluation. I say that facetiously, of course.

Senator SARBANES and I have been working on this accounting bill for months, and as we went through the hearings that he did with so much care, very carefully picking the people with the most expertise to be able to explain to us what went wrong in the Enron situation and what could be done in the future to prevent that sort of thing from happening again, it was very educational and he did a magnificent job.

While we were going through that process, I was keeping notes and he was keeping notes. I think everybody else in the Banking Committee was keeping notes. From those notes, several of us drafted up a bill. I noticed that an editorial in the Washington Post down near the end said something needed to be done, which all of us agree on, and then down at the end it says Senator ENZI's bill is a sham.

My first reaction was to get ahold of them and say: Can I talk to the accountant that looked at my bill? Well, the newspaper has journalists, not accountants. It might be a small flaw in expertise even on stock option expensing. I have not seen anything in there since I continued to work with Senator SARBANES, and some of the principles I had in mind were some of the same principles that he had, and those were easy to resolve. Some of the other ones that I had wound up in the bill and are in this bill that we have before us now. I have not seen any editorial that recognizes their expertise of that evaluation either.

There were comments about Chairman Greenspan, and I did read the speech he gave. As soon as I read the speech he gave, I wanted a little bit more information. So I asked if I could get together with him, and he was nice enough to come to my office. Through the discussion, which, again, was educational, I keep learning things every day. This is such a marvelous institution for education. One of the things he concluded with was to say: Yes, they should be expensed, but Congress should not decide how that is done. He was not in favor of us passing something that said how to handle stock options. I think he could see the wisdom or the folly, whichever way you want to consider it.

Now, one may have guessed that I am in opposition to the McCain amendment on expensing stock options. I think there are some other ways of doing it better. I think there are ways that it could actually be voted on by this group if it were done better. I do not think the one that is presented is the one that is votable, and I assume he will work with us and make some changes.

As we all know, Enron's executives and employees were issued numerous stock options. It is now clear that months before Enron filed for bankruptcy, executives were aware of the true condition of the company. They exercised millions of dollars of options. Enron employees kept in the dark on company finances are left with worthless Enron stock, and retirement savings, while some bad Enron executives absconded with stock openings. The financial fraud causing the collapse of Enron had nothing to do with the company's accounting procedures for stock options.

I appreciate my colleagues' effort to try to fix the problems posed by Enron, and perhaps WorldCom and Xerox and Global Crossing as we get into those. Congress must react to what happened with Enron, but it must be careful not to overreact. I have a principle with legislation having watched it for a long time: If it is worth reacting to, it is worth overreacting to. It goes back to the feeding frenzy on the huge carcass that is here—an overreaction, adding things to one up or outbid.

While legislation may be appropriate to ensure employees are protected and prevent future Enrons from occurring, we should not do anything to hamper rank-and-file employees from receiving stock in their company. A couple of years ago we passed a bill that went through both Houses by unanimous consent. That bill was so that the rank-and-file employees could get it without more difficult accounting. We said we want the rank-and-file folks to have it. We passed a bill by unanimous consent. That means everybody who was here at the time said yes, that is good, without any amendments. That is tough to do around here. It was a definite recognition we wanted all employees to have stock options. When properly used, stock options can be a marvelous opportunity for all of the employees.

In addition, as I mentioned, small businesses and startup companies must continue to have an incentive to issue options, which is often their only means to attract qualified employees. I feel so strongly about protecting stock options for rank-and-file employees in small businesses that on April 18 of this year I testified before the Finance Committee against the legislation in this McCain amendment, although it had more detail to it so it made a little bit more sense. This was revised so it could perhaps meet the test of not being blue-slipped by the House because it has the potential for being a revenue issue.

I am against this amendment because it seriously hurts employees, small businesses, startup companies, and in general the high-tech industry and many listed corporations which employ thousands of employees. This legislation will not solve the problem of Enron, that dead carcass I referred to, or WorldCom, which is still out there kicking a little bit, Xerox, and perhaps failing dot-com companies, but instead it will create additional problems for the rank-and-file employees of the small and large corporations because they will no longer get the benefit of stock options. Why? Because companies will no longer have an incentive but, rather, a disincentive to grant them.

We have all heard that Federal Reserve Chairman Alan Greenspan and Warren Buffett support the purpose behind the McCain legislation because they believe stock options should be treated as compensation. Admittedly, they may at some point become compensation, but there is disagreement at what point that is. Even Chairman Greenspan admitted to me, as I mentioned earlier, that Congress should not legislate expensing but that the Federal Accounting Standards Board, or the FASB, should make such a determination.

This is not an easy determination, although in our discussions we make it sound like an easy determination. Concepts are much easier than the detail. That is what makes our legislating so difficult. We can all agree on huge concepts, but when you figure out the details of how you get to that, it becomes very difficult.

Secretary O'Neill disagrees that expensing of stock options is a solution and believes better disclosure provisions would cure the current problem with regard to stock options. The McCain-Levin bill is creating the same debate over expensing stock options on company financial statements that occurred a few years ago. At that time, the solution was to give companies the option of listing the number of stock options issued by a company in a footnote to the financial sheets or directly on its income or financial statements as an expense. Either way, investors and employees have the ability to see how much stock is outstanding before they invest in the company or before they exercise their stock options. These footnotes provide a lot more information to shareholders or investors than you might imagine, or than the supporters of the McCain amendment would like you to believe.

Some would like you to believe the average person out there doesn't have the ability to read a footnote, let alone understand it. I think at any meeting of employees they would have people contesting that. They look at some of those annual reports, probably more so than some of the major investors. Some of it is difficult to understand. Financial literacy is difficult but very important when you are investing.

It was mentioned that Berkshire buys companies and switches to cash bonuses. It does not cause any problem. The problem is, except cash bonus, you lose your job. Now if they had the option between cash bonuses and a stock option, in a growing company, which would they take? It is hard to tell.

Rather than estimate the value of stock options and expense them on the balance sheets, the companies estimate them in a footnote using something called the Black-Scholes model. That is because they don't know what the future value of the stock will be when the option is actually exercised and sold. That is very important because I have seen a number of different proposals on this, and one of them, unless you expensed it and guess exactly what it was at the time you expensed it, you are not allowed to claim any additional expense. But they don't realize these things are reconciled so that there is a running value of actually expensed items.

Again, that gets into a lot of the accounting detail that would put people to sleep. I have some fascinating charts I would love to drag out, but I have already lost most of my audience so I won't do that. They use that model because they don't know what the future value of the stock will be when the stock option is actually exercised and sold. So they attempt to make an educated guess. Their footnote predicts what the expense might be and the diluted earnings per share for the outstanding stock.

Currently, most companies list the outstanding stock options as a note to their financial statements. Unlike Boeing, Microsoft, Winn Dixie, and a few other companies, most companies do not want to list the options as an expense on their financial statement because it creates a perception of a drop in value of the company, even though the stock options have not yet been exercised. In other words, there has been no expense yet and may not be an expense if the options are never exercised. Yet under the McCain amendment, companies must list these stock options as an actual expense to their company when granted. This would mean taking the estimated value in a footnote and making it an expense to the company.

A problem with expensing early on, how do you value stock options which have been granted but not exercised or sold? Almost everyone believes the current practice of using the Black-Scholes method to value stock options as currently used on footnotes is fatally flawed. Under the McCain amendment, companies are going to now have to use this flawed model to make a guess at what the value of the options are to determine an expense to the company.

The tax consequences will also be based on this flawed estimate. But later, when some of the stock options are exercised and the value is different than estimated, this amendment provides no opportunity for a reconciliation of company records or taxes. That is kind of an accounting principle that there is supposed to be an explanation for how taxes match up with the books of the company. Yes, we do force different kinds of calculations for taxes than we do for the accounting that goes to the stockholders. But the accountants are able to draw the reconciliation, they are able to show how one number goes to another number. That is a requirement, as well.

Currently, when the estimates are placed in the footnote, they appear as what they are, a best guess at their value, with no effects on the company's books and no need for reconciliation of records later. Yet an investor can see what outstanding, possible estimated expense might occur to the company.

Another problem with the McCain amendment is it does not provide for a method of reconciliation if the stock options are never exercised. So what appeared as an expense may never happen, yet the value of that stock actually goes down instead of up. No one would buy the option and have it cost more than just going out and buying stock. So it is not exercised. So what appears as an expense may never happen, yet the financial statement prepared months before reflects an expense and a decrease in company profit that never occurred. Meanwhile, the current footnote method shows this estimate to investors as a worst case scenario of what could occur if all the options were exercised but no reconciliation were required.

As a result, the McCain amendment creates a disincentive for companies to issue stock options to those rank-and-file employees.

If this amendment becomes law, many companies will cut back on giving stock options to rank-and-file employees rather than list those options as an expense, and create a perception of a decrease in the value of a company when the stock options are not yet an expense and may never be exercised. This means employees will lose a valuable means of increasing their income.

But, these companies are not going to cease offering CEOs and senior executives this form of compensation—that is deferred compensation. Big companies will continue to issue stock options to attract the best talent to top levels of their companies, because this is the only way they can get the most talented management personnel. Despite what the media and supporters of this amendment want you to believe, stock options are not issued to just executives. In fact, those who claim only a small percentage of stock options are offered to rank-and-file companies are misguided. For example, Sun Microsystems, which has approximately 40,000 employees, distributed only 9 percent of its stock options to executives in 2000 and 2001. In contrast, distribution of stock options to employees who were not executives was a whopping 91 percent for both those years.

This is not an isolated example. In 1998, over 66 percent of large companies gave options to some portion of their non-executive workforce. Of this group, 26 percent granted options to all their workers and another 15 percent gave options to at least half of their employees. A 2000 survey of PricewaterhouseCoopers and the National Association of Stock Plan Professionals reported 44 percent of 345 large domestic companies with stock option plans made grants to all employees, including hourly employees. The San Francisco Chronicle reports that in the technology sector, this percentage is even higher. Of the top 100 e-commerce companies, 97 percent give options to all their employees.

The San Francisco Chronicle also points out that:

Ten years ago, about a million workers were in a few hundred employee stock programs around the country.

In 2001, that number had grown to 10 millions Americans receiving stock options. The National Center for Employee Ownership confirmed the trend is toward more non-managers receiving stock options. However, the Levin legislation will stop this trend by having a negative effect on companies which offer stock option compensation packages to their rank-and-file employees. The McCain/Levin Amendment will also hurt small businesses and start-up companies which cannot afford to offer the salaries larger companies give, so they offer stock options as an incentive to attract highly-skilled employees. And it works. They do not have the hard cash for bonuses, but they have stock options. In turn, employees that risk working for start-up companies have the ability to make much more money than through traditional methods of payment by salaries or wages.

The National Commission on Entrepreneurship points out that, without stock options, startup companies which are now household names, like Intel, Federal Express, Apple, Dell and Starbuck, would not exist. In addition, the McCain-Levin bill will cause the whole tax structure to dramatically change. Currently, when stock options are granted or issued there is no tax consequence for either the employer or employee. But when stock options are exercised, the employees are taxed as if it is ordinary income. The income amount is based on the difference between the market price and the exercise price.

Of course, if it goes down and there are not stock options exercised, then there is no income tax because there is no gain.

I do have some charts, again, too, that show that the Federal Government does receive the taxes that are due, unless there is a bankruptcy.

At the same time, the employer can take a deduction based on the amount equal to what is considered income to the employees. For example, if the amount is $25,000 worth of income to employees, the company may take a deduction based on the same amount, $25,000, times its marginal tax rate. If the marginal tax rate is 35 percent, the company would have a tax savings of $8,700. This deduction provides a useful incentive for a company to offer options to its rank-and-file employees. Unfortunately, the McCain-Levin bill will force companies to list the numbers of stock options issued as an expense on its financial statement before they can take the current tax deduction. And they way that this particular amendment is written, it will have to be a restatement for all the years for which there are stock options out. As I mentioned, this added expense to the financial statement alone is a disincentive for companies to issue stock options. In addition, under the McCain-Levin amendment, the tax treatment of the deduction totally changes, becoming much more complicated because it involves valuing stock that has never been exercised. The tax complexity created by this amendment is another disincentive for companies to issue stock options to rank-and-file employees.

Add to all of this, the fact that stock options are not all exercised at the same time. But that is the optional part of it. When you are given a stock option, you have the control over when you personally want to take the stock option or not take the stock option.

Then there are some other interesting amendments out there that could deal with stock options and whether lawyers could ever exercise them, or whether they would have to reinvest them—a lot of complications. But even assuming they are exercised at the same time, the McCain amendment imposes much more complexity to the current system.

Again, I have some charts that could show how all that complexity comes about, but it looks as if we are ready to move on to another decision here so I will pass on that.

If I have confused anybody, I know that I have not confused them nearly as much as if I showed them how this actually worked. This is not easy stuff. I guess that is what keeps accountants in business. It really isn't all the taxes that people pay, although a lot of the revenue comes from figuring the taxes.

I do hear from accountants who say: You really need to simplify the system. Yes, I do hear from accountants that way—not just about this system but the tax system as well. There is plenty of work out there for them to do and not enough accountants, and there are less and less every day. However, I think I have made one thing crystal clear—99 Senators with no accounting degree, and 1 Senator with an accounting degree, have no business trying to rewrite the accounting methods of publicly listed companies. In other words, if you or your staff don't understand any of this, then you shouldn't vote for the McCain-Levin amendment. Instead, the Federal Accounting Standards Board, or even the Securities and Exchange Commission, have much more expertise to make these determinations. We can direct them to look at current accounting methods, rather than passing specific legislation on replacing the current system. We can direct them to look at possibly developing a better pricing model to value stock options than the Black Scholes method. We can ask it to look at possibly improving disclosure provisions to better inform investors, including using plain English and charts and graphs. We should direct them to create rules that continue to promote ownership of company stock by employees, rather than providing disincentives to companies in granting stock options. Let's let the entities with expertise study and recommend what will prevent future Enrons. Otherwise, we may create a remedy that is worse than the disease.

As mentioned before, I worked with Senator LIEBERMAN and Senator ALLEN and Senator BOXER and numerous other Senators to come up with an amendment that would give some direction to FASB. It would show them that we do want them to take a look at this, that it is a priority, and that we would like to have a solution as soon as possible, but not one that will destroy the entire market, not one that will require retroactive restatements for all of the companies to bring them up to a specific present point.

There will be companies that will choose to do that, but in the present atmosphere that could be very detrimental to the entire stock market. So I hope we will not try to go with something oversimplified as the McCain amendment is, and that we will take a look at making sure that options are treated properly, as we are trying to do in this bill, with all accounting. We are trying to set up a mechanism—a mechanism, not specific language on accounting—a mechanism for determining proper accounting, and I think the bill before us does a good job of doing that. It sets up oversight for discipline and ethics. It will be the first time that we have had centralized any profession. But it will solve some problems, and it needs to be done quickly for the sake of the stock market. I am sure we will get to address this at a later time.

I heard the threat of the Senator from Arizona. I hope in the meantime that his threat will include a little rewrite that gives a little bit more latitude and puts the situation in the hands of the people who actually have some expertise on this.

I yield the floor.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. Mr. President, I want to talk briefly today about how America got caught in the current quicksand of corporate scandal and how we can help dig our economy out of it.

Our economy is in trouble today not because we have a shortage of parts, labor, or ingenuity, but because the American people have a shortage of confidence in the basic mechanics of the marketplace. Every new corporate scandal jostles our markets with the force of a jab or an uppercut. If the punches keep coming and we don't react, our economy will get even wobblier. It may even get knocked down.

Investors are shaken. They don't know what's real anymore. Trust has eroded. The stock exchanges are suffering. These are serious problems that demand a serious response, which is why I strongly support Senator SARBANES' legislation to reform accounting oversight and strengthen corporate accountability.

I welcome President Bush's voice to this discussion, and appreciated the principled remarks he made in New York on Tuesday. But the President's substantive proposals were late and they were limited. I regret that he still hasn't committed, and committed forcefully, to the meaningful, systemic reforms in the legislation before the Senate today. This is a responsive bill. It is a responsible bill. A vote for it is a strong vote of confidence in the American economy. And the President's failure to speak out in favor of it, in my view, sends the wrong message to our markets.

In the wake of Enron's collapse, I had hopes that self-regulation could heal many of the wounds inflicted on our markets and on our economy. I have called for the markets to toughen listing standards, and for companies to make ethics a front-burner issue, not a footnote. Many companies have made progress. The stock exchanges and other business groups have worked to root out conflicts of interest and to demand more independent corporate oversight.

But the new revelations, which seem to come daily, have demonstrated that these problems go far beyond a bad company or two or three. We now have to ask not whether there are more scandals lurking in the fine print, but how many more are there? And we have to ask, what is it about the shape of the system that needs to be corrected to prevent similar debacles from happening again?

The system isn't broken, but it is strained. And we all now understand that self-regulation, as critical as it is, will not do enough to fix the damage.

The stakes are high. Over the last two decades we have witnessed an explosion in middle-class participation in the capital markets. A majority of Americans now have a direct stake in stock or mutual funds, usually, through their 401-k plans. Those American investors have discovered, through the painful shock of every new recent revelation, that the basic, traditional ethical values of small businesses, where you respect every dollar, pay back your investors, treat your employees well, and serve your customers honestly, are not always shared in the boardrooms of some large corporations.

Today and tomorrow, the American people deserve every confidence that their government is setting the highest standards of honesty, transparency, and accountability and enforcing those standards without hesitation.

That is why I strongly support Senator SARBANES' bill. It is a potent prescription for the serious ethical ills that ail our economy. The aim here is not just to penalize individuals when fraud happens; it is to prevent future economic catastrophes, to the degree that we can, and re-install confidence in the marketplace. I regret that after the collapse of Enron and the pretty pathetic parade that has followed of Global Crossings, Tycos, ImClones, and WorldComs, the President still hasn't awakened to the full scope of the problem or the need for a strong solution like that proposed by Senator SARBANES.

Gene Sperling, former Economic Adviser to President Clinton, put it well. After September 11, we all understood what was necessary to get people back in airports and on airplanes. Cracking down on hijackers with tough new criminal penalties wouldn't be enough. We knew that we needed to improve baggage and passenger screening, fortify cabin doors, and make a whole host of other changes that addressed the systemic problems that let the attacks happen in the first place.

The same is true here. If we want Americans to regain confidence in our economy and get back in the market, as they have gotten back in the skies, we need to not only get tough on offenders, but to get tough on the structural problems that enable the offenses. That means closing loopholes and rooting out the endemic conflicts of interest that put even decent people in difficult if not untenable situations.

Senator SARBANES' bill would set up a strong, independent board to oversee accountants—a critical step that will give Americans reason to believe their numbers again. The President hasn't come out clearly in favor of that. The bill would restrict firms from doing both consulting and auditing for the same company in most cases, addressing what is a corrosive conflict in the system today. The President hasn't supported that as a law yet. The bill would also go further than the new NASD or NYSE rules to address the inherent conflicts of interest that currently prevent Wall Street analysts, who make the judgments so many Americans rely upon in making their investment decisions, from thoroughly and independently scrutinizing the companies they cover. In the hearings of the Senate Governmental Affairs Committee I chair, we discovered that those conflicts are real, deep, and widespread. Unfortunately, the President hasn't been strong enough or sharp enough on this issue. And the bill would require disclosure within 7 days anytime a corporate executive takes a loan from the company he is working for.

We in Washington cannot and should not pretend to be able to fix all these problems single-handedly, but we have an essential role to play. We must lead. And at the same time, we must take care not to let this turn into an anti-business crusade. I believe in American business. My father was a small business owner in Stamford, CT. Through hard work he bought a house, sent his kids to college, prepared for retirement, and bettered his community.

You cannot be pro-jobs and anti-business. You can't be pro-growth and anti-business. You can't be pro-opportunity and anti-business. Business has created our unprecedented prosperity, and business will continue to extend more and more opportunities to more and more Americans and people around the world. But not if we let this erosion of confidence, this rust of distrust, keep eating away at our markets.

American values are better than Enron's values. They're better than Global Crossing's values. They're better than WorldCom's values. And so is the American economy better and stronger than these companies' ethical and economic breaches of trust. This bill will point the way to both better ethics and better economics. It should become law.

Mr. FEINGOLD. Mr. President, I support S. 2673, the Public Company Accounting Reform and Investor Protection Act of 2002, and I commend Senator SARBANES for his efforts to produce this measure. That it is needed is a sad commentary on the state of corporate finance, but it is also a reminder that free markets do not work well without a set of rules and regulations in which the marketplace can be confident. It is also a reminder that if government is to farm out the task of regulating corporate finance, then those entities that are designated to patrol corporate activities must also have the confidence of the marketplace.

The Enron and WorldCom disasters were notable but not isolated. Observers have noted the increase in corporate financial restatements in recent years. In testimony on this point, Robert Litan of the Brookings Institution reports that the number of American corporations whose earnings have been restated had been modestly rising throughout the 1990s, but then took a big jump in 1998 and hit a peak of over 200 in 1999. Many reasons have been offered for this development. Some point to the tying of executive compensation to stock performance. Others have noted the potential conflict of interest that arises when a firm provides both auditing and consulting services to the same firm. Both explanations have some merit.

And I will add to both of those reasons the enactment of a so-called securities reform measure in December of 1995, a law that made it more difficult for stockholders to hold corporations and accounting firms accountable for bad behavior. One newspaper has characterized that law as expanding "a climate that invites the kinds of securities and accounting abuses that investors and employees suffered in Enron's colossal collapse." In reviewing the history of that bill, the Washington Post reported that "accountants at what were then the Big Six firms lobbied aggressively for the measure, spending millions of dollars." The Post story also adds a foreboding note that "leaders of Arthur Andersen were so pleased with their efforts they encased the text of the new law in a paper-weight and handed it out as a souvenir."

The reforms we consider today are extremely modest, and I look forward to supporting amendments that will further strengthen this bill, including Senator Leahy's amendment that will strengthen enforcement and sanctions for securities fraud. That amendment passed unanimously out of the Judiciary Committee earlier this year. It creates new criminal laws for altering or shredding documents and provides tough new penalties specifically for securities fraud. It prevents wrongdoers from avoiding those monetary damages by filing for bankruptcy. It provides specific whistleblower protections for employees who provide information to Federal regulators or criminal investigator about corporate wrongdoing. And it increases the statutes of limitation in securities fraud cases, responding to clear evidence that the shorter time limits put in place by the 1995 securities reform law have allowed wrongdoers to escape liability. These are necessary steps, and I applaud the chairman of the Judiciary Committee for bringing this amendment forward on this bill.

We should also consider other steps, if not on this bill then as part of another vehicle, to close down abusive tax shelters that encourage the kind of creative bookkeeping used by Enron, and to address the double standard of allowing certain forms of executive compensation to be deducted from taxes, while remaining hidden from investors.

All of these steps face opposition by interests who are more concerned with their own profits and survival than with the public interest. Unfortunately, these interests have held great sway over the Congress over the last decade, using soft money contributions and lobbying might to smother reform proposals before they could receive a fair hearing and action by the Congress. It is very unfortunate that the measures we are considering today were not enacted years ago. If they had been in place, thousands of employees might not have lost their jobs and millions of investors might not have lost their life savings.

Let us not forget that the central players in the scandals of the past year are not rogue companies operating at the fringe of American economic life. No, they are some of the biggest companies in the country, and they have been central players in a corrupt campaign finance system that this Congress finally started to address by passing the McCain-Feingold/Shays-Meehan bill a few months ago.

We have all heard of how Enron curried favor in Government. It gave a total of nearly $3.7 million in soft money to the political parties from the 1992 election cycle through June 3 of this year according to Democracy 21. Arthur Anderson made about $645,000 in soft money contributions during that period. Global Crossing gave just over $3 million to the parties in soft money from the 1998 election cycle to the present. And WorldCom, whose failure has brought us to the point where we will actually pass these long needed reforms, has given over $4 million in soft money, dating back to the 1992 cycle. Just in this cycle, with all its problems, WorldCom has already made $400,000 in soft money contributions, according to the Center for Responsive Politics.

These are enormous sums. They show, frankly, that our political parties are among those who were unjustly enriched by these companies who cheated their shareholders and employees. I understand that some contributions have been returned, but just as in the case of the employees who lost their jobs or the investors who lost their life savings, the damage has been done. The contributions had their intended effect when they were given.

As I mentioned before, and as we all know, Congress passed and the President signed a bill to ban soft money earlier this year. So these enormous soft money contributions should be a thing of the past starting in the next election cycle. Members of Congress will no longer be allowed to call up the CEOs of Enron, or Arthur Anderson, or Global Crossing or WorldCom, or any other corporation, and ask for enormous contributions for the political parties and then have to come back to this floor and vote on legislation that might affect their activities. At least that is what we intended. But in just the last few weeks, the Federal Election Commission has undermined the law that we passed after so many years of effort. The new regulations on our soft money ban that are about to be promulgated open enormous new loopholes in the law before it even goes into effect. If we want to remove the stain of soft money from the legislation we pass in this Congress, we cannot allow that to happen.

The sponsors of campaign finance reform intend to invoke the Congressional Review Act to overturn these regulations. That will send the FEC back to the drawing board to do the job of implementing the law right. Doing this is part and parcel of addressing the corporate scandals that have led to our work on the floor today on this important bill. Unless we defend the soft money ban, the influence of unscrupulous corporations on the Congress will continue, and we will find ourselves again in the situation of trying to explain to America why we didn't act to prevent further corporate and accounting scandals or other scandals before they happened.

According to Consumers Union, just over half of all U.S. households are investing in the stock market, many through their retirement savings. If the public is to have confidence in the financial markets, they must have a complete and honest accounting of the financial health of the firms in which they invest. This bill is a good starting place, and I look forward to supporting it. And I look forward to maintaining public confidence in the Bipartisan Campaign Reform Act of 2002 by overturning the FEC's loophole-ridden regulations before they take effect.

Mr. KYL. Mr. President, as Congress debates S. 2673, the Public Company Accounting Reform and Investor Protection Act of 2002, it is important to keep in mind certain facts: The United States of America is the most successful country in the world. No other country outworks, outproduces, or economically outperforms the United States. Americans have much to be proud of and it is due to the vigor of our businesses, the entrepreneurial spirit of our citizens, and the willingness of both to take risks. For hundreds of years, people from every corner of the globe have chosen to come to our country and pursue what has become known to the world as the American Dream.

The American Dream can and should be available to all Americans who, with diligence, determination, and a sound moral compass, choose to pursue it. Unquestionably, our government has an important role to play in ensuring its viability. By the passage and enforcement of laws to protect Americans seeking to achieve success, lawmakers reaffirm that America's prosperity rests on the rule of law, on the existence of safeguards, checks, and balances to ensure that all compete fairly in the marketplace. These protections must be transparent and easy to understand. This is not only so that businesses and individuals can readily determine what distinguishes appropriate from inappropriate action, but so that all may have faith in the governmental bodies tasked with enforcing the rules.

The implosion of Enron, Global Crossing, WorldCom, and other public companies has caused widespread concern about the soundness of American businesses. Public confidence in corporate practices has been undermined, and serious questions have been raised about the accuracy of corporate audits and the integrity of auditors. Many Americans have become worried that neither internal corporate safeguards nor the government's financial oversight mechanisms are functioning properly.

I share these concerns and I am glad that the Senate is seeking to address them. All Americans have a stake in a healthy business climate, and we know that health depends on having an ethical business climate. While the past two decades have unleashed a tidal wave of entrepreneurship and successful business growth, we have also witnessed, most notably throughout the late 1990's, an "anything goes" relativism that has increasingly penetrated our corporate business and political culture.

We've always taught our children a moral principle well expressed by Macauley: that "The measure of a man's real character is what he would do if he knew he would never be found out." We do so because, as parents, we know that we cannot supervise our children forever. When they face, as they inevitably will, a choice between the easy road of cheating or the tough road of following the rules, we want them to choose right, not wrong.

Sadly, this lesson seems to have been forgotten lately. In the haze of morally gray areas, corporate executives have come right up against the limits of what is acceptable behavior, and in several cases, have gone beyond it. What's worse, these companies' boards of directors have stood by in the face of wrongdoing, either unable to discover it or unwilling to rouse themselves to take corrective action.

I am very troubled by the inability of the markets to see through the phony numbers being generated by these enterprises. As a result, average investors no longer enjoy the protections put in place to ensure accountability and transparency. I agree with President Bush, who said that "to properly inform shareholders and the investing public we must adopt better standards of disclosure and accounting practices for all of corporate America."

Yesterday, President Bush outlined an aggressive plan to rejuvenate the mechanisms that ensure corporate responsibility. This plan will expose and punish acts of corruption, make corporate accounting standards more transparent, and protect small investors and pension holders. The President has urged Congress to adopt tough new criminal penalties and enforcement provisions in order to punish those who refuse to play by the rules and who choose to undermine the integrity of our financial markets.

The House of Representatives have already passed legislation addressing this slippage in corporate responsibility, while also permitting enough legal and regulatory flexibility to tackle future problems. Rather than seeking to provide a statutory answer for every current deficiency and every recent transgression, the House bill recognizes that this is a job for experts and gives the Securities and Exchange Commission the authority necessary to prevent future abuses.

By attempting to legislate detailed accounting standards, the bill before us puts Congress in the position of micromanaging details that we know less about than SEC experts. So, the legislation before the Senate represents a less workable approach than the President's proposal. Although I support its goals, particularly the need to improve the quality of independent audits and financial reporting and ensure meaningful accountability by executives of public companies, this bill has other specific problems.

For example, the Public Company Accounting Oversight Board, which would be created by the bill, would be allowed to begin proceedings against accounting firms without affording them the same due-process protections they would have in court. Their livelihood could be at stake. Certainly, bad actors should be held accountable for wrongdoing. But our system of justice has always had safeguards to protect the innocent; checks need to be in place to prevent the wielding of unbridled government power.

The bill would make accountants liable for not reporting "any material noncompliance" with the law that auditors "should know" about. What does that mean? That standard is so vague that it is certain to invite a flood of litigation. Unfortunately, we have had some experience with frivolous lawsuits trumped up by trial lawyers over alleged securities violations.

Section 105 of the bill establishes liability for any "failure to supervise," another vague standard that is likely to invite litigation.

Again, let me say that bad actors must be held accountable for wrongdoing. But as we attempt to root out and punish the wrongdoers, we must be mindful of the impact legislation will have on the greater number of people who are acting in good faith. Setting up a system that is too costly to comply with, or one that even good people find too onerous to comply with, will ultimately harm the very people we are trying to protect—employees, retirees, and others who have invested in American corporations. If the liability potential is too great, it will be hard for many businesses to obtain accounting services at a reasonable cost.

Fortunately, we can still improve the bill in conference, before we send it to the President and he must decide whether to sign it.

And while we're at it, the Senate would be wise to look at its own financial practices. We, too, are accountable to the American people. The Budget Enforcement Act of 1974 requires Congress to approve a budget resolution on how much the government can spend each fiscal year. Yet, this year, the Majority has refused to bring a budget to the Senate floor. This is unprecedented and unacceptable. The majority is abrogating its duty to the Senate and the American people. Its stubborn refusal to do what is right, while the whole country watches, is indefensible. Its eagerness to hammer away at what are admittedly acts of wrongdoing in American business, while gliding over its own dereliction of duty in the same general area—is breathtakingly hypocritical.

So while we work to pass these important reforms, we must remember that, like the CEOs of public companies, we, too, have an ethical duty to protect and use wisely other people's money. I would remind my colleagues that it is thoroughly disingenuous to rise today to demand clean accounting practices by the private sector, while failing to ensure even basic general accounting standards for the federal government.

In closing, consider the thoughts of George Will on capitalism and ethics. Mr. Will wrote that a properly functioning free-market system is "a complex creation of laws and mores that guarantee, among much else, transparency, meaning a sufficient stream, a torrent, really, of reliable information about the condition and conduct of corporations. By casting a cool eye on Enron's debris and those who made it, government can strengthen an economic system that depends on it."

I am confident that, despite these recent abuses of the public's trust, our economy and our system remain fundamentally sound and strong. The vast majority of businesspeople respect legal norms and live by them. We will make our free enterprise system better for them, and for all Americans, by penalizing those who did wrong and repairing creaky enforcement mechanisms. The President has acted. The House has acted. Now it is time for the Senate to act, to return trust, accountability and transparency to our financial institutions.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Ms. CANTWELL). The Senator from Nevada.

MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. REID. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that there be a period for morning business with Senators allowed to speak therein for 10 minutes each.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

DROUGHT

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I rise today to discuss the effects of a natural disaster that lingers across much of the west, drought. There is not a segment of the New Mexico population that will not be touched, in some form or fashion, by drought this year.

People in other parts of the country have turned on their television sets over the past few weeks and have seen the blazes of catastrophic wildfires that are again devastating the western United States. This may be the only effect of the drought that many are aware of. Let me tell you, the devastation is even more profound.

Ranchers are being forced to sell off livestock because they can't find enough water for them and can't afford the significant feed costs. Other agricultural businesses are being forced to shut their doors because the agriculture sector as a whole is hurting.

Most of the National Forests in New Mexico are closed to the public. This has added to a decrease in tourism. Let me mention a couple of specific examples. First of all, there is a small railroad, the historic Cumbres and Toltec Railroad, that takes people through a very beautiful part of the State. The railroad contributes to the tourism and economic stability of a very poor part of the State. That railroad has had to close because it runs through National Forest system lands and the fear that the railroad might spark and start a wildfire is a threat to imminent to risk. A second example is the river rafting operations that have been forced to cease operations because of the drought conditions and lack of river flows.

Municipal and private wells are running dry. In the City of Santa Fe, emergency wells for municipal water use are needed because Santa Fe's water storage is at 18 percent capacity, the spring run off is only at 2 percent, and current wells are pumping 24 hours a day. The City of Santa Fe is at a Stage 3 water shortage emergency, which allows outdoor watering once a week, but the City Council is considering going to Stage 4, which would eliminate all outdoor watering. To put this in perspective, the last substantial rain for the area was in late January.

A recent article in the New York Times accurately depicts the dire situation. It talks about how gardening in a desert is challenging, especially during a drought and at a time of mandatory water restrictions. The article went on to talk about people spray painting plastic flowers and artificial turf, while also using freeze dried plants to beautify porches and other areas.

Santa Fe is only one of the numerous municipalities that have imposed restrictions on water use. The article also notes that these restrictions are enforced by "water police" and that violators face steep fines ranging from $20 for a first offense to $200 for a fourth offense and stay at $200 for each repeat violation.

A second article appearing in the Albuquerque Journal, referenced a "drought reduction" cattle sale. The sale took place last week on the edge of the Navajo reservation. While most livestock sales generally take place on the reservation during September and October, this year emergency sales are being held almost every weekend. Hundreds of cattle, horses and sheep have already died as a result of the severe drought conditions.

The article goes on to describe the severity of the conditions. "Stock ponds have gone dry, fish have died in evaporating lakes, and grass has disappeared. Sand blows across reservation roads, and the stiff bodies of dead cattle litter the land."

The seriousness of the water situation in New Mexico becomes more acute every single day. I reiterate that every single New Mexican will feel the impact of this drought in one way or another—whether they are selling off the essence of their livelihood—livestock, or losing daily revenues in other small business, whether they are actually having to refrain from watering their own lawns and washing their cars to looking for alternative recreational opportunities this summer, the drought and its devastation is very real.

There is a need out west and I stand ready to do what I can. It will be a monumental and expensive challenge, but one we cannot avoid. I ask unanimous consent that the two articles referenced in my remarks be printed in the RECORD.

[From the New York Times, July 8, 2002]

IN SANTA FE, IT'S TIME TO PAINT THE PLANTS

Gardening in a desert is challenging. Gardening in a desert in a drought is tough. Gardening in a desert in a drought at a time of mandatory water restrictions is ridiculous.

It's enough to make a hard-core gardener break out the spray paint and feather dusters. Why? To brighten the artificial turf and plastic flowers, of course, and to keep the cobwebs off the freeze-dried evergreens.

"Isn't this a hoot?" said Kay Hendricks, a 70-year-old interior designer who cheerfully pointed out a now-dead wisteria vine as she stuffed a plastic sprig of purple lavender into a pot of freshly painted silk red flowers. "A little red paint will make any flower a geranium."

In a whirlwind tour of her home, Ms. Hendricks showed off a bouquet of what may have once been silk purple zinnias, now painted red to match an American flag hanging on her garage; a potted four-foot-tall plastic cactus with fake thorns; and English ivy with fake dewdrops draped from another pot.

With drought gripping several Western states this summer, Santa Fe is one of a number of municipalities that have instituted mandatory restrictions on lawn watering, car washing and other uses of water. The restrictions are enforced by "water police," who can impose steep fines and even decrease water flows to scofflaws' homes. Phone lines have been set up so people can report wasteful neighbors to city officials.

Fines for illegal watering here start at $20 and go up to $200 after the fourth offense, and then stay at $200 for each repeated violation.

"There is a guilt to watering things," said Mary Thomas, manager of the American Country Collection furniture store in downtown Santa Fe. She used to plant colorful annuals in pots outside her store each spring, but now she has 18 freeze-dried miniature evergreens instead.

"They don't have to be watered and we can paint them if they lose their color," she said. Ms. Thomas said her parents liked the freeze-dried trees so much that they bought some for their own patio.

The city is at a Stage 3 water shortage emergency, which allows outdoor watering once a week, but the City Council is considering going to Stage 4, which would eliminate all outdoor watering. Reservoirs that the city relies on for water are at 23 percent of normal capacity, and the last substantial rain was in late January, said Chandra Marsh, a water conservation educator and compliance specialist with the City of Santa Fe Water Department.

Not every plant here is fake or dead. Established low-water perennials are surviving, and hollyhocks and lilies can be seen blooming here and there. But, Ms. Marsh said, it is difficult to establish many plants without regular watering.

It seems as if everyone in this town is either adding a few silk and plastic plants to their yards, or knows someone who is doing so while letting the grass die in the baking dry heat.

Mary Branham, 71, has switched from pots with nearly 200 red geraniums to all silk and plastic plants and flowers this year. "It seemed irresponsible even when we can water once a week," she said. Ms. Branham's terra cotta pots now have blue hydrangeas, ornamental grasses, orange marigolds and pink and purple lilacs "planted" in the soil.

She said she now dusts her flowers twice a week.

IT'S LIKE THE SAHARA

(By Leslie Linthicum)

Life-draining drought drives ranchers on Navajo reservation to sell off gaunt livestock.

About 200 people filled the stands of the Naschitti Livestock Association arena on the eastern edge of the Navajo reservation last week, waiting for the start of what was being billed as a "drought reduction" cattle sale.

Livestock auctions usually take place on the reservation in September and October, when sheep and cattle are fat.

But this is a year when the reservation is baking in one of the worst droughts anyone can remember, and hundreds of cattle, horses and sheep have already died. This year, emergency sales have been cropping up almost every weekend.

In a place where harmony is prized and people live close to the land, hot afternoon winds carry fear and uneasiness as the landscape becomes ever drier and prayers for rainfall go unanswered. Stock ponds have gone dry, fish have died in evaporating lakes, and grass has disappeared. Sand blows across reservation roads, and the stiff bodies of dead cattle litter the land.

"It's bad, really bad," said John Blueeyes, director of the tribe's agriculture department. "Mother Nature's not too nice to us lately."

Sagebrush turns black.

Livestock are not the only victims of the lingering drought.

Last week an elk cow wandered into The Gap, a community on the edge of the Grand Canyon, desperate for water.

She jumped a fence and sought relief in a sewage lagoon, where she died and lay floating three days later.

Many Farms Lake on the Arizona side of the reservation usually spreads across about 1,500 acres, shimmering in the summer sun and inviting fishermen to try their luck catching bass and catfish.

With no water flowing in the creeks and washes that feed it, the lake has gone completely dry. It is now a 2½-square-mile, crackly graveyard for tens of thousands of fish.

At the base of Gray Mountain just east of the Grand Canyon, usually hardy sagebrush has turned black.

Elsewhere, sand blows across highways in a rippling reminder that rain is a distant memory. The last rain most people can remember was last October.

Last week on the two-lane highway that links Canyon de Chelly to Monument Valley a road that sees plenty of tourists' cars during the summer a front-end loader scooped buckets of sand into dump trucks bound for a construction site at a nearby community.

Chancellor Damon, a heavy equipment contractor from Window Rock, was doing the work under hire by the Bureau of Indian Affairs to keep the road safe from sand dunes that had been encroaching on the roadway since the spring.

"It's like the Sahara," Damon said. "It's just been windy, hot and dry."

Damon is a lifelong resident of the Navajo reservation and is accustomed to huge winter snows in the mountains that hug the New Mexico-Arizona border. Usually, a three-wheeler is needed to make it through the snow. This year, passenger cars had no trouble.

"Almost no snow. No rain whatsoever, It's bad," Damon said.

Hardship bargains

Elderly women in velveteen blouses, ranchers in Wranglers and toddlers in pint-sized straw hats helped to fill the stands during a 100-degree afternoon at the livestock auction while a handful of Anglo ranchers from out of state lined the top row.

The Navajos, out of water and feed, had come to sell.

The cattlemen, fortunate to have rain and pasture grass in Nebraska and Louisiana, were looking for some hardship bargains.

First, the invocation in Dine, the native language of the Navajo: "Please give us rain. Please give us moisture. Let it be like it used to be grass green and high and rain every day."

As the auction rolled on under a sizzling sun, stunted calves and skinny cows were paraded in and sold.

Some were to be fattened up in greener pastures; others were bound directly for the slaughterhouse. Prices were moderate and, considering that the cost of hay to continue feeding the cows hovers between $6 and $11 a bale on the reservation the auction satisfied both the buyers and the sellers.

The Becenti family from Naschitti had brought 30 calves and cows to the auction. Three weeks ago they sold another group of 30 cattle and sheep at an auction in Aztec.

Ilene Becenti is reducing her herds by about 50 percent, banking the money from the sales and hoping to buy more animals once rains come.

Like the rest of the animals on sale at Naschitti, Becenti's animals are healthy; they are just much lighter than they should be at this time, and it is costing more to feed them as hay prices rise.

"There's no grass. It's completely dry," said Patricia Arviso, Becenti's niece and one of the many family members who look after the animals.

"When I was growing up," Arviso said, "it never looked like this."

Becenti is not in the ranching business to make money, and she did not consider only economics when she made the decision to sell.

"There's no rain, no grass. We don't want these animals to suffer," she said.

She will not, under the advice of some of the tribe's range management specialists, sell all of her animals and wait out the duration of this drought with no livestock.

"It makes you feel good if you have livestock around your house. It's how we were raised," Becenti said. "If you look outside your house and you don't see cows and sheep and goats and horses, it doesn't feel right. It's life to us."

Too many animals.

About 700 cattle and horses were sold at Naschitti, less than one-fifth of what the tribe's range management specialists and tribal president had been hoping for.

"We want people to sell," said Blueeyes, of the tribe's agriculture department.

Rather than use hay to feed cows that are old, sick or not reproducing, the agriculture department wants owners to thin their herds dramatically, keeping only young and healthy animals.

The drought has brought into sharper focus an issue that has troubled natural resource managers for a century: The Navajo reservation, with so much land and so little vegetation, is being eaten away by too many animals.

The reservation is immense some 25,000 square miles spread over northwestern New Mexico, northeastern Arizona and southeastern Utah. Range surveys have found large portions where overgrazing and drought have combined to kill grass. Without grass anchoring the soil, it blows away.

As early as 1930, a federal survey described the Navajo range as "deteriorating rather steadily and more rapidly each year." In 1933, tribal lawmakers approved a livestock reduction plan that, carried out over one traumatic decade, reduced the livestock on Navajo lands from 800,000 head to about 460,000.

Estimates of the number of sheep, cattle, goats and horses on the reservation today vary between 100,000 and 200,000.

They have symbolism that goes beyond their ability to provide meat and transportation. Sheep and goats are an integral part of family and ceremonial life; cattle are vital to the Indian cowboy tradition; and Navajo elders believe horses bring rain.

Last week Navajo President Kelsey Bagaye issued a statement to Navajos, imploring them to sell some of their animals.

"We need to help our Mother Earth recover so that it may yield and sustain green pastures again in the future when moisture comes to our land," Begaye said.

"Owning livestock," he said, "is more a privilege and gift than a right."

Grazing reforms have been suggested for years and never enacted. Blueeyes expects Navajos will haul water and buy hay for their animals and wait for rain to make things better, but will not be open to discussions of limiting their herds so the land can heal.

"It is the Navajo sacred cow," said Blueeyes. "Nobody wants to talk about it."

LOCAL LAW ENFORCEMENT ACT OF 2001

Mr. SMITH of Oregon. Madam President, I rise today to speak about hate crimes legislation I introduced with Senator KENNEDY in March of last year. The Local Law Enforcement Act of 2001 would add new categories to current hate crimes legislation sending a signal that violence of any kind is unacceptable in our society.

I would like to describe a terrible crime that occurred September 19, 2000 in Cambridge, MA. A Muslim student, who was wearing a praying cap, was returning to his dorm from Islamic prayer when two white men with shaved heads attacked him. The men grabbed the student from behind and punched and kicked him. One of the perpetrators used a racial epithet during the beating. The victim required medical attention and received stitches for a wound to his head.

I believe that government's first duty is to defend its citizens, to defend them against the harms that come out of hate. The Local Law Enforcement Act of 2001 is now a symbol that can become substance. I believe that by passing this legislation and changing current law, we can change hearts and minds as well.

ADDITIONAL STATEMENTS

HONORING THE COMPANY OF FIFERS AND DRUMMERS

• Mr. DODD. Madam President, I rise to recognize the outstanding contributions of The Company of Fifers and Drummers to the people of Connecticut and beyond. One of the largest organizations of its kind in the Western world, The Company has both increased awareness of fife and drum history and fostered communication amongst corps worldwide. I would like to take the opportunity to commend its hard work and numerous achievements over the years.

Rooted in early American musical tradition, The Company of Fifers and Drummers is a nonprofit organization founded in 1965. The historical significance of The Company is evidenced through the early establishment of various corps dating back to the 1760s and 1800s. Throughout its existence, The Company has broadened corps membership beyond Connecticut and New England to include an impressive 125 corps worldwide, including corps in Europe and along the Pacific coast. In addition to showcasing fife and drum music and history, The Company organizes all activities for member corps, both inside and outside the United States.

The efforts of The Company of Fifers and Drummers extends far beyond musical events and fellowship. The commitment of this organization to the art of fife and drum is also evidenced through its creation of the Museum of Fife and Drum in Ivoryton, CT. Since 1987, the museum has serviced the community by providing access to artifacts, including eighteenth and nineteenth century instruments and uniforms, a music and video library, as well as an extensive archives. The Company is certainly worthy of praise for its efforts in maintaining the only museum devoted to fife and drum to date.

As the fife and drum first appeared in the early colonies, The Company of Fifers and Drummers is a reminder of the importance of our history as Americans. While the drum arrived in America with the first English settlers, the fife was introduced in the colonies during the French and Indian War. By 1775, the year of the Lexington Alarm, most colonial regiments were comprised of fifers and drummers. The spirit of patriotism rooted in the Company is a great example for all Americans.

I am proud to honor The Company of Fifers and Drummers for its remarkable service and accomplishments over the past 30 years. My experience with The Company, most recently at the Eight Mile River Dedication Ceremony in East Haddam, CT, has proved both enlightening and inspiring. I wish to show my appreciation for its outstanding contributions to society, and

CONGRATULATIONS TO LIEUTENANT COLONEL TIM JONES, BATTALION COMMANDER, U.S. ARMY

● Mr. MCCONNELL. Madam President, I rise today to pay tribute to Lieutenant Colonel, LTC, Timothy A. "Tim" Jones as he assumes command of the 9th Battalion, 101st Aviation Regiment, 101st Airborne/Air Assault Division, at Fort Campbell, KY. This well deserved honor is the latest achievement in a long and distinguished Army career that started with Tim's graduation in 1984 from the U.S. Military Academy at West Point, NY. After being commissioned as a Second Lieutenant, 2LT, in the brand new branch of Aviation, Tim returned to his home state of Alabama to complete rotary wing flight training at Fort Rucker. He then served in numerous positions including Company Commander with the 7th Infantry Division, Light, at Fort Ord, CA. His service at Ft. Ord was highlighted by his heroic actions in Panama during Operation Just Cause. He then served with the elite 160th Special Operations Aviation Regiment, also based at Ft. Campbell, KY. Only the "best of the best" in Army Aviation are invited to serve with the 160th, the "Nightstalkers." Most recently, Tim completed an overseas assignment in Korea, and now returns to the United States to provide the leadership and experience desperately needed by combat units such as the 9th Battalion. Please join me in congratulating the Army's newest battalion commander, LTC Tim Jones, as well as his family, including wife Theresa, daughter Megan, and sons John and Daniel on this latest achievement in a long and distinguished career in Army Aviation.●

TRIBUTE TO DR. ALBERT SOLNIT

● Mr. LIEBERMAN. Madam President, it is with sadness that I come to the floor today to note the untimely passing of a great man whose life and work in Connecticut have made my State, and our country, a better place, particularly for our children.

Dr. Albert Solnit, Chair of the Yale Child Study Center from 1966 to 1983 and Commissioner of Mental Health and Addiction Services for the State of Connecticut from 1991 to 2000, died tragically and suddenly on June 21, as a result of injuries sustained in a car accident earlier that day. This loss has compounded the mourning of the men and women of the Yale Child Study Center, who lost another former director in Donald Cohen last October.

Albert Solnit spent an entire lifetime serving his fellow human beings with great dedication, enthusiasm, and distinction. Having served in the U.S.

Army as a psychiatrist, Dr. Solnit arrived at Yale, my alma mater, in 1948, as a psychiatric resident. Two years later, he became the first trainee in child psychiatry ever at the Child Study Center. In another 2 years, he joined the faculty of the Center. And by 1964, he was a full professor there. With years of diverse training in medicine, pediatrics, anatomy, and communicable diseases and a passionate commitment to bettering the lives of children of Connecticut, Dr. Solnit became director of the Child Study Center in 1966.

Every day, Dr. Solnit would arrive at the Yale Child Study Center long before his colleagues. He would work late into the evening. He didn't have to; after all, he was the boss. But he did, because he had a tireless work ethic and a clear vision of how his effort could better the world.

Even if I had an hour or two here on the floor, I could not catalogue Dr. Solnit's accomplishments in full. So let me focus briefly on what were his deepest interests: assisting children caught in complicated custody situations, children being adopted, or children committed to the well-intentioned, though often challenging, foster care system of my state. Dr. Solnit didn't simply observe and dissect problems with the status quo; he corrected them. He helped set the standards for how the legal system would work with child development experts on behalf of children. In the late 1960s, he worked with the state government to develop a new department of juvenile delinquency called the Department of Children and Youth Services, and to build a separate State psychiatric hospital that would treat only children, and treat them with special focus and care.

He wrote two books, "In the Best Interests of the Child" and "Beyond the Best Interests of the Child," that are known as classics in the field of child mental health.

This man was always taking his vast range of knowledge and figuring out how best to apply it to touch the lives of others. He was always mentoring his colleagues. He was always nurturing children. It is with sorrow that I mourn his sudden death, and it is with far greater pride, respect, and love that I pay tribute today to the life of inspiration that Dr. Al Solnit gave to us all.

I extend my deepest condolences to his colleagues at the Child Study Center, to his wife Martha, and to his children David, Ruth, Ben, and Aaron—and their families.

And I ask that the following obituary, written by Dean David Kessler of the Yale School of Medicine, be printed into the RECORD, so that this man's life, a model to which we might all aspire, is remembered forever.

The obituary follows:

DEAR FACULTY, It is with great sadness that I write to inform you of yet another deep and tragic loss of a member of the faculty and senior leadership of the Yale Child Study Center and Yale School of Medicine. Dr. Albert J. Solnit died on Friday evening, June 21st, as a result of injuries he sustained in an automobile accident earlier that day. His wife, Martha, was also involved in the accident and is in stable condition in the intensive care unit of Waterbury Hospital.

Dr. Solnit was chair of the Child Study Center from 1966 to 1983 and Commissioner of Mental Health and Addiction Services for the State of Connecticut from 1991 to 2000. He was also the Sterling Professor Emeritus of Pediatrics and Psychiatry in the Child Study Center. Named a Sterling Professor in 1970, he was the middle of three Sterling professors who led the Center. The most recent was Donald J. Cohen who succeeded Dr. Solnit as chairman of the Center in 1983, and who died last October.

Al arrived at Yale in 1948 as a psychiatric resident and in 1950 became the first trainee in child psychiatry in the Child Study Center. He was born in 1919 and grew up in Los Angeles, California, attended the University of California in Berkeley and San Francisco, and received his medical degree in 1943. After pediatric training in Long Island College Hospital, he entered the U.S. Army and served as a psychiatrist during his two-year commitment. He joined the faculty of the Child Study Center in 1952 and became a full professor in 1964. Like his predecessor, Al came to his leadership position at the Child Study Center with a broad background that also included a masters degree in anatomy and a year as a resident in communicable diseases. He also had begun psychoanalytic training in the New York Psychoanalytic Institute from which he graduated in 1955.

Al's tenure as chair of the Center was infused with his distinctive energy and broad vision, he was a man of remarkable stamina, arriving at Center long before his colleagues and continuing to work late into the evening, a characteristic that was enduring from his very first years at Yale through the day before this death. Long concerned for the needs for poor and underprivileged children, he had been working as consultant to various school districts and many child-serving such social agencies in the New Haven community and the state. In the late 60's, he worked with the state government of Connecticut to develop new department of juvenile delinquency, the Department of Children and Youth Services, and to build a separate state psychiatric hospital for children.

In his effort to bring the Center into the community, Al built bridges throughout the university and the city of New Haven. Among those initiatives was his collaborative work with the law school. Trained as a child and adult psychoanalyst he cared deeply for children caught in the turmoil of the foster care system, or complicated custody situations. With his close colleagues, Anna Freud and Joseph Goldstein, he set the standards for an informed, collaborative interface between the legal system and child development experts on behalf of children. His books, In the Best Interests of the Child and Beyond the Best Interests of the Child, are recognized classics in the field of child mental health. Throughout his career—even up to last week—he was regularly consulting with colleagues and trainees about how to think about complex questions of adoption, custody, and child placement. His perceptiveness in these often difficult areas was legendary and much respected by judges and child psychiatrists alike. Other of his scholarly contributions, set forth in seventeen books and over two hundred papers and chapters, set the tone of the emerging field of child psychiatry.

Al maintained strong and close ties to pediatrics and to pediatricians. He established a long-standing collaborative group involving both child psychiatrists and practicing pediatricians that has met monthly for over forty years to discuss the common clinical ground between the two disciplines. He developed the concept of the "vulnerable child" that detailed the effects on parents and children of neonatal or very clearly serious illness or threatened illness. With his close colleagues, Sally Provence, Julius Richmond, and Irving Harris, Al also began the organization Zero To Three that defined the field of infant psychiatry.

Al was a recognized and prodigious leader in the world of child mental health and child psychoanalysis. He was president of the American Psychoanalytic Association from 1970 to 1971; of the American Academy of Child and Adolescent Psychiatry from 1971-73; and of the International Association of Child and Adolescent Psychiatry and Allied Professions from 1974-76. In the latter organization, he remained an active, contributing member of the leadership and was intimately involved just this past week in developing a new training agenda to bring international child mental health scholars together. He was editor of the Psychoanalytic Study of the Child, a position he assumed in 1971 and through which he turned the journal into one of the leading publications in the field. Al was an international leader in psychoanalysis. He was actively involved with the Yale Press and with the Muriel Gardiner Seminar for Psychoanalysis and the Humanities. Both of these efforts reflect Al's broad intellectual interests and his ability to span fields. He was an enduringly curious scholar and enjoyed most bringing individuals from different disciplines together to encourage cross-talk and interdisciplinary understanding. He was masterful in his ability to detect even the faintest possibility of common ground among apparently disparate points of view and for bringing these groups together.

Many individuals in the field of child psychiatry, and more broadly child mental health, attribute their careers to Al's ability to see their potential and make connections that put them in the right place at a critical time for their personal development. He worked often quietly behind the scenes to help young faculty members find sufficient help and resources to start their research or to feel sufficiently grounded so that they could flourish. He stayed in touch with his patients for years, long after they were adults and parents, even grandparents, themselves and he never ceased to be their physician, always available and sensitive to their needs.

Though an emeritus professor, Al Solnit was by no means retired. He was mentoring, guiding, and caring every hour of the day. He was a vital, present member of the Child Study Center's leadership and carried the wisdom afforded by living the history of a place. His untimely, unexpected death cuts short a continuing vigorous life with mentoring and leadership yet to give.

I know you join me in extending sympathy to all of his colleagues in the Child Study Center and to his wife Martha, his children David, Ruth, Ben, Aaron, and their families.

Al Solnit was a vital citizen of this medical school and university. We shall miss him and do our best to carry out his constant imperative that there is always more to be done on behalf of the world's children.—David Kessler, M.D., Dean, Yale School of Medicine.●

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Ms. Evans, one of his secretaries.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

As in executive session the Presiding Officer laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting treaties and sundry nominations which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(The nominations received today are printed at the end of the Senate proceedings.)

MESSAGES FROM THE HOUSE

At 12:50 p.m., a message from the House of Representatives, delivered by Ms. Niland, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House has passed the following bills, in which it requests the concurrence of the Senate:

H.R. 3130. An act to provide for increasing the technically trained workforce in the United States.

H.R. 4481. An act to amend title 49, United States Code, relating to airport project streamlining, and for other purposes.

H.R. 4878. An act to provide for estimates and reports of improper payments by Federal agencies.

H.R. 5017. An act to amend the Temporary Emergency Wildfire Suppression Act to facilitate the ability of the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of Agriculture to enter into reciprocal agreements with foreign countries for the sharing of personnel to fight wildfires.

H.R. 5063. An act to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 to provide a special rule for members of the uniformed services in determining the exclusion of gain from the sale of a principal residence and to restore the tax exempt status of death gratuity payments to members of the uniformed services.

STATEMENTS ON INTRODUCED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

By Mr. DOMENICI:

S. 2719. A bill to authorize the Secretary of the Army to carry out critical restoration projects along the Middle Rio Grande; to the Committee on Environment and Public Works.

Mr. DOMENICI. Madam President, great endeavors begin with a vision. Last fall, I joined the Middle Rio Grande Conservancy District and the Army Corps of Engineers in unveiling a vision that would rehabilitate and restore the Rio Grande Bosque in Albuquerque, NM.

Today, I rise to introduce a bill that will make that vision a reality. Since last fall, the Army Corps of Engineers has undertaken the task of conducting a feasibility study so that we might gain a better understanding of how best to rehabilitate and restore this beautiful Albuquerque green belt.

I remain grateful to each of the parties who have been involved with this idea since its inception. Each one contributes a very critical component. The Middle Rio Grande Conservancy District owns this vital part of the Bosque which runs from the National Hispanic Cultural Center north to the Paseo Del Norte bridge. The MRGCD has proven to be a valuable local partner in identifying areas for non-native species and other environmental restoration work. Additionally, MRGCD continues to work on the development and implementation of an educational campaign for local public schools on the importance of the Bosque. Finally, MRGCD has continually worked with all parties to provide options on how the Bosque can be preserved, protected and enjoyed by everyone.

Last year I committed to requesting the Army Corps of Engineers to develop a preliminary restoration plan for the Bosque along the Albuquerque corridor. I have done that and the plan is well underway. This bill that I introduce today is the next step in following through on this project.

Specifically, this bill authorizes $75 million dollars to complete projects, activities, substantial ecosystem restoration, preservation, protection and recreation along the Middle Rio Grande.

Having grown up in Albuquerque, the Bosque is something I treasure. I have been very involved in Bosque restoration since 1991 and I commend the Bosque Coalition for the work they have done, and will continue to do, all along the river.

This new vision, specific to the Albuquerque Corridor, builds on that idea and is a logical complement to these previous efforts as well as towards Bosque revitalization, restoration and recovery along the entire Rio Grande river.

This area was designated as a State park many years ago. As many of you know, this area has been overrun by non-native vegetation, peppered with graffiti, cluttered with trash and as we saw this past year, has become more susceptible to fire.

I want to ensure that the Albuquerque corridor, which is a unique and irreplaceable part of the desert Southwest's ecosystem, is preserved for generations to come. A healthy ecosystem is key to such things as the protection of threatened species and overall river flow.

We know that the river in this area is vital habitat for many species, including the endangered Rio Grande Silvery minnow. Efforts reducing non-native species, while protecting all from the possibility of devastating wildfire, will also improve the flow of the river and habitat for its many species.

At the same time, the Bosque is a natural green belt through Albuquerque. This area should be made beautiful and more accessible to the public for enjoyment.

I am grateful that all parties have come together and that I can be a part of making this vision a reality. I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2719

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, SECTION 1. FINDINGS.

Congress finds that—

(1) the Middle Rio Grande bosque is—

(A) a unique riparian forest located in Albuquerque, New Mexico;

(B) the largest continuous cottonwood forest in the Southwest;

(C) 1 of the oldest continuously inhabited areas in the United States;

(D) home to portions of 6 pueblos; and

(E) a critical flyway and wintering ground for migratory birds;

(2) the portion of the Middle Rio Grande adjacent to the Middle Rio Grande bosque provides water to many people in the State of New Mexico;

(3) the Middle Rio Grande bosque should be maintained in a manner that protects endangered species and the flow of the Middle Rio Grande while making the Middle Rio Grande bosque more accessible to the public;

(4) environmental restoration is an important part of the mission of the Corps of Engineers; and

(5) the Corps of Engineers should reestablish, where feasible, the hydrologic connection between the Middle Rio Grande and the Middle Rio Grande bosque to ensure the permanent healthy growth of vegetation native to the Middle Rio Grande bosque.

SEC. 2. DEFINITIONS.

In this Act:

(1) CRITICAL RESTORATION PROJECT.—The term “critical restoration project” means a project carried out under this Act that will produce, consistent with Federal programs, projects, and activities, immediate and substantial ecosystem restoration, preservation, recreation, and protection benefits.

(2) MIDDLE RIO GRANDE.—The term “Middle Rio Grande” means the portion of the Rio Grande from Cochiti Dam to the headwaters of Elephant Butte Dam, in the State of New Mexico.

(3) SECRETARY.—The term “Secretary” means the Secretary of the Army.

SEC. 3. MIDDLE RIO GRANDE RESTORATION.

(a) CRITICAL RESTORATION PROJECTS.—The Secretary shall carry out critical restoration projects along the Middle Rio Grande.

(b) PROJECT SELECTION.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary may select critical restoration projects in the Middle Rio Grande based on feasibility studies.

(2) USE OF EXISTING STUDIES AND PLANS.—In carrying out subsection (a), the Secretary shall use, to the maximum extent practicable, studies and plans in existence on the date of enactment of this Act to identify the needs and priorities for critical restoration projects.

(c) LOCAL PARTICIPATION.—In carrying out this Act, the Secretary shall consult with, and consider the priorities of, public and private entities that are active in ecosystem restoration in the Rio Grande watershed, including entities that carry out activities under—

(1) the Middle Rio Grande Endangered Species Act Collaborative Program; and

(2) the Bosque Improvement Group of the Middle Rio Grande Bosque Initiative.

(d) COST SHARING.—

(1) COST-SHARING AGREEMENT.—Before carrying out any critical restoration project under this Act, the Secretary shall enter into an agreement with the non-Federal interests that shall require the non-Federal interests—

(A) to pay 25 percent of the total costs of the critical restoration project;

(B) to provide land, easements, rights-of-way, relocations, and dredged material disposal areas necessary to carry out the critical restoration project;

(C) to pay 100 percent of the operation, maintenance, repair, replacement, and rehabilitation costs associated with the critical restoration project that are incurred after the date of enactment of this Act; and

(D) to hold the United States harmless from any claim or damage that may arise from carrying out the critical restoration project (other than any claim or damage that may arise from the negligence of the Federal Government or a contractor of the Federal Government).

(2) RECREATIONAL FEATURES.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—Any recreational features included as part of a critical restoration project shall comprise not more than 30 percent of the total project cost.

(B) NON-FEDERAL FUNDING.—The full cost of any recreational features included as part of a critical restoration project in excess of the amount described in subparagraph (A) shall be paid by the non-Federal interests.

(3) CREDIT.—The non-Federal interests shall receive credit toward the non-Federal share for any design or construction activities carried out by the non-Federal interests before the date of execution of a cost-sharing agreement for a critical restoration project if the Secretary determines in the feasibility study for the critical restoration project that the activities are part of the critical restoration project.

SEC. 4. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

There are authorized to be appropriated to carry out this Act—

(1) $10,000,000 for fiscal year 2003; and

(2) such sums as are necessary for each of fiscal years 2004 through 2012.

By Mr. SARBANES (for himself, Mr. REED, Mr. SCHUMER, Mr. CARPER, Ms. STABENOW, Mr. CORZINE, and Mr. AKAKA):

S. 2721. A bill to improve the voucher rental assistance program under the United States Housing Act of 1937, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs.

Mr. SARBANES. Madam President, I come to the floor today to introduce the Housing Voucher Improvement Act of 2002. I am pleased that this legislation is being co-sponsored by a number of my colleagues on the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs: Senators REED, SCHUMER, CARPER, STABENOW, CORZINE, and AKAKA. This legislation will make important changes to the housing voucher program, a program that serves over 1.5 million low-income American families. These 1.5 million families are part of a growing number of people in this country who are unable to afford rising housing costs. As we learned in hearings before the Committee earlier this year, for too many people, the paycheck they bring home is too small to cover housing and other expenses. Low-income families are forced to live in crowded, unsafe conditions or forgo other necessities to make ends meet.

In order to ensure that families have decent, safe and affordable housing, the government provides assistance in a variety of ways including public housing, section 8 vouchers, FHA mortgage insurance, and homeless assistance programs. While we have provided funding for these programs over the years, more must be done. It is estimated that over 14 million working families in this country pay more than they can afford for housing. In addition, 1.7 million families live in substandard housing—housing that is unsafe or overcrowded. Homelessness continues to be a major problem, with approximately 2 million people experiencing homelessness at some point this year. These statistics show that millions of Americans are unable to afford the most basic of needs, housing.

The solution to the affordable housing crisis is not found in any one program or in any one policy. We must work on a variety of fronts to combat this crisis. We must preserve the affordable housing that already exists; we must build new affordable housing; and, we must ensure that the housing programs we have in place work effectively to house families in need. The Housing Voucher Improvement Act is not intended to address all of these needs, but it is an important step forward in making sure that the voucher program works to provide the greatest range of housing opportunities to the lowest income Americans.

The bill I am introducing today is intended to work towards three objectives: ensuring that the voucher program works effectively and that all families receiving vouchers are able to find adequate housing; providing families with vouchers the widest range of possibilities as to where to live; and assisting families receiving housing assistance in attaining self-sufficiency.

The voucher program has provided millions of Americans with the opportunity to live in safe and decent homes. However, as housing markets tighten, families are finding it more difficult to use housing vouchers. This difficulty may result from a lack of rental housing, available housing being too expensive, or too few landlords who accept tenants with housing vouchers. The Housing Voucher Improvement Act will give local public housing authorities a number of tools to assist voucher holders in finding housing and to make the voucher program attractive to private market landlords.

To help people find decent and safe housing, this bill will give public housing agencies the flexibility to use a limited amount of their funds to provide search assistance to voucher holders. For many people who receive vouchers, additional assistance, such as housing counseling, transportation services, or security deposit funds may make the difference in finding a place to live. This bill will also increase housing opportunities for voucher holders by allowing public housing agencies to increase the amount that the voucher is worth where a significant number of families given vouchers are unable to find adequate housing. Provisions are also included in the bill to make it easier to use vouchers in housing developed with HOME funds or Low Income Housing Tax Credits. Ensuring that vouchers can be used in these developments will greatly expand housing opportunities for extremely low-income families.

In order to operate a successful program, enough apartments must be available for people with vouchers. Therefore, vouchers must be an attractive option for landlords. Towards that end, the Housing Voucher Improvement Act allows public housing agencies to use their funds to reach out to local property owners to increase landlord participation in the vouchers program. It also scales penalties for inspection violations to the magnitude of the violation and helps guarantee timely payments to apartment owners by creating an incentive for housing authorities to use automatic payment systems for interested owners. This bill will also allow public housing authorities to streamline inspections while still ensuring that housing is decent, safe and sanitary. All of these provisions will make vouchers easier to use for private-market apartment owners.

This bill also creates a new use for vouchers, allowing housing authorities to couple a limited number of vouchers with housing being constructed with HOME dollars, tax credits, or other funds. These "thrifty vouchers" will cost less than regular vouchers, allowing more families to be served.

While most of this bill will help to expand housing opportunities for people searching for housing, one critical component of housing policy is self-sufficiency. Housing assistance is key in moving people from welfare to work. A stable home is needed for job stability. While this seems intuitive, I do not rely on intuition alone in making this assertion. Recent studies, including one done by the Manpower Demonstration Research Corporation, show that people receiving housing assistance are more successful in moving from welfare to work. They had higher wages and retained employment for longer periods of time. This bill strengthens the role that housing plays in self-sufficiency by providing greater opportunities for voucher holders to become involved in educational and employment programs. We also authorize welfare to work vouchers, which will strengthen relations between housing and welfare agencies. Given the role that housing assistance can play in promoting self-sufficiency, greater coordination between housing and welfare agencies makes good common sense.

I introduce this bill today with the hope that it will strengthen one of the most important federal housing programs. People given vouchers should be able to find adequate housing, and should have greater choices in where to live. And those families already receiving housing assistance should be able to access programs that will assist them in meeting their educational and employment goals. There is widespread consensus that the changes made in this bill will assist in these efforts. This bill is supported by a wide range of organizations including public housing agencies, industry groups, and advocacy organizations. The bill is strongly supported by the National Association of Housing and Redevelopment Officials, the Center on Budget and Policy Priorities, the Local Initiatives Support Corporation, the Enterprise Foundation, the National Low Income Housing Coalition, the National Apartment Association, the National Affordable Housing Management Association and others.

I want to take a moment to thank my staff for their hard work on this bill, and I want to specifically thank Mary Grace Folwell, a fellow from the American Planning Association, who has been crucial in working on this legislation.

I urge my colleagues to support this critical legislation and to recognize the important role that housing assistance plays in the lives of millions of Americans.

Madam President, I ask unanimous that letters of support and a section-by-section analysis be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

JULY 11, 2002.

Senator PAUL S. SARBANES,
Chairman, Senate Banking Housing and Urban Affairs, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR SARBANES: We, the organizations signed below, are writing in support of the Housing Voucher Improvement Act of 2002. The Section 8 housing voucher program provides many low-income families with the means to find affordable housing. However, in many cities, suburbs, and rural housing markets around the country, vouchers are very difficult to use. In some markets, there is just not a lot of rental housing available, the available housing is too expensive, or there are too few landlords who accept tenants with Section 8 vouchers. This legislation is narrowly tailored to make vouchers more effective by giving PHAs various tools to assist voucher holders in finding housing and by making vouchers easier for private properly owners to use.

To make vouchers easier to use for private-market apartment owners, the Housing Voucher Improvement Act changes the unit inspection requirement to make it more time-efficient; scales penalties for inspection violations to the magnitude of the violation; and, to guarantee timely payments by the PHA, creates an incentive for PHAs to use automatic payment systems for interested owners.

To help PHAs deal with high-cost rental markets, the bill increases local flexibility in setting maximum rents. The legislation grants PHAs limited authority to increase their Fair Market Rents to a maximum of 120% of the area's fair market rent. Current law allows PHAs to use this maximum only after the waiver is granted by HUD. The bill also adds provisions to facilitate the use of vouchers in units in lower-poverty neighborhoods that are developed with HOME funds or Low Income Housing Tax Credits.

To help voucher-holders find housing, the bill authorizes PHAs to use existing funding to provide landlord outreach and education and apartment-search assistance to voucher-holders as well as assistance with security deposits, application fees and credit checks.

The bill gives local public housing authorities the option of turning a limited portion of its available vouchers into lower cost "thrifty vouchers," which can be attached to a new housing development or to a development this rehabilitated or preserved. Because the vouchers cost less than regular vouchers, a larger number of families can be served by the same level of funding. The bill also makes it easier to administer the project-based component on the vouchers program and to attach vouchers to buildings in a range of neighborhoods.

Appropriately in this year of welfare reauthorization, the bill contains several provisions to promote employment among tenants of HUD's major rental assistance programs, including a 5-year authorization of Welfare-to-Work vouchers.

We thank you for your leadership on this issue and for your continued support of affordable housing programs.

NATIONAL AFFORDABLE HOUSING MANAGEMENT ASSOCIATION,
Alexandria, VA, July 11, 2002.

Hon. PAUL S. SARBANES,
Chairman, Senate Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs, Washington, DC.

DEAR CHAIRMAN SARBANES, The National Affordable Housing Management Association (NAHMA) is pleased to support provisions in the Housing Voucher Improvement Act which make the Section 8 voucher program more user-friendly for both tenants and landlords, improve administration, and address many problems which inhibit voucher utilization.

In recent years, the difficulty of satisfying the Section 8 regulatory burdens has created a strong disincentive for private landlords to accept the vouchers. The Housing Voucher Improvement Act makes several constructive reforms to the voucher program which address this reality. First, it makes the unit inspection requirement more time efficient. Likewise, it makes penalties for inspection violations commensurate with the severity of the violation. Furthermore, it will improve the timeliness of payments to landlords by creating an incentive for public housing authorities (PHAs) to use automatic payment systems.

This bill also addresses voucher utilization problems in high-cost areas by offering PHAs flexibility to establish maximum rents in high cost areas. By allowing PHAs to set the voucher payment standard at 120 percent of fair market rent (FMR), housing authorities will be able to automatically increase their payment standard to address market changes.

In short, NAHMA is pleased that you have offered legislation to improve Section 8 voucher utilization and increase housing opportunities for extremely low income families.

Sincerely,

GEORGE CARUSO,
Executive Director.

COUNCIL OF LARGE PUBLIC HOUSING AUTHORITIES,
1250 EYE STREET NW, SUITE 901 A,
Washington, DC, June 27, 2002.

Hon. PAUL SARBANES,
Chair, Committee on Banking, Housing and Urban Affairs, Washington, DC.

DEAR CHAIRMAN SARBANES: We write in support of your efforts to make Section 8 vouchers easier to use through the "Housing Voucher Improvement Act of 2002." In light of the great need for more affordable housing opportunities and the difficulty many low-income families have encountered in utilizing the program due largely to rising costs in many markets, we agree that legislative changes are needed so that the program can be more effective in providing housing subsidy to low-income families. We very much appreciate the attention this legislation will bring to this important issue.

As a November 2001, HUD study shows, tight market conditions brought about by extremely low vacancy rates in many communities is biggest impediment to voucher holders succeeding in utilizing their subsidy. We support several provisions in the bill that would help address this problem, particularly the proposal to enable PHAs to increase payments to 120% of the payment standard without prior HUD approval. In addition, the sections which authorize a $50 million Voucher Improvement Fund and provide some flexibility for PHAs to use voucher resources to pay for housing counseling, search assistance, and incentives to landlords will help voucher holders become more competitive in the market place. The proposed revisions to the current project-based Section 8 program will also assist PHAs that can better serve low-income families by increasing the supply of assisted units, instead of relying on exclusively on private market.

While we understand that this bill is designed to make only modest changes to the Section 8 program, it highlights the need for a more dramatic reform. Legislative changes over the years have addressed particular issues to help Section 8 keep pace with changing market conditions, however, some of these piecemeal modifications have added significantly to the program's complexity. Ultimately, we believe that local authorities need even more flexibility to make the most efficient use of Federal funding for housing in an ever-changing market place. Your bill is a step in that direction.

Again, we very much appreciate your staunch support of affordable housing programs and your efforts to increase Federal investment in this area. We look forward to our continued work with you and your dedicated staff to continue to make the Section 8 program work better for needy families.

Sincerely,

SUNIA ZATERMAN,
Executive Director.

SUMMARY OF THE HOUSING VOUCHER IMPROVEMENT ACT OF 2002

Section 1. Short Title.

Section 2. Purposes—(1) to ensure that the Section 8 program works effectively and all families receiving vouchers are able to find adequate housing; (2) to provide families with vouchers the widest range of possibilities as to where to live; and (3) to assist families receiving housing assistance in attaining self sufficiency through encouraging partnerships between housing authorities and welfare agencies.

Section 3. Authorize "Thrifty Vouchers" designed to make additional housing affordable to extremely low-income families.

Thrifty Vouchers (TVs) are intended to encourage the production or preservation of housing affordable to extremely low-income families. PHAs would be authorized to issue TVs out of their existing allocation of vouchers. In addition, Congress could appropriate additional incremental assistance for use as TVs.

TVs would cost less than regular vouchers because there would be no debt service included in the rent calculation for a TV unit.

Rents would be based on the operating costs of a development and would be capped at 75% of the FMR (unlike regular vouchers which are set between 90 and 110% of the FMR). Data indicate that 75% of FMR should be adequate in most places to cover the costs of operation of multifamily housing. The bill provides an exception to the 75% cap for PHAs that can demonstrate both that this cap could not support a reasonable operating cost of rental housing and a need for the production or preservation of affordable housing in the PHA's service area. Since these vouchers cost less than regular vouchers, PHAs could serve more families with the same amount of funding.

At the beginning of the development of a project, developers receiving tax credits, HOME funds, or other capital subsidies could link TVs to not more than 25% of the units in a development. The 25% cap is intended to prevent concentration of poverty. While tax credits and HOME are producing new rental housing, such housing is not affordable to extremely low income families without additional operating subsidies. A recent study done by HUD found that extremely low-income families living in HOME units who do not also receive vouchers, pay 69% of their income for rent. In some cases, residents use tenant-based vouchers to afford such units. However, linking TVs to a project would ensure that some of the units in a given project would be affordable to those most in need of housing.

This section makes TVs a subparagraph of the project-based voucher statute. This is in response to a concern expressed by HUD that they do not want to administer two separate programs. Thus, TVs would be counted against a PHA's 20% cap on project-based vouchers; however, new incremental assistance appropriated by Congress for use as TVs would not be counted against the 20% cap.

Several changes were made to the project-based voucher statute to make it easier for PHAs and private owners to administer these vouchers. The most significant include the expansion of the purpose of project-based vouchers to include the revitalization of low-income communities and the prevention of the displacement of extremely low-income families, and changes to the waiting list provisions to allow for separate project-based lists and to permit PHAs to allow owners to maintain their own waiting lists, subject to certain requirements.

Section 4. Providing assistance to voucher holders in their search for decent, safe and affordable housing.

1. Allow PHAs with unutilized Section 8 funds to use those funds on activities designed to assist families in finding housing. PHAs that have low utilization rates (they do not use all of their Section 8 funds to house families) will have unused Section 8 funds that could be made available to assist families in finding housing. This legislative change would allow PHAs to use 2% of the funds they receive under the voucher program to provide additional services to families searching for housing if they have a low voucher success rate and/or problems with concentration of voucher holders in high-poverty neighborhoods. PHAs could use funds for counseling, security deposits, application and credit check fees, and search assistance such as transportation services.

2. Allow PHAs that use all of their Section 8 funds to use up to one week of reserves on activities designed to assist families in finding housing. For PHAs that use all of their funds and whose families still face difficulties in funding adequate housing (a success rate less than 80%), the bill allows PHAs to use up to one week of reserves to provide additional service to families searching for housing.

3. Create a Voucher Success Fund of $50 million for PHAs that do not have unused funds, but still need additional resources to assist families in finding housing. These PHAs use almost all of their Section 8 funds, but families that receive vouchers still face difficulties in finding adequate housing. PHAs that use almost all of their Section 8 funds but have a success rate lower than 80% would apply to HUD for funds to help families find housing through counseling, security deposits, application and credit check fees, and search assistance such as transportation services.

Section 5. Expanding housing opportunities for voucher holders

1. All PHAs to set their voucher payment standard at 120% of FMR if they have had their payment standard set at 110% or above for the previous 6 months AND continue to have problems with utilization, success rates, or concentration of Section 8 units. Currently, PHAs may set their payment standard (which determines the amount the voucher is worth) between 90% and 110% of the Fair Market Rent. HUD can approve higher payment standards on a case by case basis. This change will allow housing authorities to automatically increase their payment standard to address market changes. Raising the payment standard will help ensure that more vouchers could be used in high cost areas.

2. Allow PHAs to pay 120% of FMR as the payment standard in individual cases for people with disabilities. People with disabilities may be limited in their housing opportunities, and their choices may be restricted based on special needs. This provision will allow housing authorities to pay up to 120% of the FMR as a reasonable accommodation for voucher holders with disabilities without prior HUD approval, and would authorize HUD approval for payment standards above 120%.

3. Allow PHAs to set higher payment standard for voucher used in Low Income Housing Tax Credit (LIHTC) developments. The LIHTC program provides substantial funding for low-income housing development. Though tax credit housing serves low-income people, these properties are not usually affordable to extremely low-income households (with incomes below 30% of the Area Median Income). One way to serve the poorest families in tax credit developments is to house families with vouchers. The recent increase in tax credits presents an opportunity to expand housing choice for even the lowest income families. In some areas, the tax credit units will have higher rents than are normally covered by a voucher. In 2000, Congress changed the project-based statute to allow project-based assistance to cover these higher rents so long as the LIHTC building was not in a high poverty census tract. This provision would make a similar change for vouchers.

4. Allow PHAs to pay up to their full payment standard for units in HOME developments. Currently, HOME units may only be rented up to the Fair Market Rent to voucher holders. This provision will allow a PHA to pay a rent at their regular payment standard, where above the FMR, in order to provide an incentive to HOME developments to seek out voucher holders as renters, only where the units are located outside of high-poverty areas.

5. Addressing Housing in the Consolidated Plan. Cities, counties and states that receive a. Include a requirement that the jurisdiction identify barriers to voucher utilization and potential solutions. This would ensure that entities other than the PHA (such as cities and counties) are aware of issues with voucher recipients and their ability to find housing. While no direct action would be required from the city or participating jurisdiction, they would be acknowledging the difficulties in using vouchers, and identifying the causes. This would hopefully lead to the jurisdiction deciding to take actions to alleviate the barriers where possible.

Community Development Block Grant (CDBG) funds (known as "participating jurisdictions") are required to complete Consolidated Plans detailing the housing and community development needs in their jurisdictions. This provision of the bill makes the following changes to the Consolidated Plan requirements:

b. Include a requirement that the jurisdiction consider employment opportunities in determining the location of housing development. Housing opportunities close to employment opportunities and/or transportation are important to ensuring the success of low-income people in finding and retaining employment. This provision would ensure that jurisdictions are looking at location in determining where housing resources should be allocated.

c. Include a requirement that a participating jurisdiction must consult with social service agencies in certain aspects of planning for housing opportunities. When determining how to address affordable housing problems, housing planners and welfare administrators should be working together to help plan for people moving from welfare to work, and to help link people receiving housing assistance with welfare agencies and resources (and vice versa).

Section 6. Access to HOME and LIHTC developments

Require that HUD ensure that PHAs have a list of LIHTC and HOME developments to give to voucher holders. While LIHTC developments could provide housing opportunities to very poor families, and while LIHTC developments may not discriminate against voucher holders, there is almost no communication or coordination between PHAs and state HFAs, which operate the LIHTC program. This provision will require HUD to compile information on where tax credit and HOME developments are located and ensure that this information is readily available to PHAs. PHAs will be responsible to access such information and provide it to families searching for housing assistance with vouchers.

Section 7. Reallocation of vouchers. Currently, HUD allows PHAs to return unused vouchers to HUD. HUD published a notice (which has not yet been fully implemented) which requires that unused budget authority be recaptured from PHAs with low utilization rates (under 95% utilization). While HUD's notice describes how they will reallocate these vouchers, the reallocation is not structured in a way that ensures that communities do not lose needed vouchers. This provision will require that vouchers to be reallocated be distributed to one or more administrators in the region. HUD would, through a competition, designate such an administrator with Section 8 experience, which could be a PHA, a state or local agency, a non-profit, or a private entity. The administrator would receive all vouchers available for reallocation in its region and would be able to operate the vouchers on a regional basis, allowing and encouraging families to live anywhere in the metropolitan area while still serving people on the original PHA's waiting list. The new administrator would have to reach certain levels of performance—in both success rates and utilization in order to retain the vouchers.

Section 8. Promoting Self-Sufficiency

1. Allow people who live in a project-based Section 8 housing to be eligible for Family Self Sufficiency activities. The Family Self Sufficiency (FSS) program provides services to assist families in public housing or those who receive vouchers in attaining educational and employment goals. This provision would also make residents of project-based Section 8 housing eligible for the FSS program. Under this provision, owners of project-based section 8 housing would be able to choose to operate their own FSS program, and if they opted not to provide such services, the PHA, at its discretion, could choose to serve such families in its FSS program. While this change will have some cost, it will be small, given that only a small percentage of families currently participate in FSS programs.

2. Allow Resident Opportunities and Self-Sufficiency (ROSS) funds to be used to serve Section 8 families. ROSS grants are given to PHAs and resident organizations to fund self-sufficiency activities. Currently, PHAs can only serve public housing residents with these funds, though the predecessor to ROSS allowed PHAs to serve Section 8 residents as well. This provision would permit PHAs to serve Section 8 tenants with ROSS funds, though it would leave the decision to each PHA to determine where funds are best used.

3. Incentives to Families to Increase Earnings. State and local welfare agencies have an enormous amount of flexibility in using their funds to help low-income families. In some cases, welfare agencies and housing authorities have worked together to use some of these funds to assist people receiving federal housing assistance. This section would ensure that payments made by welfare agencies (or other agencies) to help families with rental payments that have increased because of increased earnings, are deducted from the family's income when the PHA determines that family's share of rent. These provisions will create incentives for families to increase earnings and retain employment by allowing them to retain more of their income.

4. Authorize Welfare to Work Vouchers. In FY 1999, Congress authorized 50,000 Welfare to Work vouchers in an appropriations bill. The program has never been authorized and new vouchers have not been allocated beyond the initial 50,000. However, given that welfare will be reauthorized this year, the timing seems perfect to authorize this program, giving housing authorities additional incentives to collaborate with welfare agencies. In authorizing this program, we strengthen the requirements that PHAs work with welfare agencies in administering these vouchers. Recent studies show that housing assistance is critical in allowing people to retain employment, and these vouchers will help in this effort.

Section 9. Inspection of Units under Section 8. Currently, when a voucher holder wants to rent a unit, prior to the voucher holder moving in, and payments being made to an owner, the PHA must inspect that individual unit and any deficiencies must be repaired. Owners and PHAs agree that this is disincentive to owners participating in the program because of the amount of time it takes to lease-up the unit and receive payment. This provision will allow a PHA to begin payments to an owner prior to inspection of that particular unit so long as: (1) a building inspection has been conducted by the PHA in the last 6 months; (2) a unit inspection is completed within 30 days; and (3) the PHA and the owner have an agreement that any repairs on the unit must be made within 30 days of the unit inspection. This section will also allow PHAs to annually inspect units within 3 months of the anniversary date of that unit entering the Section 8 program if they are conducting inspections on a geographical basis.

Current regulation allows PHAs to withhold their entire portion of a rent payment for an inspection violation, regardless of the magnitude of the violation. This provision would scale penalties for inspection violations to the severity of the violation—if a garbage disposal needs to be fixed the PHA payment will only be withheld to the extent that the garbage disposal would merit.

These changes will help to bring owners into the program while still ensuring that units meet HUD standards for being safe and decent.

Section 10. Automatic Payment Systems. Currently, some, but not all, PHAs use electronic fund transfers to pay Section 8 dwelling unit owners. This section would allow PHAs to use technical assistance funds and other means to establish electronic fund transfer systems for rental payments. Landlord participation is optional. Automatic payment systems would assist PHAs in making timely rent payments and thereby encourage owner participation in the Section 8 program.

Section 11. Enhanced Workers. To protect tenants from displacement, in 1999 Congress passed legislation creating “enhanced vouchers” for all tenants facing conversion of a project from project-based Section 8 to market-rate housing. In several respects, the law as passed and interpreted by HUD fails to clearly protect tenants as Congress intended. Some PHAs require existing tenants to go through an application process for enhanced vouchers, which occasionally results in a tenant being denied voucher benefits. To protect tenants, this section amends the existing statute to clarify that tenants cannot be required to go through the application process again to receive an enhanced voucher.

“Empty nesters,” elderly tenants whose household members have either moved or died, sometimes reside in units that are too large for their current family size under normal program and occupancy requirements. Likewise, growing families may reside in units that are too small under normal program and occupancy requirements. In both situations, these tenants could be displaced due to family/unit size mismatches. This section clarifies the current enhanced voucher statute to allow tenants with family size/unit mismatches to remain in the unit until an appropriately sized unit becomes available in the property.

S. 2722. A bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 to ensure the proper tax treatment of executives compensation, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. Madam President, the corporate accounting scandals that have unfolded over the previous few months have caused incalculable damage to the American economy. Millions of people have been harmed, among them some of our most vulnerable citizens, including retirees on fixed incomes and families who have saved for years to educate their children or finally buy a home. Loss of confidence threatens our economy and diminishes hope for the millions who have lost their jobs in the last 18 months. And the cost of equity is rising, making it more difficult for the vast majority of honest and energetic entrepreneurs to turn their ideas into economic growth.

This is not a bubble bursting; it is, in great measure, the result of a considerable diminution of regulation at the behest of powerful lobbies, over the objections of many people.

Today, the Senate is debating the most effective way to restore balance between entrepreneurship and oversight, to ensure that corporate excesses do not again steal the savings of millions of people. The underlying Senate bill is based on accounting reforms and tougher enforcement. The Finance Committee is about to mark up its own bill dealing with diversification requirements, executive compensation, and notification and disclosure regarding 401(k) plans.

I fully support Senator SARBANES' bill and will support the Finance Committee proposal as well. And today I propose legislation that will complement my colleagues' efforts and help us move toward our goal of restoring confidence in American business and American businesspeople. Where legislation already under consideration focuses largely on oversight and punishment—two critical sides of the triangle—my bill attacks the incentives to cut corners or commit crimes in the arena of executive compensation.

This legislation will protect workers and shareholders as Congress carefully sorts through the appropriate measures.

Currently, Federal regulations permit a number of frankly sleazy accounting practices which allow corporations and their executives to take millions of dollars away from shareholders, creditors, and the Treasury, without any penalty at all. Some of the most obvious abuses aren't even crimes. My proposal will help to stop white collar crime before it is committed, by taking the common sense step of putting the lid on the cookie jar.

This bill will do four things: 1. Right now, corporations may transfer funds to an executive's deferred compensation account, giving that executive certain access to the money but potentially also removing it from the reach of shareholders and creditors. But since it is termed “deferred,” the executive pays no taxes. Currently, Section 132 of the Revenue Code prevents regulators from cracking down on this practice. My legislation gives Treasury the authority to examine the constructive receipt doctrine and close loopholes that allow inappropriate deferral of taxation. It also gives Treasury the authority to act on situations where executive assets are supposedly subject to the claims of an employer's creditors, but in reality, are protected from legitimate claims. Either the individual must pay income tax, or the funds must be corporate assets subject to claims. They can't have it both ways.

2. Currently, corporations can give their senior executives massive loans, with no real expectation of repayment. These loans are effectively theft from the employees and shareholders, since they represent revenue given in compensation which will never be repaid, reinvested, or distributed as dividends. And they are theft from the Treasury as well; since they are accounted as loans, the recipient doesn't pay taxes on them. It's a tax-free performance bonus, often given—as we saw in the Adelphi and WorldCom cases—when the executive deserves more to be fired than to be paid. My legislation will make sure a loan is a loan: if a loan doesn't require security or have any enforceable repayment schedule, it's income and it will be taxed, just like the salaries of rank-and-file workers are taxed.

3. Right now, company employees may be unable to sell their stock while executives are dumping theirs and creating—as analysts take note and supply overwhelms demand—the kind of stock-price death spiral that took the life savings of thousands of Enron employees.

Back in the early 1980's, Congress responded to the trend of corporations providing their executives with “gold parachutes” with a 20 percent excise tax on those payments. I believe that the excise tax on golden parachutes should also be applied to the sales of corporate stock by corporate executives during periods when regular employees of the company are not able to freely sell their stock in their company retirement plans. This would be a temporary, six-month provision, to deter corporate executives from taking advantage of the existing uncertainty as Congress considers other possible reforms to encourage more equitable treatment of rank-and-file employees and corporate executives. And it will be a bridge from the current structure to one in which employees have the same ability to sell their stock as insiders have.

4. Additionally, my bill will prevent corporate executives from getting a free ride when their corporation moves offshore for tax avoidance purposes. Under current law, if an American corporation dissolves and is then reincorporated in a foreign country, shareholders of the corporation are required to pay capital gains on the “exchange” of their stock in the “old corporation” for stock in the “new corporation,” even though they never actually sell their stock. Meanwhile, corporate executives, who have engineered the move offshore, are under no such obligation regarding stock options they receive as compensation. My bill would require executives to pay capital gains taxes on the "exchange" of their stock options when they move offshore to avoid taxation. I believe this provision will provide a much-needed disincentive to corporate executives seeking to avoid the reach of the IRS through corporate expatriation.

I agree with all those who would increase oversight and penalties, but I say, let's also look at first causes—the executive compensation funds. That's where some of the greatest opportunities for inappropriate, unfair, and unethical practices are—practices that disadvantage average workers and investors and are undermining confidence in America's capital markets. And it's time for that to change.

Finally, I am appalled at the problem of executives benefitting from what can only be considered excessive compensation arrangements in the waning days before bankruptcy of a failing corporation. I am looking for a way to prevent those arrangements in the final months before a corporation closes, and I hope to have a proposal ready for introduction soon.

By Mr. LEAHY:

S. 2723. A bill to provide transitional housing assistance for victims of domestic violence; to the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs.

Mr. LEAHY. Madam President, I am pleased to introduce the Transitional Housing Assistance for Victims of Domestic Violence Act of 2002 to provide grants for transitional housing and related services to people fleeing domestic violence situations.

I witnessed the devastating effects of domestic violence early in my career as the Vermont State's Attorney for Chittenden County. Today, a growing number of homeless individuals are women and children fleeing domestic violence. More than half the cities surveyed by the U.S. Conference of Mayors in 2000 cited domestic violence as a primary cause of homelessness. Shelters offer short-term assistance, but are overcrowded and unable to provide the support needed. Transitional housing allows women to bridge the gap between leaving a domestic violence situation and becoming fully self-sufficient.

A transitional housing grant program was last authorized for only one year as part of the reauthorization of the Violence Against Women Act in 2000. This program would have been administered through the Department of Health and Human Services and provided $25 million in FY2001. Unfortunately, funds were never appropriated for the program, and the authorization has now expired.

The grant program established in the bill I am introducing today would be administered through the Department of Justice, in consultation with the Departments of Health and Human Services and Housing and Urban Development. This program would have the benefit of a wide range of expertise in the three departments, and has enormous potential to improve people's lives.

This new grant program will make a big impact, in many areas of the country, availability of affordable housing is at an all-time low. There are many dedicated people working to provide victims of domestic violence with resources, such as Rose Pulliam of the Vermont Network Against Domestic Violence and Sexual Assault, but they can not work alone. We should all be concerned with providing victims of domestic violence a safe place to gain the skills and stability needed to make the transition to independence. This is an important component of reducing and preventing crimes that take place in domestic situations, ranging from assault and child abuse to homicide, and helping the victims of these crimes. I urge the Senate to take prompt action on this legislation.

By Mrs. FEINSTEIN (for herself, Mr. FITZGERALD, Mr. HARKIN, Mr. LUGAR, Ms. CANTWELL, Mr. WYDEN, Mr. CORZINE, Mr. LEAHY, Mrs. BOXER, Mr. DURBIN, and Mr. NELSON of Nebraska):

S. 2724. A bill to provide regulatory oversight over energy trading markets and metals trading markets, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry.

Mrs. FEINSTEIN. Madam President, I am very pleased to introduce this bill today along the Senator HARKIN and Senator LUGAR, chairman and ranking member of the Senate Agriculture Committee. Our bill is already co-sponsored by Senators FITZGERALD, CANTWELL, WYDEN, CORZINE, LEAHY, DURBIN, and BOXER.

The Senate Agriculture Committee held a hearing on this bill yesterday and I understand it is the intentions of the chairman and ranking member to try and have a bill that can be marked up before the recess.

The bill closes the loophole that was created when Congress passed the Commodity Futures Modernization Act in 2000 which exempted on-line energy and metals trading from regulatory oversight.

The bill is supported by: The New York Mercantile Exchange, The Pacific Exchange, Aquila Energy Corporation, Cambridge Energy Research Associates, Mid-America Energy Holding Company, Pacific Gas and Electric, Southern California Edison, Calpine, The Apache Corporation, The American Public Gas Association, The American Public Power Association, The Texas Independent Producers and Royalty Association, The California Municipal Utilities Association, The Consumers Union, The Consumer Federation of America, The Derivatives Study Center, The National Rural Electric Cooperative Association U.S. PIRG, The Transmission Access Policy Study Group, The Sierra Club, and all four FERC Commissioners.

This bill could not be more timely in light of what we have learned about the energy sector in the past couple of months and the operations of these energy companies: 1. CMS Energy admitted that 80 percent of its trades were round trip or wash trades and were made simply to increase volume; 2. Reliant admitted to $6.4 billion in wash trades from 1999–2001 which the company characterized as energy swaps; 3. Duke confessed to $2 billion in wash trades and stated that $650 million of these trades were executed on the Inter-Continental Exchange, ICE, and electronic trading facility exempt from CFTC oversight because of the Commodity Futures Modernization Act.

But electronic exchanges like ICE have no responsibility for trades or wash trades executed on its exchange and does not even have any responsibility for checking that a transaction has been executed. Thus, a company that wanted to manipulate prices or game the market would not have to even execute a single trade.

In the past year, 12 of the largest energy companies in the U.S. have lost about $188 billion of capital, accounting for 71 percent of the market value. The credit ratings of several of those energy companies have been severely downgraded; some are at junk bond or near-junk bond status.

In May, 2000, a severe energy crisis began in California. Electricity that had typically sold for about $30 a Megawatt hour all of a sudden started selling for 10 times that. This led to the bankruptcy of California's largest utility and the near-bankruptcy of California's second largest utility. It also resulted in overcharges of billions of dollars to California ratepayers and taxpayers.

In November, California encountered a natural gas crisis. Natural gas is the main cost component of electricity. At one point gas was selling for $12 per decatherm in San Juan New Mexico and $59 in Southern California when the cost to transport it was less than one dollar.

Just about the time Congress passed the Commodity Futures Modernization Act exempting electronic energy trading exchanges from oversight, the crisis began spreading to the other western states. For more than six months Oregon, Washington, and the other Western States experienced the same price spikes as California.

The entire crisis lasted for more than a year while energy companies like Reliant, Enron, Duke, Williams, and AES enjoyed record revenues and profits. Obviously we are all a bit wiser today about energy markets and about wash trades in particular.

Wash trades or round trip trades involve two or more companies plotting together to execute offsetting trades. These trades would be illegal if they were done on NYMEX, the Chicago Merc, or the Pacific Exchange and those exchanges would have the responsibility to report it.

However, there is no such reporting or enforcement requirement on electronic exchanges because as I said before, the CFMA created a big loophole. This legislation would ensure that wash trades are subject to full CFTC oversight no matter where they are done.

And of course there is Enron which controlled a large share of the energy market while they engaged in activities that were downright illegal. Many of these activities could have been prevented or at least stopped if regulators simply had the proper authority and the will.

Let me recap what happened with the Commodity Futures Modernization Act. In November, 1999, the SEC, the Federal Reserve, the CFTC and the Department of Treasury produced a study titled Over the Counter Derivative Markets and the Commodity Exchange Act, A Report of the President's Working Group on Financial Markets.

It was signed by Federal Reserve Chairman Alan Greenspan, Secretary of Treasury Larry Summers, SEC Chairman Arthur Levitt and CFTC Chairman Bill Rainer.

The report said that the case had not been made that energy or other tangible commodities should be exempted from CFTC oversight. The report found that because of the immaturity of the energy market, the lack of liquidity in the market and finite supplies, in energy markets, energy markets were more susceptible to manipulation than the deep and liquid financial markets.

Recent history has certainly borne that to be correct; these commodities are more subject to manipulation!

On June 21, 2000 shortly after the President's Working Group issued its report, the Banking Committee and Agriculture Committee held a hearing on the Report and the Commodity Futures Modernization Act.

Let me read from that committee report:

The Commission has reservations about the bill's exclusions of Over the Counter (OTC) derivatives from the Commodities Exchange Act. On this point the bill diverges from the recommendations of the President's Working Group, which limited the proposed exclusions to financial derivatives. The Commission believes the distinction drawn by the Working Group between financial (non-tangible) and non-financial transactions was a sound one and respectfully urges the Committees to give weight to that distinction.

And the Senate Agriculture Committee marked up the Commodity Futures Modernization Act consistent with what was in the President's Working Group Report.

That version of the bill however, was not reflected in the final provision that passed Congress as part of a much bigger bill at the end of the 106th Congress.

I urge my colleagues in Congress to pass this legislation and fix this problem as soon as possible.

(C) whether generally accepted accounting principles or the rules of the Commission result in financial statements of issuers reflecting the economics of such transactions to investors in a transparent fashion;

(D) whether generally accepted accounting principles specifically result in the consolidation of special purpose entities sponsored by an issuer in cases in which the issuer has the majority of the risks and rewards of the special purpose entity; and

(E) the recommendations of the Commission for improving the transparency and quality of reporting off-balance sheet transactions in the financial statements and disclosures required to be filed by an issuer with the Commission.

SA 4231. Mr. SCHUMER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill S. 2673, to improve quality and transparency in financial reporting and independent audits and accounting services for public companies, to create a Public Company Accounting Oversight Board, to enhance the standard setting process for accounting practices, to strengthen the independence of firms that audit public companies, to increase corporate responsibility and the usefulness of corporate financial disclosure, to protect the objectivity and independence of securities analysts, to improve Securities and Exchange Commission resources and oversight, and for other purposes; which was ordered to lie on the table; as follows:

On page 91, between lines 18 and 19, insert the following:

(c) STUDY AND REPORT ON SPECIAL PURPOSE ENTITIES.—

(1) STUDY REQUIRED.—The Commission shall, not later than 1 year after the effective date of adoption of off-balance sheet disclosure rules required by section 13(j) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, as added by this section, complete a study of filings by issuers and their disclosures, to determine—

(A) the extent of off-balance sheet transactions, including assets, liabilities, leases, losses, and the use of special purpose entities; and

(B) whether generally accepted accounting rules result in financial statements of issuers reflecting the economics of such off-balance sheet transactions to investors in a transparent fashion.

(2) REPORT.—Not later than 6 months after the date of completion of the study required by paragraph (1), the Commission shall submit a report to the President, the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs of the Senate, and the Committee on Financial Services of the House of Representatives, setting forth—

(A) the amount or an estimate of the amount of off-balance sheet transactions, including assets, liabilities, leases, and losses of, and the use of special purpose entities by, issuers filing periodic reports pursuant to section 13 or 15 of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934;

(B) the extent to which special purpose entities are used to facilitate off-balance sheet transactions;

(C) whether generally accepted accounting principles or the rules of the Commission result in financial statements of issuers reflecting the economics of such transactions to investors in a transparent fashion; and

(D) whether generally accepted accounting principles specifically result in the consolidation of special purpose entities sponsored by an issuer in cases in which the issuer has the majority of the risks and rewards of the special purpose entity.

(3) RULES.—If the Commission reports under paragraph (2) that such special purpose entities are not generally consolidated by the issuer having the majority of the risks and rewards of the assets, liabilities, leases, and losses of the special purpose entity, the Commission shall, not later than 12 months after the date of submission of the report, adopt rules or regulations to require consolidation of such entities by the sponsoring issuer.

SA 4232. SEC. ____ DISCLOSURE OF INVESTMENTS, HOLDINGS, OR TRANSACTIONS IN CERTAIN FOREIGN COUNTRIES.

(a) SECURITIES EXCHANGE ACT OF 1934.—Section 13 of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 (15 U.S.C. 78m) is amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

“(i) DISCLOSURE OF INVESTMENTS, HOLDINGS, OR TRANSACTIONS IN OR WITH CERTAIN FOREIGN ENTITIES.—

“(1) IN GENERAL.—Each designated issuer shall, in accordance with such rules and regulations as the Commission may prescribe as necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors—

“(A) disclose in each report or other document required to be filed under this section, including all annual filings, and in each registration statement required under section 14, the nature and scope of the operations of the designated issuer in or with any designated entity, and the Commission shall consider material, any investments, holdings, or transactions by a designated issuer in or with any designated entity that, in the aggregate, exceed $100,000 at any time during the period to which the filing relates; and

“(B) display all disclosures required by subparagraph (A) prominently for investors.

“(2) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this subsection—

“(A) the term ‘designated entity’ means any company or other entity that is organized under the laws of a foreign country, a government-owned corporation of a foreign country, or the government of any foreign country—

“(i) that is subject to sanctions by the Office of Foreign Assets Control; or

“(ii) the government of which has been determined by the Secretary of State under section 6(j)(1)(A) of the Export Administration Act of 1979, section 40(d) of the Arms Export Control Act, or section 620A of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961, to have knowingly provided support for acts of international terrorism; and

“(B) the term ‘designated issuer’—

“(i) means any issuer of a security registered pursuant to section 12, or the securities of which (including American Depository Receipts) are directly or indirectly listed for trading or sold on any national securities exchange or in any United States over-the-counter market; and

“(ii) includes any subsidiary or other affiliate of such an issuer.”

(b) SECURITIES ACT OF 1933.—Section 10 of the Securities Act of 1933 (15 U.S.C. 77j) is amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

“(g) DISCLOSURE OF INVESTMENTS, HOLDINGS, OR TRANSACTIONS IN OR WITH CERTAIN FOREIGN ENTITIES.—

“(1) IN GENERAL.—Each designated issuer shall, in accordance with such rules and regulations as the Commission may prescribe as necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors—

“(A) disclose in each prospectus required or permitted under this section, the nature and scope of the operations of the designated issuer in or with any designated entity, and the Commission shall consider material, any investments, holdings, or transactions by a designated issuer in or with any designated entity that, in the aggregate, exceed $100,000 at any time during the 6-month period preceding the date of issuance of the prospectus; and

“(B) display all disclosures required by subparagraph (A) prominently for investors.

“(2) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this subsection—

“(A) the term ‘designated entity’ means any company or other entity that is organized under the laws of a foreign country, a government-owned corporation of a foreign country, or the government of any foreign country—

“(i) that is subject to sanctions by the Office of Foreign Assets Control; or

“(ii) the government of which has been determined by the Secretary of State under section 6(j)(1)(A) of the Export Administration Act of 1979, section 40(d) of the Arms Export Control Act, or section 620A of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961, to have knowingly provided support for acts of international terrorism; and

“(B) the term ‘designated issuer’—

“(i) means any issuer of a security registered pursuant to section 12 of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, or the securities of which (including American Depository Receipts) are directly or indirectly listed for trading or sold on any national securities exchange or in any United States over-the-counter market; and

“(ii) includes any subsidiary or other affiliate of such an issuer.”

(c) ANNUAL REPORT ON INVESTMENTS, HOLDINGS, OR TRANSACTIONS IN OR WITH CERTAIN FOREIGN ENTITIES.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary of Defense, in coordination with the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of State, the Director of Central Intelligence, and any other departments or agencies that the Secretary of Defense determines appropriate, shall submit a report to Congress on an annual basis, regarding—

(A) whether material investments, holdings, or transactions by designated issuers in or with any designated entities have provided during the preceding year, or are providing, financial or technical support for any terrorist-sponsoring government, or terrorist-sponsoring group or organization, in the form of revenues, equipment, technology, or by other means; and

(B) the impact of such types of support on the regional and global security interests of the United States.

(2) FORM OF REPORTS.—Each report under paragraph (1) shall be submitted in unclassified form, but may include a classified annex.

(3) DEFINITIONS.—In this subsection—

(A) the terms “designated entity”, and “designated issuer” have the same meanings as in section 13(i) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, as added by this section; and

(B) the term “terrorist-sponsoring government” means the government of a foreign country—

(i) that is subject to sanctions by the Office of Foreign Assets Control; or

(ii) that has been determined by the Secretary of State under section 6(j)(1)(A) of the Export Administration Act of 1979, section 40(d) of the Arms Export Control Act, or section 620A of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961, to have knowingly provided support for acts of international terrorism.

SEC. ____ . LIABILITY FOR BREACH OF FIDUCIARY DUTY.

(a) LIABILITY FOR PARTICIPATING IN OR CONCEALING FIDUCIARY BREACH.—

(1) APPLICATION TO PARTICIPANTS AND BENEFICIARIES OF 401(K) PLANS.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—Part 4 of subtitle B of title I of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 (29 U.S.C. 1101 et seq.) is amended by adding after section 409 the following new section:

“SEC. 409A. LIABILITY FOR BREACH OF FIDUCIARY DUTY IN 401(K) PLANS.

“(a)(1)(A) Any person who is a fiduciary with respect to an individual account plan that includes a qualified cash or deferred arrangement under section 401(k) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 who breaches any of the responsibilities, obligations, or duties imposed upon fiduciaries by this title shall be personally liable to make good to each participant's and beneficiary's individual account in the plan (or directly to such participant or beneficiary in the absence of an individual account) any losses to the participant's or beneficiary's individual account in the plan resulting from each such breach, and to restore to the participant's or beneficiary's individual account in the plan (or directly to such participant or beneficiary in the absence of an individual account) any profits of such fiduciary which have been made through use of assets of the plan by the fiduciary, and shall be subject to such other equitable or remedial relief as the court may deem appropriate, including removal of such fiduciary. A fiduciary may also be removed for a violation of section 411 of this Act.

“(B) If an insider (as defined in section 409(b)(1)(B)) with respect to the plan sponsor of an employer individual account plan that holds employer securities that are readily tradable on an established securities market—such insider shall be personally liable under this subparagraph to each participant's and beneficiary's individual account in the plan (or directly to such participant or beneficiary in the absence of an individual account) for such breach in the same manner as the fiduciary who commits such breach.

“(i) knowingly participates in a breach of fiduciary responsibility to which subparagraph (A) applies, or

“(ii) knowingly undertakes to conceal such a breach,

“(2) Nothing in this subsection shall be construed as permitting the recovery by a participant or beneficiary of any consequential or punitive damages.

“(b) The right of participants and beneficiaries under subsection (a) to sue for breach of fiduciary duty with respect to an individual account plan that includes a qualified cash or deferred arrangement under section 401(k) of such Code shall be in addition to all existing rights that participants and beneficiaries have under section 409, section 502, and any other provision of this title, and shall not be construed to give rise to any inference that such rights do not already exist under section 409, section 502, or any other provision of this title.

“(c) No fiduciary shall be liable with respect to a breach of fiduciary duty under this title if such breach was committed before he or she became a fiduciary or after he or she ceased to be a fiduciary, unless such liability arises under subsection (a)(1)(B).”

(B) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—The table of contents for part 4 of subtitle B of title I of such Act is amended by inserting the following new item after the item relating to section 409:

(2) INSIDER LIABILITY.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—Section 409 of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 (29 U.S.C. 1109) is amended by redesignating subsection (b) as subsection (c) and by inserting after subsection (a) the following new subsection:

“(b)(1)(A) If an insider with respect to the plan sponsor of an employer individual account plan that holds employer securities that are readily tradable on an established securities market—

“(i) knowingly participates in a breach of fiduciary responsibility to which subsection (a) applies, or

“(ii) knowingly undertakes to conceal such a breach,

such insider shall be personally liable under this subsection to the plan or to any participant or beneficiary of the plan for such breach in the same manner as the fiduciary who commits such breach.

“(B) For purposes of subparagraph (A), the term ‘insider’ means, with respect to any plan sponsor of a plan to which subparagraph (A) applies—

“(i) any officer or director with respect to the plan sponsor, or “(ii) any independent qualified public accountant of the plan or of the plan sponsor.

“(2) Any relief provided under this subsection or section 409A—

“(A) to an individual account plan shall inure to the individual accounts of the affected participants or beneficiaries, and

“(B) to a participant or beneficiary shall be payable to the participant's or beneficiary's individual account in the plan (or directly to such participant or beneficiary in the absence of an individual account).”

(B) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—Section 409(c) of such Act (29 U.S.C. 1109(c)), as redesignated by subparagraph (A), is amended by inserting before the period the following: “, unless such liability arises under subsection (b)”.

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE; PLAN AMENDMENTS.—

(1) GENERAL EFFECTIVE DATE.—Except as otherwise provided in this section, the amendments made by this section shall apply with respect to plan years beginning on or after January 1, 2003.

(2) SPECIAL RULE FOR COLLECTIVELY BARGAINED PLANS.—In the case of a plan maintained pursuant to 1 or more collective bargaining agreements between employee representatives and 1 or more employers ratified on or before the date of the enactment of this Act, paragraph (1) shall be applied to benefits pursuant to, and individuals covered by, any such agreement by substituting for

"January 1, 2003" the date of the commencement of the first plan year beginning on or after the earlier of—

(A) the later of—
 (i) January 1, 2004, or
 (ii) the date on which the last of such collective bargaining agreements terminates (determined without regard to any extension thereof after the date of the enactment of this Act), or
 (B) January 1, 2005.

(3) PLAN AMENDMENTS.—If any amendment made by this section requires an amendment to any plan, such plan amendment shall not be required to be made before the first plan year beginning on or after January 1, 2005, if—

(A) during the period after such amendment made by this section takes effect and before such first plan year, the plan is operated in good faith compliance with the requirements of such amendment made by this section, and

(B) such plan amendment applies retroactively to the period after such amendment made by this section takes effect and before such first plan year.

“(B) DE MINIMUS EXCEPTION.—The preapproval requirement under subparagraph (A) is waived with respect to the provision of non-audit services for an issuer, if—

“(i) the aggregate amount of all such non-audit services provided to the issuer constitutes not more than 5 percent of the total amount of revenues paid by the issuer to its auditor;

“(ii) such services were not recognized by the issuer at the time of the engagement to be non-audit services; and

“(iii) such services are promptly brought to the attention of the audit committee of the issuer and approved by the audit committee prior to the completion of the audit, by 1 or more members of the audit committee who are members of the board of directors to whom authority to grant such approvals has been delegated by the audit committee.

“(2) DISCLOSURE TO INVESTORS.—Policies and procedures for approval by an audit committee of an issuer under this subsection of a non-audit service to be performed by the auditor of the issuer shall be disclosed to investors in periodic reports required by section 13(a).

“(3) DELEGATION AUTHORITY.—The audit committee of an issuer may delegate to 1 or more designated members of the audit committee who are independent directors of the board of directors, the authority to grant preapprovals required by this subsection. The decisions of any member to whom authority is delegated under this paragraph to preapprove an activity under this subsection shall be presented to the full audit committee at each of its scheduled meetings.”.

SEC. 608. AUTHORITY TO OBTAIN FINANCIAL RECORDS.

Section 21(h) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 (15 U.S.C. 78u(h)) is amended—

(1) by striking paragraphs (2) through (8);

(2) in paragraph (9), by striking "(9)(A)" and all that follows through "(B) The" and inserting "(3) The";

(3) by inserting after paragraph (1), the following:

"(2) ACCESS TO FINANCIAL RECORDS.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—Notwithstanding section 1105 or 1107 of the Right to Financial Privacy Act of 1978, the Commission may obtain access to and copies of, or the information contained in, financial records of any person held by a financial institution, including the financial records of a customer, without notice to that person, when it acts pursuant to a subpoena authorized by a formal order of investigation of the Commission and issued under the securities laws or pursuant to an administrative or judicial subpoena issued in a proceeding or action to enforce the securities laws.

"(B) NONDISCLOSURE OF REQUESTS.—If the Commission so directs in its subpoena, no financial institution, or officer, director, partner, employee, shareholder, representative or agent of such financial institution, shall, directly or indirectly, disclose that records have been requested or provided in accordance with subparagraph (A), if the Commission finds reason to believe that such disclosure may—

"(i) result in the transfer of assets or records outside the territorial limits of the United States;

"(ii) result in improper conversion of investor assets;

"(iii) impede the ability of the Commission to identify, trace, or freeze funds involved in any securities transaction;

"(iv) endanger the life or physical safety of an individual;

"(v) result in flight from prosecution;

"(vi) result in destruction of or tampering with evidence;

"(vii) result in intimidation of potential witnesses; or

"(viii) otherwise seriously jeopardize an investigation or unduly delay a trial.";

(4) by striking paragraph (10); and

(5) by redesignating paragraphs (11), (12), and (13) as paragraphs (4), (5), and (6), respectively.

table, all with no intervening action or debate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. ENZI. Madam President, this has not been cleared on our side, so I have to object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

REMOVAL OF INJUNCTION OF SECRECY—TREATY DOCUMENTS NUMBERED 107-9, 107-10, AND 107-11

Mr. REID. Madam President, as in executive session, I ask unanimous consent that the injunction of secrecy be removed from the following treaty, agreement, and protocol transmitted to the Senate on July 11, 2002, by the President of the United States:

Treaty with Ireland on Mutual Legal Assistance in Criminal Matters—Treaty Document No. 107-9;

Agreement with Russian Federation concerning Polar Bear Population—Treaty Document No. 107-10;

Second Protocol Amending the Extradition Treaty with Canada—Treaty Document No. 107-11.

I further ask that the treaty, agreement, and protocol be considered as having been read the first time; that they be referred, with accompanying papers, to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed; and that the President's messages be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

To the Senate of the United States:

With a view to receiving the advice and consent of the Senate to ratification, I transmit herewith the Agreement between the Government of the United States of America and the Government of Ireland on Mutual Legal Assistance in Criminal Matters, signed at Washington on January 18, 2001. I transmit also, for the information of the Senate, the report of the Department of State with respect to the Treaty.

The Treaty is one of a series of modern mutual legal assistance treaties being negotiated by the United States in order to counter criminal activities more effectively. The Treaty should be an effective tool to assist in the prosecution of a wide variety of crimes, including terrorism, drug trafficking, fraud, and other white-collar offenses. The Treaty is self-executing.

The Treaty provides for a broad range of cooperation in criminal matters. Mutual assistance available under the Treaty includes: taking the testimony or statements of persons; providing documents, records, and articles of evidence; locating or identifying persons; serving documents; transferring persons in custody for testimony or other purposes; executing requests for searches and seizures; identifying, tracing, freezing, seizing, and forfeiting the proceeds and instrumentalities of crime and assistance in related proceedings; and such other assistance as may be agreed.

I recommend that the Senate give early and favorable consideration to the Treaty and give its advice and consent to ratification.

GEORGE W. BUSH.
THE WHITE HOUSE, July 11, 2002.

To the Senate of the United States:

With a view to receiving the advice and consent of the Senate to ratification, I transmit herewith the Agreement between the Government of the United States of America and the Government of the Russian Federation on the Conservation and Management of the Alaska-Chukotka Polar Bear Population done at Washington on October 16, 2000 (the "U.S.-Russia Agreement"). I also transmit, for the information of the Senate, the report of the Department of State with respect to that Agreement.

The U.S.-Russia Agreement provides legal protections for this population of polar bears in addition to those found in the Agreement on the Conservation of Polar Bears done at Oslo, November 13, 1973 (the "1973 Agreement"), which was a significant, early step in the international conservation of polar bears. The 1973 Agreement is a multilateral treaty to which the United States and Russia are parties. (The other parties are Norway, Canada, and Denmark.) The 1973 Agreement provides authority for the maintenance of a subsistence harvest of polar bears and provides for habitat conservation.

The proposed U.S.-Russia Agreement, which would operate as a free-standing treaty separate from the 1973 Agreement, is the culmination of an 8-year effort. The U.S.-Russia Agreement builds on the 1973 Agreement to establish a common legal, scientific, and administrative framework for the conservation and management of the Alaska-Chukotka polar bear population, which is shared by the United States and the Russian Federation. For example, the U.S.-Russia Agreement provides a definition of "sustainable harvest" that will help the United States and Russia to implement polar bear conservation measures while safeguarding the interests of native people. In addition, the U.S.-Russia Agreement establishes the U.S.-Russia Polar Bear Commission, which would function as the bilateral managing authority to make scientific determinations, establish taking limits, and carry out other responsibilities under the terms of the U.S.-Russia Agreement. The proposed U.S.-Russia Agreement would strengthen the conservation of our shared polar bear population through a coordinated sustainable harvest management program.

Early ratification of the U.S.-Russia Agreement by the United States will reinforce our leadership role in international conservation of marine mammals and will encourage similar conservation action by other countries. I recommend that the Senate give early and favorable consideration to this Agreement and give its advice and consent to ratification.

GEORGE W. BUSH.
THE WHITE HOUSE, July 11, 2002.

To the Senate of the United States:

With a view to receiving the advice and consent of the Senate to ratification, I transmit herewith the Second Protocol Amending the Treaty on Extradition Between the Government of the United States of America and the Government of Canada, as amended, signed at Ottawa on January 12, 2001. In addition, I transmit, for the information of the Senate, the report of the Department of State with respect to the Second Protocol. As the report explains, the Second Protocol will not require implementing legislation.

The Second Protocol amends the Extradition Treaty Between the United States of America and Canada, signed at Washington on December 3, 1971, as amended by an Exchange of Notes of June 28 and July 9, 1974, and by a Protocol signed at Ottawa on January 11, 1988.

The Second Protocol, upon entry into force, will enhance cooperation between the law enforcement communities of both nations. The Second Protocol incorporates into the U.S.-Canada Extradition Treaty a provision on temporary surrender of persons that is a standard provision in more recent U.S. bilateral extradition treaties. It also provides for new authentication requirements for documentary evidence, which should streamline the processing of extradition requests.

I recommend that the Senate give early and favorable consideration to the Second Protocol and give its advice and consent to ratification.

GEORGE W. BUSH.
THE WHITE HOUSE, July 11, 2002.

MEASURE READ THE FIRST TIME—H.R. 4635

Mr. REID. Madam President, it is my understanding that H.R. 4635 is at the desk, and I now ask for its first reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read the title of the bill for the first time.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (H.R. 4635) to amend title 49, United States Code, to establish a program for Federal flight deck officers, and for other purposes.

Mr. REID. Madam President, I now ask for its second reading, but I object to my own request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will receive its second reading on the next legislative day.

MEASURE READ THE FIRST TIME—H.R. 5017

Mr. REID. Madam President, I understand H.R. 5017 is at the desk, and I ask for its first reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read the title of the bill for the first time.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (H.R. 5017) to amend the Temporary Emergency Wildfire Suppression Act to facilitate the ability of the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of Agriculture to enter into reciprocal agreements with foreign countries for the sharing of personnel to fight wildfires.

Mr. REID. Madam President, I now ask for its second reading, but I object to my own request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will receive its second reading on the next legislative day.

ORDER FOR RECESS

Mr. REID. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that following the remarks of Senator SHELBY, the Senate stand in recess under the order previously entered by the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. REID. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. SHELBY. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

SECURITIES FRAUD

Mr. SHELBY. Madam President, over the course of the last 6 months, the longstanding, systemic fraudulent activities of numerous corporations have been exposed in America and around the world. This fraud has cost American investors massive amounts, perhaps hundreds of billions of dollars, perhaps more. Beyond the tangible losses, investor confidence in the integrity of our capital markets has also taken a tremendous hit, as the Presiding Officer knows.

As we move forward to address the shortcomings in the oversight of our financial markets, we must carefully consider the true impact of what has occurred. Thousands of people have lost billions of dollars. Thousands of people have lost jobs. Millions of people have lost or are losing faith in our capital markets every day.

The fact is, none of this is made any easier because of the manner in which this has happened. Americans don't feel better because the mugging took place in the boardroom rather than the back alley. In many ways, what has happened is even worse. Because of the sheer size and number of participants in our markets, the corporate scams have been much more efficient and much more effective than the average boiler room fraud.

The bottom line is this: Real people are facing tremendous losses, and confidence in our system is eroding.

I believe we must address this situation with concrete measures. Fraud, even if committed by white-collar individuals—indeed, especially if committed by white-collar individuals—needs to be severely punished with criminal sanctions.

I commend the efforts to create new, tough penalties for people who commit fraud through our securities markets. I supported that, as most of the people in the Senate did.

Additionally, I believe there is more that we can do to stop or slow down the kinds of conduct that lead to situations where investing Americans are swindled out of hundreds of billions of dollars. The fact is, in one key area, the appropriate disincentives for participating in securities fraud are just not in place today.

Since 1994, after the Supreme Court ruling in the Central Bank case, there has been no liability for secondary actors who aid and abet securities fraud in America. Think about that. Since 1994, there has been no liability for secondary actors who aid and abet securities fraud. In effect, the decision in the Central Bank case led to legions of accountants, lawyers, and other security specialists who play a vital yet behind-the-scenes role in securities transactions, off the hook for down-the-line fraud in the sale of securities.

Think of it like this: The guys who procure the getaway car before the robbery, tune it up, fill it up with gas, put air in the tires, and sometimes even drive it away, face no financial liability for their involvement.

Does that make any sense? Not to me. I believe not to the majority of the Senate, if we could get a vote on the Shelby-Durbin amendment. And we will someday because this is not an issue that is going to go away.

When attorneys, accounting firms, and other securities professionals know that assisting securities fraud is nothing to worry about, as it is today, there is no wonder there has been a proliferation of audit failures, restatements, Enrons, Global Crossings, WorldComs, and many more to come. Civil and criminal penalties are important and necessary, but they are not sufficient. They serve a separate but important purpose of punishing fraudulent behavior. But they do nothing to ensure that investors, the victims, have an opportunity to seek financial redress. Civil liability supplements criminal and civil penalties and acts as a further disincentive to engage in or assist fraudulent activities.

Here are a couple of basic questions we all need to answer. Why shouldn't investors—that is, so many million in America—be able to recover losses from aiders and abettors of securities fraud? What public interest do we serve by inoculating aiders and abettors of securities fraud from civil liability? Why should this type of tort, this fraud, not give rise to a civil claim, particularly when the loss to the investor and impact on the markets is so great, as it is today?

Investors are intentionally being defrauded. Yet they have no remedy at the moment to seek monetary redress from those who aid and abet these crimes. Why? The answer is, aiders and abettors play a vital role in allowing primary actors to commit fraud. They should, accordingly, be held proportionately liable for their participation in these fraudulent schemes.

I believe for our capital markets to function properly, it is not sufficient that financial information is accurate. The public must also have full faith and confidence that it is honest, that we have integrity there.

Accountants, lawyers, and other securities professionals perform, by design, a gatekeeping function within our securities markets. It is unacceptable, I believe, that those upon whom so many rely—all of us—those whose activities can literally move markets, are not held to the highest standards. Something is wrong.

Forty years ago, at a time when securities transactions were considerably less sophisticated than they are today, Judge Henry Friendly, a distinguished jurist remarked:

In our complex society, the accountant's certificate and the lawyer's opinion can be instruments for pecuniary loss more potent than the chisel or the crowbar.

Today's staggering shareholder losses demonstrate that over time legal and accounting gimmicks have only grown more potent.

I believe we must create greater disincentives for those who would assist securities fraud. Restoring liability for aiders and abettors of securities fraud should make securities professionals think once, twice, even three times before they put their seal of approval on information sent to the marketplace. Such carefulness will serve investors and our markets well in the future.

Our economy has provided the best material standard of living in the world because our capital markets have traditionally favored clarity over complexity, disclosure over dissembling, and fairness over favoritism. For the sake of future economic growth and prosperity, I believe we must put those principles back into practice.

Senator DURBIN and I are going to continue to pursue our amendment. As I said earlier, this is not going to go away because there are going to be more scheduled. I wish we could have done it on this bill. I yield the floor.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

PAYING TRIBUTE TO TANO VALLE

HON. SCOTT McINNIS

OF COLORADO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 11, 2002

Mr. McINNIS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to pay tribute to Tano Valle, an outstanding member of the Pueblo, Colorado community. Tano has provided the community with quality entertainment and dining for almost sixty years through his restaurant, El Valle. The establishment has become an icon of the Pueblo restaurant community and I am honored to congratulate Tano for his success before this body of Congress, and this nation.

Tano began running the family business in 1937 and provides Pueblo with a terrific dining and entertainment experience. In fact, he now serves the children and grandchildren of his original customers. His menu ranges from Valencia hot dogs to chocolate-stuffed conchas and has hosted some of the biggest acts in the music business, notably Little Richard, Fats Domino, and Gracie Slick. Tano takes immense pride in this family business and I am grateful for his dedication and commitment to excellence in the community.

Mr. Speaker, Tano's dedication to his customers and quality service serves as a model of business excellence in Colorado. He is a well-appreciated and respected member of the Pueblo business community and I am honored to represent him and his family before you today. Thanks for all your hard work Tano, and I wish you all the best in your future endeavors.

CONCERNING RISE IN ANTI-SEMITISM IN EUROPE

SPEECH OF

HON. GIL GUTKNECHT

OF MINNESOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 9, 2002

Mr. GUTKNECHT. Mr. Speaker, while I support the general spirit of H. Res. 393, which condemns the rise of anti-Semitism in Europe, I am concerned that the initial findings might lead to misconceptions regarding our German friends. The citations of anti-Semitic incidents in Germany misrepresent the actual frequency of anti-Semitic activity. Germany has very assertively attacked anti-Semitic trends within its borders. For instance, on June 28, 2002, the German Parliament passed, by unanimous vote, a resolution condemning all aspects of anti-Semitism. Additionally, recent statistics gathered by the German Interior Ministry cited an average of 130 anti-Semitic incidents per month in 2001. Incidents have decreased dramatically thus far in 2002. The Interior Ministry reports 127 anti-Semitic acts in the first three months of 2002, an average of 42 incidents per month; a decrease of 68 percent. I encourage and commend our German colleagues in their continued attention and efforts against anti-Semitism.

ARMED FORCES TAX FAIRNESS ACT (H.R. 5063)

SPEECH OF

HON. EARL POMEROY

OF NORTH DAKOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 9, 2002

Mr. POMEROY. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of the Armed Forces Tax Fairness Act. This bill makes it easier for military families to sell their homes without tax penalty and ensures that death benefits received by families of deceased military personnel are exempt from taxation.

At this time, we should do everything in our power to better the quality of life for our service men and women who are fighting on our behalf. These tax cuts benefit our military families who have committed so much to protecting our freedoms.

This bill makes it easier for military families, like those at Grant Forks and Minot Air Force bases, to sell their homes without incurring capital gains taxes. Currently, a taxpayer can exclude from taxable income up to $250,000 of gain realized from the sale of a home. To qualify for the exemption, the taxpayer must have owned and lived in the home for at least two of the five years prior to the sale. For military personnel who are often deployed for long periods of time, this time requirement poses a real hardship.

This bill suspends the five-year requirement for the capital gains exemption for the time that the service member is serving on extended military duty away from their home. This provision could save service members and their families a capital gains tax hit as much as 20% of the value of their homes.

The legislation also exempts from taxes the full $6,000 death benefit received by families of deceased military personnel and allows for tax-free treatment of future increases in the death gratuity. This change to the tax law furthers our commitment to taking care of military families who lose a service member in the line of fire.

I strongly support this bill and encourage my colleagues to adopt the legislation. We should act together to honor and show our support for the men and women in uniform.

IN HONOR OF JACK CALEGARI DISTINGUISHED LEGIONNAIRE OF THE MISSOURI AMERICAN LEGION

HON. KAREN MCCARTHY

OF MISSOURI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 11, 2002

Ms. MCCARTHY of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to Mr. Jack Calegari, an outstanding individual, Veteran, and public servant from the State of Missouri. Mr. Calegari is known for his gentle manner, warm smile, and his tireless efforts for the betterment of our community and region. His dedication and consistent support to various veterans programs and issues have proven to be a valued resource. It is with great pride that we acknowledge the honor bestowed on him as the Distinguished Legionnaire in the Western Region of Missouri from the R.C. Connie Burns American Legion Post 71.

In the tradition of the American Legion, Jack Calegari has demonstrated the patriotic and philanthropic values throughout his military and civilian careers. On January 28, 1952, Mr. Calegari began his service in the United States Army and performed duties as a valuable cryptographer. He was later stationed in Stuttgart, Germany and quickly made the rank of Corporal. Shortly after his return from overseas, he married Tessa and their family soon expanded to include their son, Jack. Mr. Calegari worked as a television repairman and eventually began employment at Bendix Corporation, which would later evolve into Allied Signal and is currently Honeywell's Kansas City Plant integral to the Department of Energy's manufacturing system.

Mr. Jack Calegari has held every office in Post 71, serving as Post Commander for four terms and as Fifth District Commander in 1997-1999. This noble gentleman and his charming wife, Tessa, have donated much of their time at the Kansas City VA Hospital lifting spirits, helping the Women's Auxiliary wrapping Christmas gifts, and taking pictures around the holidays. As a member of the American Legion's Forty-Eight Club, Honor Society of the American Legion, he volunteered to work on their fund raising bingo project. The proceeds from bingo have furnished four rooms on the 11th floor of the Kansas City VA Medical Center so family members have a place to stay with their critically ill veterans. In addition, the Forty-Eight recently donated a new van with a wheelchair lift to the hospital. At Christmas time you can find Jack volunteering as a Christmas Kettle bell ringer for the Post 71 Salvation Army Bell Ringers.

Jack Calegari is active in many local causes and civic endeavors. He has been a mentor for our youth through his work in programs such as Boys State Program Committee that ensures leadership in future generations. He promotes and has worked with the District Oratorical Program to provide high school students with the opportunity to develop oratory skills while learning and understanding our Constitution. Another important youth project he participates in is the J.R.O.T.C. program at Paseo High School of Performing Arts where he is a beloved figure.

For the past ten years he has served as Chairman of the Cadet Patrol Committee for Missouri. The American Legion sponsors Missouri high school students to attend the Missouri State Highway Patrol Academy. Yearly preparations required six months of Jack's time to organize, market and purchase necessities like uniforms and insurance for the cadets. In an effort to provide the cadets with a college opportunity he partnered with Central Missouri University to insure the availability of two college scholarships. The reward for Jack has been the opportunity to work with the cadets and attend graduation ceremonies. He believes that students obtain an understanding of law enforcement while developing practical lifetime skills.

Mr. Calegari is quite active as President of the Permanent Memorial Day Committee and worked on the KC150 Committee to honor Veterans during Kansas City's celebration of its 150th birthday. Most significantly, Jack was instrumental in a national project very dear to me. We both worked for several years in partnership with community stakeholders to restore and rededicate the Liberty Memorial to honor our World War I veterans. He has been a wonderful resource to me and for my staff.

Jack's legacy lives in the work he has so graciously performed, and in the lives of those he has assisted with kindness and understanding. Jack gives his time and energies to make our community a better place to live.

Mr. Speaker, please join me in saluting Jack Calegari the Western Region's District Legionnaire of 2002 from Missouri's Fifth District.

INTRODUCTION OF THE ALOPECIA FAIRNESS EXPANSION ACT

HON. LYNN N. RIVERS

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 11, 2002

Ms. RIVERS. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to introduce the Alopecia Fairness Expansion Act of 2002.

Last year I introduced the Alopecia Areata Fairness Act, a bill requiring private insurance plans to cover hairpieces for victims of alopecia, a disease causing partial or total hair loss. Today, I am happy to introduce this companion bill requiring that Federal health programs provide coverage of hairpieces for alopecia victims.

Over 4 million Americans suffer from alopecia, some losing small amounts of hair and some all of it. The onset most often begins in childhood, and it can be psychologically devastating. Children with the disease are often teased in school, and adults frequently have trouble in the workplace. Many people with alopecia must purchase hairpieces to keep their jobs or to avoid ostracism. Yet private and public insurance plans often discriminate between people who suffer from alopecia and those losing hair because of cancer or other diseases, refusing to cover alopecia victims.

My first bill, the Alopecia Areata Fairness Act (H.R. 547), would take a critical step toward changing this by requiring insurance companies to cover a hairpiece as a prosthetic device, provided a doctor prescribes it as a medical necessity.

My new bill, the Alopecia Fairness Expansion Act of 2002, would extend this fairness to victims of alopecia who receive medical care through Federal health care programs and who would not be helped by H.R. 547 alone. It would require that Federal health programs cover hairpieces for people suffering from alopecia when prescribed by a doctor as a medical necessity. These programs include Medicare, Medicaid, TRICARE, the State Children's Health Insurance Program (CHIP), the Federal Employees Health Benefits Program (FEHBP), veterans health care programs, and the Indian Health Service (IHS).

We already recognize the difficulties associated with hair loss and provide prosthetic hairpieces to patients who lose their hair due to cancer treatment. Let's do the same for victims of alopecia. I urge my colleagues to join me as cosponsors of this bill.

MOB OWNS FBI IN YOUNGSTOWN

HON. JAMES A. TRAFICANT, JR.

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 11, 2002

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Speaker, the following reflects the truthful and reliable investigation by Congressman JAMES TRAFICANT into the association between the FBI and organized crime (mafia) in Youngstown, Ohio and surrounding areas.

In addition, FBI agent, Anthony Speranza did rape one of my constituents. The matter was adjudicated in the Northern District of Ohio Court of Judge O'Malley, where Speranza admitted to "digital penetration" of a woman who had suffered problems of mental instability, which under Ohio law is felony one rape.

The following facts and sources speak for themselves, making FBI-mob connections in Boston, Massachusetts look like a Rotary meeting.

TRAFICANT INVESTIGATION

5. Fact: Joseph Naples ordered the burning of a car belonging to a Youngstown City Councilman one Robert Spencer; Source: FBI Affidavit and Robert Spencer's Affidavit presented during a U.S. Senate hearing on organized crime (1984); Result: Robert Spencer's car fire bombed and totally destroyed. (1978/1979); Finding: Joseph Naples never brought to trial.

6. Fact: Joseph Naples ordered the burning of the Desert Inn; Source: FBI Affidavit; Result: Desert Inn bar burned; Finding: Joseph Naples never brought to trial.

7. Fact: Joseph Naples ordered numerous other arsons and bombings; source: FBI Affidavit; Result: Numerous other arsons and bombings occurred; Finding: Joseph Naples never brought to trial.

8. Fact: Joseph Naples and James Prato had influence with Sheriff Yarash and associates around Sheriff Tablack; Source: FBI Affidavits. Affidavit and Testimony submitted during U.S. Senate hearing on organized crime (1984); Result: Organized crime activities continued; Finding: Joseph Naples and James Prato never brought to trial.

9. Fact: James Prato gave an attempted campaign contribution to Sheriff candidate James Traficant; Source: FBI Affidavit—James Traficant Trial. Testimony submitted during U.S. Senate hearing on Organized Crime (1984); Result: James Traficant acquitted; Finding: James Prato never brought to trial.

10. Fact: James Prato gave an $80,000 campaign contribution to Sheriff candidate Terrence Sheidel; Source: Michael Terlecky Affidavit. Affidavit of Congressional Lead Staff Investigator Frederick V. Hudach; Result: Terrence Sheidel advertised aggressively during his campaign for Sheriff; Finding: James Prato never brought to trial due to no grand jury being assembled.

11. Fact: Informant who wished to stay anonymous for now revealed the following: (1) On or about 1979 and 1980 Terry Sheidel, a faculty member at Youngstown State University who taught Criminal Justice courses, was running for Mahoning County, Ohio Sheriff at the same time James A. Traficant was seeking the same position; (2) Informant advised Terry Sheidel that he did not have enough money to forge an effective campaign against James A. Traficant and that he (informant) could ask Lenny Strollo for campaign money for him (Sheidel). Terry Sheidel agreed to informant's recommendation to ask Lenny Strollo for campaign money; (3) Informant met with Lenny Strollo and he (Strollo) gave him (informant) $80,000 in cash for Terry Sheidel's campaign for Mahoning County Sheriff. Strollo also told informant that if Terry Sheidel needed more money he would give him another $80,000; (4) Informant felt that James A. Traficant had to take the money from whoever gave him the money to keep it off the streets or it would have certainly been used against him to keep him from becoming the Mahoning County, Ohio Sheriff; (5) As far as informant knows, Terry Sheidel never received the second $80,000 from Lenny Strollo. James A. Traficant won the election.

Source: Michael Terlecky Affidavit. Affidavit of Congressional Lead Staff Investigator, Frederick V. Hudach; Result: Terry

STANLEY PETERSON AS FBI AGENT

1. Fact: Isabella Callard witnessed her husband Joe Ezzo giving money to FBI Agent Stanley Peterson so that he would permit gambling and other illegal activity to continue; Source: Isabella Callard Affidavit; Result: Illegal activity continued; Finding: Stanley Peterson retired from the FBI and subsequently became the Chief of Police of Youngstown, Ohio.

STANLEY PETERSON/FRIEND OF THE MOB/CHIEF OF POLICE

1. Fact: The FBI was informed that a candidate for Mayor of Youngstown, Emanuel Catsoules stated that in 1978 a friend of organized crime wanted Stanley Peterson to be his Chief of Police.

2. Fact: The FBI was informed that a candidate for Mayor of Youngstown, Thomas A. Shipka, was contacted by a friend of the mob who would support his campaign based on certain conditions, one of which that he would appoint Stanley Peterson as his Chief of Police.

3. Fact: Thomas A. Shipka turned over his information to the FBI and actually brought 13-14 police officers who had first-hand knowledge of gambling joints, prostitution, and other activities that they alleged Mr. Peterson was protecting.

4. Fact: Allegation of Mr. Peterson being involved in an illegal wiretap of a rival mob group was given to the strike force.

5. Fact: The FBI was informed that in 1969, Jack Hunter, a candidate for Mayor of Youngstown, was contacted by an intermediary representing organized crime figures who were well known. They wanted veto powers over Chief of Police in exchange for campaign funds. A high ranking official in the Sheriff's Department was to act as the bagman.

6. Fact: The FBI was informed that in 1971 an intermediary for organized crime contacted Mayor of Youngstown, Jack Hunter, expressing a desire for him to name Stanley Peterson as Chief of Police.

7. Fact: On two separate occasions during the period that Stanley Peterson was Chief of Police of Youngstown, concerned citizens took substantial evidence to the local FBI office implicating Peterson in promoting or protecting organized criminal activity in the City of Youngstown. The Youngstown Police Department took evidence to the FBI identifying over 30 specific sites where organized criminal activity was being permitted to operate within the city.

8. Fact: Evidence was presented to the FBI that Chief of Police, Stanley Peterson was disciplining certain members of the Youngstown Police Department to discourage them from taking action against operations being conducted by LCN figures within the city.

Source: Affidavits and testimony submitted during U.S. Senate hearings on Organized Crime (1984); Result: The FBI said they were aware of the information about Stanley Peterson and that they investigated same, however, the nature of the information lacked specificity; Finding: The evidence against Stanley Peterson was never brought before a Grand Jury.

1. Fact: Joseph Naples and James Prato who were aligned with the Sebastian John LaRocca Mafia Family located in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania ran the organized crime faction in the Mahoning County, Ohio area which included: conspiracy to commit murder, murder for hire, aggravated murder, arson, bombings, burglary-criminal trespass, extortion, illegal gambling, numerous illegal campaign contributions, promoted the hiring of certain police officers, "signed off" on key elected officials, sheriffs, prosecutors and mayors.

Source: FBI Affidavits, Testimony, written statements and affidavits submitted to the U.S. Senate hearings on Organized Crime (1984 and 1988).

2. Fact: An informant who wished to stay anonymous for now, revealed the following: (1) Informant was a Youngstown, Ohio police officer during 1977 and 1978; (2) Informant during 1977 and 1978 worked for six months on Phillip Richley's campaign for Mayor of Youngstown, Ohio. Informant felt that his campaign work for Philip Richley would bring him a patrolman to white shirt and tie promotion with the Youngstown, Ohio Police Department. After Phillip Richley won the election and became the Mayor of Youngstown, Ohio, retired FBI Agent Stanley Peterson became the Youngstown, Ohio Chief of Police. Informant became angry when he was made aware that he was not going to get his expected promotion. Informant then contacted Lenny Strollo, who at the time along with Vic Calautti and Joey Naples reported to James Prato. Immediately after informant told Strollo of what happened to him, Strollo made a telephone call. Immediately following Strollo's telephone call, Strollo told informant he was promoted to a white shirt and tie promotion. Informant did not hear Strollo's telephone conversation, however, he strongly feels that Strollo talked to Youngstown, Ohio Chief of Police, Stanley Peterson, the retired FBI Agent; (3) Informant revealed that when Stanley Peterson was an FBI Agent he was often seen at Standard Motors, 901 Andrews Avenue, Youngstown, Ohio where mafia affiliated often met. Informant said that FBI Agent Stanley Peterson "had a key to the place." Informant also stated that Stanley Peterson was Joey Naples' man.

LENINE STROLLO/FRANK FASLINE—TELEPHONE CONVERSATION, NOVEMBER 23, 1996

Fact: Lenine Strollo told Frank Fasline during a November 23, 1996 telephone conversation: that FBI Agent Robert Kroner was on Joseph Naples payroll; that FBI Agent Robert Kroner said in essence that he has lots of friends, that they can do whatever they want to do in this valley as long as they cooperate with him; that the FBI got away with illegal activity in the Mahoning Valley and the FBI was planning to get away with illegal activity again; that the FBI got involved in illegal activity and that the FBI wanted to make him (Strollo) a scapegoat again.

Source: FBI transcript of telephone wiretap titled Government Exhibit #4; Result: Lenine Strollo recanted above statements. Lenine Strollo in a plea bargain kept over $10 million in assets; Finding: Lenine Strollo traded the truth in exchange for his assets.

ASSOCIATE OF LENINE STROLLO PROFFER

Fact: (1) He caught Youngstown Police following him in Campbell and he heard that the FBI was across the road, in the mill with binoculars. Paulie told him not to worry about it because they had an "inside guy" in FBI. (Page 4); (2) Lenny Strollo told him about Biondillo running stags in the City of Youngstown and they wondered how he was able to do it. Lenny Strollo told him he heard that money went from Biondillo through Vic Calautti to the Randall Wellington campaign and that Biondillo had to have the okay from Wellington to be able to hold stags inside the city of Youngstown. (Page 45). He said that he heard that Biondillo paid $25,000 to Vic Calautti to donate to Wellington's campaign. (Page 49); (3) Lenny Strollo and he thought that the guys at the Center (Youngstown United Music) were doing business with FBI Agent Kroner as they were operating without any pressure and therefore must have had the FBI's okay. Lenny or Danny Strollo told him that Biondillo was talking to and dealing with the FBI. (Page 58); (4) Lenny Strollo told him that an agent told someone who told Strollo that FBI Agent Kroner and those guys were on the Naples payroll for years. He heard from Strollo that someone went to Kroner's father to see if he could control Kroner. That person found out that his father had no control over what he did. The reason for this was to see if Lenny Strollo could have control over Kroner like Naples did.

Source: The Proffer of a Lenine Strollo Associate given at the Euclid City Jail, Euclid, Ohio on 5-28, 6-4, 6-9, 6-30, 9-1, 11-13, 1998 in the presence of Assistant U.S. Attorneys, FBI Special Agents and a Special Agent of the IRS; Result: Information within Proffer suppressed; Finding: Obstruction of Justice-Misprision by Assistant U.S. Attorneys, Special Agent FBI and Special Agent IRS.

Fact: Informant, who wished to stay anonymous because of fear for himself and family revealed the following: during the early fall of 1997, Lenny Strollo, reputed leader of Youngstown, Ohio Organized Crime, told me at his now closed restaurant, at the northwest corner of Calla Road near Market Street, North Lima, Ohio that Joey Naples had told him the following: (a) he (Joey Naples) owned the FBI; and (b) he (Joey Naples) made payoffs to the FBI through Special Agent Lynch.

Source: Affidavit of Congressional Lead Staff Investigator Frederick V. Hudach; Result: FBI cover-up; Finding: FBI Agents on Joey Naples' payroll.

JUDICIAL CORRUPTION

Fact: Five separate crimes reported to the Youngstown office of the FBI and the Department of Justice, and three separate crimes reported to the Youngstown office of the FBI and IRS who used their authority in aid of and in furtherance to conceal the reported crimes by refusing to investigate and prosecute members of the bench and bar in both Mahoning and Trumbull Counties, Ohio; Source: Robert A. Frank Affidavits; Result: FBI and Office of the U.S. Attorney refused to totally investigate and prosecute; Finding: FBI, IRS and office of U.S. Attorney has carried out and made effective a pattern of selective prosecution and in some cases became an accessory after the fact.

Fact: An Investigative Chronology Exposing Extortion within the Trumbull County Common Pleas Court System of four Defendant's families for buyouts from prison was presented to both the FBI Offices in Youngstown and Cleveland and to the IRS Office in Youngstown; Source: Affidavit of Congressional Lead Staff Investigator, Frederick V. Hudach. Affidavit of Carl Stere; Result: No action taken by the United States Department of Justice; Finding: Selective Prosecution. The FBI/IRS/U.S. Attorneys will not prosecute their criminal friends for political reasons.

FBI refused to help a citizen of Trumbull County, Ohio who was being extorted by members of the Aryan Brotherhood. If the extortion money was not paid the citizen's son would be killed in prison; Source: Affidavit of Congressional Lead Staff Investigator, Frederick V. Hudach; Result: Troopers of the Ohio State Highway Patrol saved the life of the son of the citizen and arrested members of the Aryan Brotherhood; Finding: Members of the FBI were deliberately indifferent to their jurisdictional responsibility.

Fact: Two Investigative Summaries exposing police perjury and a bogus autopsy which occurred in Trumbull County, Ohio was submitted to Members of the FBI and the Office of Professional Responsibility; Source: Correspondence between Congressional Lead Staff Investigator Frederick V. Hudach and members of the FBI and member of Office of Professional Responsibility; Result: Assistant U.S. Attorney decided they did not have jurisdiction; Finding: Assistant U.S. Attorney practiced selective prosecution.

PAYING TRIBUTE TO FRANCISCO
GARCIA

HON. SCOTT McINNIS

OF COLORADO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 11, 2002

Mr. McINNIS. Mr. Speaker, it gives me great honor to stand before you today and praise the accomplishments of Mr. Francisco Garcia. Mr. Garcia is the Founder and CEO of Integrated Information Technology Corporation, and through his company he has provided employment opportunities to 360 Coloradans in his eight offices. Francisco Garcia lives his business life by the motto: "Treat others with the same level of respect, professionalism and fairness that you wish to be treated", and I am proud to bring forth his accomplishments before this body of Congress.

Francisco has two degrees, a Bachelor of Science in chemistry from the University of Texas-San Antonio, and a Bachelor of Science in Electrical Engineering from Ohio University in Athens. He also served our country in the United States Air Force as a Communications Officer where he achieved the rank of captain. Later in life, Mr. Garcia established his own company to provide important satellite, communications, network and installation services to the state of Colorado. His good fortune and quality business ethics have earned him many awards, including the SBA Region VIII Subcontractor of the Year in 2002, the Denver Post Minority-Owned Business of the Year in 2001, the Family Business Award in 2001, and also the SBA's National Minority Small Business Person of the Year in 1996.

Mr. Speaker, I am honored to recognize the accomplishments of this pillar of the Denver Business community. Francisco Garcia has been a great asset to the State of Colorado and to the world of communications. Francisco, I wish you all the best in your future endeavors.

JULY 4TH ADDRESS BY MAYOR
ROBERT BLOMQUIST OF OLMSTED FALLS, OH

HON. DENNIS J. KUCINICH

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 11, 2002

Mr. KUCINICH. Mr. Speaker, I am grateful for the opportunity to share a 4th of July speech given by Robert Blomquist, Mayor of Olmsted Falls. Mayor Blomquist eloquently spoke of the values and principles on which our country was founded that we must remember and cherish on Independence Day.

Welcome to the City of Olmsted Falls 4th of July festivities. Five weeks ago we gathered here to honor and remember the members of our countries' armed forces whom paid with their lives for the ideas behind the event and document that we celebrate today, the anniversary of the signing, and adoption, by the continental congress, or the declaration of independence.

Today is just not about the birth of a nation. Today is a day in which we pay respect and tribute to the men that pulled together in one document, the most comprehensive and complete ordered thoughts about the nature of man, the nature of government, and how human beings can exist to pursue life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. The careful thinking that is the fabric of our great nation. A statement of how we can be free as individuals, but still coexist in a structured and orderly society.

When I think about the history of our country, I am so grateful that I am a citizen of the United States, that my children and I are the beneficiaries of the ideals of the best human nature.

Think with me for a moment.

This land is the product of a unique confluence of the evolution of technology, economics, politics, and the nature of man. In the 17th century it became technically and economically possible for European powers to claim and settle lands beyond their boundaries. Politically Spain, France and Great Britain competed to exploit their claims in the new world and expand their influence.

The original 13 colonies were settled between 1607 and 1732, by Great Britain. It took 125 years and began 170 years before the birth of our nation. People first came as agents of the king to exploit the natural resources, and later came to escape the king and a situation where men were not recognized as being created equal, but where it was believed that men were given rights by station of birth.

At the time this land was being settled. The ideas of what is the true natural state of man. What is freedom and liberty? What is the role of government? What are the divine rights of the king as a sovereign? Should a king truly govern without the consent of his subject people? These ideas were being explored by such philosophers as Thomas Hobbes, John Locke, and Jean Jacques Rousseau. At the time the colonies were flourishing.

These ideas flourished with the American colonies. They took root and grew in the minds of both the intellectual and the layman as natural state of the human desire to be free and independent itself.

We know that this led to the events of our American Revolution. As we openly rebelled against an unjust king we still tried to organize ourselves and our government to better reflect man's desires.

The declaration of independence when you read it was nothing more than an indictment and redress of grievances in the literal sense. It was an announcement to the world of the reasoning behind the rebellion. When Congress adopted the declaration of July 4, 1776, England virtually ignored it. It received a 6 line mention in the London Morning Post, just below a theater notice. But on these shores it galvanized a people, to expend treasure and lives to fight for the ideals of life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness that we still enjoy today.

The Declaration of Independence was the product of the best thinking on social and political philosophy of the time. It became the blueprint of our constitution. And continues to this day to inspire men to pledge their lives, their fortunes, and their sacred honor.

In the year that has just passed, between today, and last year's celebration we again find it necessary to defend the foundation of our freedoms enjoyed as Americans.

At the time Jefferson wrote it and 56 men signed it and were declared treasonous, and sentenced to death, no one knew what would happen as a result of the Declaration of Independence. We have the advantage of 226 years of history to evaluate and appreciate this event.

Shortly before his death in 1826, Thomas Jefferson also had the advantage of the passage of time to reflect. The following is a passage of a letter written by Jefferson, as he had to decline an invitation to Washington City to celebrate Independence Day because of ill health. Expressing his regrets that he could not join with the small group of worthy gentlemen who created and signed the declaration, he said, "I should have indeed delighted to gather with an exchanged congratulations with those who joined with us to have elected to not submit to the sword, and to enjoyed with our fellow citizens after a half century of prosperity to continue of the choice we made. To assume the blessings of self government that restores the right of the exercise of reason and freedom of opinion. All eyes are open to the rights of man. For ourselves, let the annual return of this day forever refresh our recollections of these rights and our devotion to them."

A TRIBUTE TO REBEKAH REVELS
MISS NORTH CAROLINA 2002

HON. MIKE McINTYRE

OF NORTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 11, 2002

Mr. McINTYRE. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to Rebekah Revels who was recently crowned Miss North Carolina 2002. A native of St. Pauls in my home county of Robeson and a teacher at my alma mater, Lumberton Senior High School, Rebekah's recent accomplishment is a source of immense pride throughout our county and all of southeastern North Carolina.

The American historian, James Truslow Adams, once said, "Seek out that particular mental attribute which makes you feel most deeply and vitally alive, along with which comes the inner voice which says, 'This is the real me,' and when you have found that attitude, follow it." With dedication and determination, Rebekah has followed her heart and mind and become Miss North Carolina 2002.

Rebekah is a woman of dedication who does not rest on her laurels. Having held the past titles of Junior Miss Lumbee, Miss Lumbee, Miss University of North Carolina at Pembroke, Miss St. Pauls and Miss Fayetteville, Rebekah has kept the fire and energy alive to reach her dream of Miss North Carolina. She is a woman of dedication who provides a positive example for all to follow.

Rebekah is a very determined young woman. She set the goal of becoming Miss North Carolina and worked tirelessly to achieve this high distinction. She now will use this same drive and determination to inform people all across North Carolina of the devastating effects of Alzheimer's disease.

Rebekah, thank you for your dedication and your determination. We wish you continued success, and may God's strength, peace and joy be with you as you begin your reign as Miss North Carolina 2002 and as you compete for the title of Miss America.

TRIBUTE TO THE REGISTERS OF WILLS AND CLERKS OF OR- PHANS' COURT

HON. BILL SHUSTER

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 11, 2002

Mr. SHUSTER. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to congratulate the Registers of Wills & Clerks of Orphans' Court (ROW/OC), comprising Pennsylvania's 67 counties, for their 75th Anniversary as a state association. This organization is a collective group of elected professionals who have come together to learn from one another and to work as one body. By doing this, they have succeeded in creating one set of standards, procedures, rules, and statutes that are used statewide.

First organized in 1927, the ROW/OC Association of Pennsylvania, has strived to promote more effective government by concentrating on the priorities of information dissemination, education, and legislation. To best do this, they conduct an annual statewide conference for their members, which is an effective forum for education and the sharing of information. The result of this hard work, is the creation of a critical link between Pennsylvania's various departments, agencies, and the public who depend on these offices for a wide variety of purposes.

I would like to once again congratulate the Register of Wills & Clerks of Orphans' Court Association of Pennsylvania on their 75th Anniversary as a state association and thank them for their hard work and dedication.

COMMENDING JASON HIBNER

HON. TONY P. HALL

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 11, 2002

Mr. HALL of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, each year the Veterans of Foreign Wars and its Ladies Auxiliary conduct a national audio essay contest entitled the Voice of Democracy. 85,000 secondary school students participated this year on the theme, Reaching Out to America's Future. Jason Hibner, a young man from my congressional district, took second place with his entry, and was awarded the $16,000 Charles Kuralt Memorial Scholarship. Jason has just completed his junior year at Vandalia-Butler High School. I am pleased to insert his remarks into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

2001-2002 VFW VOICE OF DEMOCRACY SCHOLARSHIP CONTEST

"REACHING OUT TO AMERICA'S FUTURE"

The train ride must have been nearly unbearable. The biting cold, so unlike the warmth of the Hawaiian harbor, likely did nothing to dull the pain of his recent losses as the iron machine chugged along the parallel tracks. The telegram giving word of his father's death had come only a week prior, it would be difficult to comfort his sister and mother with the tragedy of his brother's death also fresh in their minds. The date was December 7, 1941. The title, "a date that shall live in infamy" would come later as would the declaration of war. But for my great uncle Arthur the day would mark the grimmest day of his life. He should have been there, at Pearl Harbor, as all his friends and fellow crewmen were when the Zeroes began dropping their deadly cargo. Such cruel irony, only his personal tragedies had prevented the loss of his own life. The thoughts of friends dying to the West and his family grieving to the East must have made the long ride nearly unbearable.

In December of '41, the world changed for every American young and old. The threat to our liberty could not be questioned; it could only be answered with such extraordinary force and purpose. However, the war was won, not by the adults who earlier questioned the next generation's patriotism, but by the young men and women who were pulled from their homes and thrown into battle for all those who would come after. Today we call them "The Greatest Generation," once they were called the future of America.

Within my own short lifetime, I can remember another period when everyone felt it was time to create some more patriotism and concern for our nation. That time was roughly from the moments during my childhood as coherent thoughts began to fill my mind to a date that shall always occupy a front position in my memory: September 11, 2001. Now, no one acts concerned about the need to teach the cost of freedom. We just want to go back to that time, before America once again lost her innocence as children watched from their school room desks both the toppling of the World Trade Center Towers and the disappearance of hope from their teachers' faces.

The young people of America's future will not have the luxury of being gently educated by the wiser members who have experienced Vietnam and Desert Storm. Instead, they have been ripped from their shelter of indifference into the ultimate struggle of good versus evil, a united nation against a radical terror network. The leaders of America have been handed a burden of monstrous proportions for the terrorists' instrument of evil has also become an image demanding retaliation for the American people. Today, the concern of reaching out to America's future has become a universal thread, weaving together all the citizens of this great nation.

America's future is unclear. But it has always been so from first cries of revolution, to the separation of the Union, to the grinding of war on Normandy Beach. Our future citizens of this country may live with daily threats of violence and the fearful anxiety of what will come next. But as Benjamin Franklin once declared, "They that can give up essential liberty to obtain a little temporary safety deserve neither liberty nor safety * * *". The American way will continue as long as there are Americans to sustain it.

Before, I could only imagine the thoughts of my great-uncle during that long ride home. Now we, America's youth, are riding the same journey across the fruited plains and under the spacious skies of America the Beautiful. The parallel tracks of hardened metal resemble the tracks of change through the history of our nation. Often there will be treacherous turns and steep declines, but America always levels herself and turns to the morning dawn. My generation is the future of America and we will fight for liberty and freedom just as all those before us.

PAYING TRIBUTE TO TED ALBERS

HON. SCOTT MCINNIS

OF COLORADO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 11, 2002

Mr. MCINNIS. Mr. Speaker, it is with a solemn heart that I take this opportunity to pay respect to the passing of Ted Albers, who recently passed away at the age of 78. Ted was the former Mesa College president-Administrator who helped reform higher education in Western Colorado to meet vocational and academic ambitions. Ted is credited as an innovative thinker who not only transformed Mesa College from a community college into an accredited four year institution but also preserved the two-year aspects of the institution so that Mesa could continue offering associate degrees and vocational certification.

Ted was born in the small Northwestern Colorado town of Maybell and became a teacher and principal at Rio Blanco High School in Meeker in 1949. He went on to become an administrator for the University of Colorado extension division in Grand Junction and served as an assistant superintendent of School District 51. In 1969, he returned to receive higher education at Denver Community College and then returned to Mesa in 1970.

Ted's leadership guided Mesa College on a course geared toward providing young adults with a quality and affordable education aimed to meet as many needs as possible in western Colorado. Ted was almost perfectly suited to the job of reshaping Mesa because he was first and foremost an educator in the highest sense of the word.

Ted is survived by his wife, Maxine, who served as a Mesa County Commissioner for 15 years and his two children, T.L. and Rhonda. Throughout his life Ted remained a strong supporter of the Mesa State College and its role in the community.

Mr. Speaker, it is with profound sadness that we remember Ted Albers. He was a remarkable man whose innovative teaching techniques have educated thousands of people and whose good deeds deserve the recognition of this body of Congress and this nation. The impact of Ted's life on those with whom he has come in contact is a testament to this great man. I would like to express my condolences to the family of Ted Albers.

IN RECOGNITION OF FATHER
BYRON COLLINS OF THE GOLDEN ANNIVERSARY OF HIS ORDINA-TION INTO THE PRIESTHOOD

HON. JOHN P. MURTHA

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 11, 2002

Mr. MURTHA. Mr. Speaker, on Friday, June 21, 2002, a gentleman who has been a friend to many of us in this chamber over the last quarter century, Father T. Byron Collins, S.J., celebrated the golden anniversary of his ordination into the priesthood. He entered the Jesuit Order in September, 1940.

Through fifty years of ordained priesthood, Father Collins has left a lasting impression on the lives of many devout Catholics. Virtually every weekend, Father Collins travels over 150 miles round trip to say Mass at Our Mother of Sorrows Catholic Church in Centreville on Maryland's Eastern Shore. During the week, he is an active presence on the campus of Georgetown University where he not only has played a major role in shaping the physical presence of that institution, but has also enhanced the understanding of the Catholic faith among the students. Now in his eighth decade of life, Father Collins is still seen rowing on the Chesapeake Bay and bicycling in the vicinity of the Georgetown campus. This is a man who is living life to the fullest and continuing in many ways to serve his faith.

I know that Father Collins is immensely proud—in his very humble way—of having been able to play a significant role in the life of Georgetown University, the Nation's oldest Catholic university. Likewise, I know that many of us in this House have come to admire and respect this man of the cloth. He has been a friend who has been with us in times of joy and of tribulation. He is to be commended for the fifty years of service he has provided since his ordination.

THE CRISIS OF THE UNINSURED

HON. CHARLES B. RANGEL

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 11, 2002

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, today America faces a crisis that affects more than 40 million people. This is the number of Americans who are currently without health insurance. Additionally, if we account for the number of people who have insurance but are underinsured, then we arrive at a far more disturbing number. Let's face it. The health care system as we know it is falling far short of its goals.

During a time in which the economy is lagging and health care prices are rising, companies are having to make cutbacks and consumers are having to choose between health coverage and meeting their daily needs. For example, when faced with the choice of paying for a vehicle needed to get to work each day or for expensive health care coverage, millions opt to forgo their health in favor of a much needed paycheck.

On the other hand as business profits have been decreasing substantially, employers can no longer afford to offer employees lower prices for health insurance. This means that businesses feel the pressure to pass the health care bill on to employees. Since 74% of the U.S. population is covered by private health care insurers, mostly provided by the workplace, this means that most consumers will feel the squeeze of skyrocketing health care premiums.

Why is it so important that we insure all Americans? Lack of health care drastically affects access to proper medical treatment. Since the uninsured are less likely to have regular health care treatment, their level of health is lower on average compared to the insured. People without health insurance tend to allow medical problems to go untreated because they cannot afford doctor visits or recommended medications. More than a third of uninsured adults say they have not filled a drug prescription in the past year due to cost. More than a third did not get a medical test or treatment that had been recommended.

The uninsured do not normally have access to preventative care, which may mean the difference between catching cancer in its early, treatable stages as opposed to a stage in which the cancer is incurable. For example, uninsured women diagnosed with breast cancer are more likely to die from it because they have a much greater chance of being diagnosed with late-stage cancer.

We must address the problem of the uninsured because this health care crisis also affects the decisions of health care providers. Under the current system of competitive managed care, physicians are often forced to choose between giving proper treatment to the uninsured (risking uncompensated care) and not providing adequate treatment (risking the life of the patient). To alleviate this problem, the uninsured are often required to pay for services "up front." This requirement causes uninsured individuals to either wait until they can afford treatment or charge their medical bills to credit cards, potentially building debt that may take years to pay.

Another problem evident in the current health care system is that minorities disproportionately represent the uninsured. Roughly a third of Hispanic and Native Americans are uninsured. About 20% of African Americans and Asians are uninsured compared to 11% of whites.

The poor and near-poor are also much more likely to be without health insurance. If it were not for Medicaid, many more of the poor would be uninsured and would have reduced access to medical care. Yet Medicaid does not cover a significant number of the near-poor. Since nearly 60% of the uninsured at or below the poverty level have at least one worker in the family, many near-poor individuals earn too much to qualify for Medicaid. It is evident that we must work to narrow the gaps of health care coverage disparities along racial and socioeconomic lines.

We can no longer sit back and hope that the problems within the current health care system correct themselves. It is imperative that we rise together in a bipartisan effort to address the health care crisis of the uninsured. We must find a solution before this crisis grows to affect additional millions of Americans.

INDIA AND IRAQ: "STRATEGIC PARTNERS" STRENGTHEN TRADE TIES WITH OIL DEAL

HON. DAN BURTON

OF INDIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 11, 2002

Mr. BURTON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, India calls itself "the world's largest democracy" and it claims it is a partner in the fight against terrorism, yet it just signed an agreement to strengthen its trade ties with one of the world's major sponsors of terrorism, Iraq. According to the British Broadcasting Company (BBC), Amir Muhammad Rasheed, the Iraqi Oil Minister, called India a "strategic partner."

Under the agreement, India will provide medicine, wheat, rice, railway equipment, and turbines for electrical generators to Iraq. In addition, India, Iraq, and Algeria are in the final stages of an agreement to drill oil in the southern part of Iraq. Mr. Rasheed's counterpart, Indian Oil Minister Ram Naik, said that India opposes the sanctions on Iraq.

On May 18, 1999, the Indian Express reported that Indian Defense Minister George Fernandes organized and led a meeting with the Ambassadors from Iraq, Red China, Cuba, Russia, Serbia, and Libya to discuss setting up a security alliance "to stop the U.S." This demonstrates that many in India do not view America as an ally, but instead, view us as an enemy. Apparently, these people are even willing to support America's enemies.

The time has come for the United States to recognize the truth about India. India has a long way to go before it can be considered an American ally. It is a supporter of terrorist regimes and a practitioner of terrorism itself. It has already been placed on the State Department's watch list of violators of religious freedom. Now it is time to impose appropriate sanctions on India. We should immediately cut off all American aid to India, and we should declare our support for the self-determination movements in South Asia, such as those in Kashmir, in Punjab, Khalistan, and in Nagalim, among others. If India is going to support terrorism around the world, it is not worthy of the support of the hard-working, freedom-loving people of the United States.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to place the BBC report on the India-Iraq deal into the RECORD at this time for the information of my colleagues and the American people.

IRAQ AND INDIA TIES WARMED BY OIL DEALS

Iraq and India have signed an agreement to boost trade ties, especially in the oil sector.

Indian Oil Minister Ram Naik told a press conference that the Indian oil firm Oil Natural Gas Corporation Limited (ONGC) would soon open offices in Baghdad.

Mr. Naik added, after meeting his Iraqi counterpart Amir Muhammed Rasheed, that "work was progressing" on an ONGC oil concession in southern Iraq.

Iraq has awarded Indian companies a number of contracts under the United Nations "oil-for food" programme, in return for India's diplomatic support.

The programme allows Iraq to bypass sanctions imposed for its 1990 invasion of Kuwait and use oil revenues to buy food and humanitarian goods.

The U.S. has classified Iraq as a member of the "axis of evil" while it has strengthened relations with India to prosecute the war in Afghanistan.

STRATEGIC PARTNER

After meeting with Iraqi President Saddam Hussein on Saturday, Mr. Naik said that India opposed the sanctions on Iraq, and called for them to be ended immediately.

Mr. Rasheed described India as a "strategic partner".

"We have entered new projects in railways, oil and gas, health and industry in addition to technical co-operation and this will give a boost to the economic relations of the two countries, which in consequence will be reflected on the volume of trade exchange," Mr. Rasheed said.

Under the agreement, India is to supply Iraq with medicine, wheat, rice, railway equipment and turbines for electricity generations.

Mr. Rasheed said trade between Baghdad and New Delhi under an "oil-for-food" deal with the UN had reached $1.1 bn.

EXPANDING OIL INTERESTS

Iraq, India and Algeria are "in the final state" of a deal to start exploring and drilling the Tuba oil field between Zubair and Rumaila in the south of the country.

"It is a consortium between Indian companies and the Algerian Sonatrach Company, and we hope to realize it by the end of summer," Mr. Rasheed was quoted as saying in the ruling Baath party's Al-Thawra newspaper.

The field was being developed by Iraq until the 1991 Gulf War, when storage facilities were destroyed.

ONGC is awaiting approval from its board to invest approximately $63m in Iraq.

India, which imports more than two-thirds of its crude oil requirement, has been seeking foreign sources as domestic output matures.

Last month it took over a concession in Sudan from Canadian oil company Talisman.

INTRODUCTION OF THE CHILDREN'S ACCESS TO ORAL HEALTH ACT

HON. JOHN D. DINGELL

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 11, 2002

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, tooth decay is the most prevalent chronic childhood disease; it is five times more common than asthma, and seven times more common than hay fever. Without proper treatment, dental caries (tooth decay) can result in serious infection, pain, and swelling, interfering with the ability to eat or drink, and, in severe cases, sleep or school performance.

Unfortunately, low-income children suffer disproportionately from oral disease. While dental care is covered for children in Medicaid, and most states opt to cover it for children in Children's Health Insurance Programs (SCHIP), merely covering services does not guarantee children will have access to them. Low participation by providers, program barriers, and parent's lack of knowledge about the importance of early dental care and prevention have greatly contributed to the disproportionate number of low-income children who suffer from tooth decay.

Such problems can be overcome. Recent demonstration projects have shown that increased attention to the issue coupled with expanded federal support can go a long way toward ensuring low-income children have access to quality oral health care. My home state of Michigan is an example of where change has begun to take hold.

Michigan tried a new approach to dental coverage when they implemented a dental benefit for their SCHIP program. Not surprisingly, by paying dentists market rates, simplifying billing procedures, and requiring that plans prohibit participating dentists from discriminating against SCHIP patients, access and utilization soared to levels never seen under Medicaid. Between 70–90% of dentists participated in the plan networks and nearly three-quarters of children received a dental visit in a year. In comparison, in the Medicaid program where similar changes were not undertaken, only 27% of dentists participated and barely a quarter of Medicaid children had a dental visit. The State of Michigan has had the common sense to expand this effort to Medicaid through a demonstration project and the results have been similar.

All children, however, regardless of where they get their health insurance, should be able to count on quality dental care. That is why Congressman Upton and I are introducing the "Children's Access to Oral Health Act," a bill that will provide incentives and new flexibility to states to encourage them to improve and expand the provision of dental care to low-income children.

The Children's Access to Oral Health Act establishes improved dental care for low-income children as a priority within the Department of Health and Human Services by establishing a dental health initiative led by a newly created Chief Dental Officer for Medicaid and CHIP. The legislation provides grant funding for states to undertake outreach and improve coordination in the dental care provided through these programs, as well as to improve provider reimbursement rates to secure adequate access to services for these children. The legislation also provides grants to improve the delivery of pediatric dental services through community health centers, public health departments, and the Indian Health Service to address problems in areas facing a shortage of dental professionals.

Finally, the legislation ensures that dental care is a part of the core benefits package of the SCHIP program and gives states the flexibility to provide dental coverage (or supplemental additional benefits or cost sharing) for children in families who meet SCHIP income requirements but who have private insurance which is inadequate in these areas. For every child who lacks health insurance coverage, there are 2.6 children who do not have dental coverage. This problem is concentrated among low-income families, but currently states' hands are tied and they cannot supplement inadequate private insurance with SCHIP coverage.

I believe the Children's Access to Oral Health Act will go a long way in terms of improving dental services for children and in reducing the dental caries among low-income children. Michigan, like a number of other states, has made significant progress in this area, but much more can be done. The gains made in the Michigan SCHIP program should be expanded to children who have coverage through Medicaid. States that have not focused as much attention on this problem can be encouraged to do so. This bill will provide incentives, resources, and new flexibility for states to tackle this problem. I look forward to working with my colleague Mr. Upton as well as our friends in the dental community, like Dr. Dan Briskie, in moving this legislation forward.

VFW VOICE OF DEMOCRACY PROGRAM COMPETITION

HON. FRANK R. WOLF

OF VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 11, 2002

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Speaker, each year the Veterans of Foreign Wars (VFW) of the United States and its Ladies Auxiliary conduct the Voice of Democracy audio-essay scholarship competition designed to give high school students the opportunity to voice their opinion on their civic responsibility to our country.

The program is now in its 55th year and requires high school student entrants to write and record a three-to five-minute essay on an announced patriotic theme. This year over 85,000 secondary school students participated in this contest competing for the 58 national scholarships. The contest theme was "Reaching Out to America's Future."

I am pleased to announce that Elizabeth Buckner from the 10th District of Virginia has been named a national winner in the 2002 Voice of Democracy Program and the recipient of the $1,000 Roy Chandler VFW Post 762 and Ladies Auxiliary Award. Elizabeth, a senior at Clarke County High School, is the daughter of Larry Buckner and Michele Worthing. She was sponsored by VFW Post 9760 and its Ladies Auxiliary in Berryville, Virginia.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to share Elizabeth's scholarship-winning essay with our colleagues:

2001-2002 VFW VOICE OF DEMOCRACY SCHOLARSHIP CONTEST—REACHING OUT, TO AMERICA'S FUTURE

(By Elizabeth Buckner)

Imagine if you will, the year 2020. The intense winter sun is fading on the city of New York and a light dusting of snow glistens on the sidewalk. As you hurry home from work, you stop inside a small bakery where the warmth and the aroma of holiday cookies surrounds you. Initially the sound of jumbled words is all that you hear, but soon you can distinguish between the different voices and various languages that have entranced you. First Italian, then Arabic and Chinese. Although, you cannot understand the words, the emotions of excitement and joy are universal. And as you slowly make your way home in this city, which is alive with energy and hope, you read the newspaper and think about all the events, some memorable, some already forgotten, that have transpired today in this great nation.

Although this episode may seem ordinary and insignificant; in actuality, it is a phenomenon, made only more significant because it is common and widespread in this country. This episode is a vision of America's future, where prosperity, freedom and diversity flourish.

Today, the United States is a country of unparalleled prosperity and security. Our nation celebrates pluralism in, culture, language, religion and custom. It is the land of freedom of expression, freedom of belief, freedom of information, and freedom of opportunity.

Each day, however, we are faced with a difficult question. How can we, both as individuals and as a society, reach out to this vision of the future, and how can we guarantee that the country our posterity will come to know is ever greater than the one we have experienced?

The answer to this question, the only one that can be given, is through the present. The future can only ever be built on the events of the past and the present. So the question becomes, not how can we, but how are we already reaching out to America's future?

The ways in which we are reaching out to America's future are:

1. By exercising the rights we are guaranteed in the Constitution
2. By educating our children and instilling them with the values that we cherish
3. By defending our country and our way of life against outside attacks
4. By embracing our freedoms and our diversity

First, we as individuals, are exercising the fights that are guaranteed to us in the Constitution. For example, on November 6th, millions of U.S. citizens went to the polls to take part directly in our government and its processes. By voting, and helping to elect our representatives at both the state and federal levels, we are helping to influence the future of legislature and our country.

Secondly, we as a society realize that our children are our future. Everyday we strive to provide them not only with an economically sound, but also a healthy and happy future. In order to achieve this goal, we guarantee our children a public education, we help provide health care, and we instill our values of freedom, patriotism and equality in them.

Third, currently our country is fighting a war for our future. We are fighting for our freedom, and defending our country against the ineffable attack that our nation experienced on September 11th. We are fighting in order to ensure that our children and our grandchildren will know the peace and the prosperity that we have enjoyed for so long.

Lastly, we are currently embracing the diversity in our own culture. We are witnesses of this diversity. We worship in the churches, temples, and mosques; we speak and hear the different languages, and we observe the contrasting beliefs and opinions presented by the media. By acknowledging our differences, and by protecting our civil liberties today, we are ensuring that in the future, the citizens of our country will know and will accept such diversity and will experience and enjoy such freedom.

In conclusion, the only way that we can truly reach out to America's future is to affirm our principles of freedom and equality each and every day. The truth is that, while we are caught up in our busy lives and absorbed by our personal concerns, the eternal rhythm of time will persist. And we will not even notice. But all too soon, we will open our eyes and realize that the vision of tomorrow has faded and has become the gift of today. Only then, when America's future has become it's past, on those wintry nights when we are hurrying home, enjoying all the benefits of American society, will we truly be able to appreciate the significance of today.

PAYING TRIBUTE TO WAYNE THOMPSON

HON. SCOTT McINNIS

OF COLORADO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 11, 2002

Mr. McINNIS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take a moment and pay tribute to the life, legacy, and memory of Wayne Douglas Thompson. Wayne departed us on June 2, 2002 in his Monte Vista home, and as we mourn his loss, I would like to take the opportunity to honor Wayne—a man of great character and conduct.

Wayne was a native of Colorado, born and raised by Douglas and Agnes Thompson in Monte Vista. He graduated from Monte Vista High School in 1952, and entered Adams State College, graduating with honors in 1956. He enlisted in the United States Marine Corps and served our country courageously through three tours in South Vietnam and also in the Middle East, defending the freedoms and liberties we all hold dear. Wayne served with integrity, and today we honor him as a soldier and a patriot.

After 21 years of military service, Wayne retired from the Marine Corps and returned home to accept a position as the Executive Director of the Colorado Potato Administration Committee. His leadership and guidance have inspired his peers and co-workers—Wayne leads by example and has always taken time to pass along his wisdom to the youth of his community.

Mr. Speaker, I proudly honor Wayne before this body of Congress and this nation. He is survived by his two daughters Dawn and Kali, his three grandchildren Nicholas, Melanie, and Devin, and his beloved wife Maryann. Thank you, Wayne, for your many years of service and countless contributions to our society. Although we all mourn the loss of Wayne Thompson, we recognize that he has left a piece of himself with each of those who were lucky enough to have known him.

INTERNATIONAL TAX SIMPLIFICATION, FAIRNESS, AND COMPETITIVENESS ACT OF 2002

HON. SANDER M. LEVIN

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 11, 2002

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing a bill, the "International Tax Simplification, Fairness, and Competitiveness Act of 2002." I have worked for many years with my dear colleague, AMO HOUGHTON, to help bring sensible and low-cost simplifications and reforms to the U.S. international tax rules. I look forward to working with him this year and in future years on these important issues.

The bill contains a menu of proposals unified by a common theme: The way we tax the income of U.S. companies doing business abroad should reflect the economic realities of doing business abroad and should facilitate the efficient allocation of resources. Guided by that principle, the bill provides a list of possible amendments to the U.S. international tax regime that will simplify the reporting burden, update the rules to reflect the new realities of globalization, enhance the competitiveness of U.S. businesses and their workers, and promote exports. While I do not anticipate that all of these provisions would be enacted at once, and certainly the fiscal impact of any provision must be considered as it progresses through the legislative process including by considering appropriate offsets, I look forward to working to get provisions of the bill enacted into law.

In the context of trade policy I have spoken for some time about the need to address head-on the changing nature of trade which has followed from the phenomenon of economic globalization. That need exists in the international tax sphere, as well. The nature of business and commerce has changed dramatically in the past fifty years and continues to change rapidly. Today, companies regularly take advantage of the gains in efficiency that may come from locating strategically in multiple points around the globe. Not only can strategic location around the globe make U.S. companies more competitive, it also can increase demand for U.S. exports, since U.S. companies operating overseas are very likely to purchase U.S. goods and services. In the trade context, I have worked to establish basic rules of international competition, including a floor of core labor standards, to ensure that there is a level playing field for U.S. companies and workers. Just as we need relentless innovation in our trade policy, we must ensure that our tax policy is keeping up with the realities of domestic and international business.

Additionally, as international business transactions have increased dramatically, it is increasingly necessary to be sure that the rules meet two challenges: they must be updated to prevent new types of abusive transactions with little or no purpose other than the avoidance of U.S. taxes, and at the same time they should not have the effect of deterring or severely burdening transactions undertaken for legitimate and, from the point of view of American competitiveness, desirable, economic reasons.

Toward that end, and as someone who has spent a lot of time working to simplify and improve the U.S. international tax regime, I want to put forth a proposition—although there is a need to discuss the competitive implications of the U.S. international tax rules and there is a need for simplification, the issue of corporate inversions does not provide an appropriate vehicle for that discussion.

Corporate inversions are not truly about the complexities of the U.S. international tax rules; they are driven by tax avoidance, plain and simple.

Whether a corporation is headquartered in Germany, France, the Netherlands, Japan, or the United States, it has a tax-based incentive to do an inversion into a tax haven. Coming from any OECD country with a responsible tax authority, an inversion into a tax haven will allow a company to avoid the relevant passive income rules, embodied in subpart F of the U.S. Tax Code, but in existence in one form or another throughout the OECD.

Also, once a corporation from any OECD country has undertaken an inversion, the corporation can reap further tax benefits through earnings stripping transactions that avoid domestic taxes on domestic-source income.

So, the corporate inversion phenomenon is not about territorial systems versus the U.S. modified worldwide system of taxation. An inversion results in a tax regime more favorable than either of these systems. Any attempt to turn the inversion phenomenon into an indictment of the U.S. system is therefore misguided. Inversions are about tax havens versus developed taxing jurisdictions like those in OECD countries. The only "business reason" driving an inversion—reflected in disclosure filings accompanying each inversion reassuring shareholders that the transaction will not impact business operations—is tax avoidance.

I will therefore resist any effort to draw a false link between the inversion phenomenon and the need for reform of the U.S. international tax rules. I believe that consideration of legislation to close off inversions is important and should be considered on its own merits, similarly, legislation to reform and simplify the U.S. international tax rules to improve the competitiveness of U.S. companies is important and should be considered on its own merits. Attempts to link the two issues together will only add unnecessary difficulty and will jeopardize the types of needed changes included in the bill introduced today.

CELEBRATING THE 100TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE VOORHEESVILLE VOLUNTEER FIRE DEPARTMENT

HON. MICHAEL R. McNULTY

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 11, 2002

Mr. McNULTY. Mr. Speaker, I am so proud to recognize with gratitude the 100th Anniversary of the Voorheesville Volunteer Fire Department, which is located in my congressional district in Albany County, New York.

For more than a century, members of the Voorheesville Volunteer Fire Department have put their lives on the line—day in and day out—to ensure the safety and well being of the citizens of the Village of Voorheesville and its surrounding communities.

Founded April 1, 1902, the Voorheesville Fire Department enjoys a rich tradition of heroism and service. Never have these most admirable qualities been so honorably displayed than by the heroic rescue efforts of firefighters from across New York State following the terrorist attacks of September 11, 2001.

Through their actions, Mr. Speaker, we understand true patriotism.

The heroic efforts of our 'First Responders' are finally being given the recognition they have always deserved.

I proudly extend my highest regard to the Department's President, Richard Berger, to its Fire Chief, Michael Wiesmaier, and to all of the volunteer firefighters and their families. They have my best wishes for continued safe and successful service.

FBI's MILLIE PARSONS RETIRES—
AT AGE 88 AFTER NEARLY 63
YEARS OF SERVICE

HON. FRANK R. WOLF

OF VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 11, 2002

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Speaker, I want to call to the attention of our colleagues the remarkable career of a dedicated federal employee who just retired from the Federal Bureau of Investigation after nearly 63 years of service to her country.

When Mrs. Mildred C. Parsons—known as "Millie"—ended her career on June 28 at age 88, she was the longest continuously serving employee in the FBI. What's even more extraordinary, Millie Parsons never took a day of sick leave in her 62 years and nine months of work at the FBI.

She was 25 years old in September 1939—Franklin D. Roosevelt was president of the United States and World War II was beginning—when she began her career at the FBI as a junior clerk-typist in the chief clerk's office at FBI headquarters.

The next year she transferred to the Washington Field Office, where, over the course of her career, Mrs. Parsons served as the secretary to 30 agents in charge of that office, the second largest division in the FBI. She proudly displayed all the portraits of her bosses lining a corridor leading to her office.

Van A. Harp, assistant director in charge of the FBI's Washington Field Office, recently commented that "Millie, who embodies all the positive attributes of Fidelity, Bravery and Integrity, has certainly contributed to the fine reputation of the FBI. Her career and dedication have been a hallmark for those who follow in her path. Millie will be missed by all of her associates."

A native of Frederick, Maryland, and a widow since 1967, Mrs. Parsons has lived in the Maryland suburbs of the nation's capital during her career with the FBI. She says she plans to relax and travel—now that she has some leisure time.

Mr. Speaker, Millie Parsons stands as an outstanding role model for all in public service to emulate. We wish her the best in her retirement.

INTRODUCTION OF LIVER DISEASE
RESEARCH ENHANCEMENT ACT

HON. DAN MILLER

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 11, 2002

Mr. DAN MILLER of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I rise today with my colleague from Massachusetts, Mr. LYNCH, to introduce legislation to improve treatment options for millions of Americans living with liver disease. The "Liver Research Enhancement Act" organizes and streamlines the efforts by the National Institutes of Health (NIH) to combat liver disease by creating a comprehensive vision of how to fight this epidemic in our country. This bill establishes a National Center on Liver Research, which will work with a Liver Disease Advisory Board within the National Institutes of Health to construct a Liver Disease Research Action Plan. The national plan will help coordinate research currently administered by 14 different institutes and centers at the NIH. By prioritizing research goals, the NIH will be able to maximize its liver research.

The need for liver research and an effective funding projection is critical to our Nation's health. At present, it is estimated that twenty-five million people in the United States suffer from a liver or liver-related disease. Every year as many as fifteen thousand children are hospitalized by their illness. The medical care for individuals with liver disease each year costs over 5.5 billion dollars annually. Over four million Americans are afflicted with Hepatitis C alone, a disease claiming ten thousand lives each year and with no vaccine available. Without the proper public health measures, that number is expected to rise to thirty thousand a year. At this time, the majority of cases of Hepatitis C have no effective treatments. In addition, a newly discovered liver disease related to obesity, nonalcoholic fatty liver disease (NAFLD) could touch one in every four adults in the United States. At the same time, the waiting list for liver transplants stretches over 17,500 patients, of which only 5,100 receive livers and 1,300 die hoping for a transplant. The time has come to greatly improve liver research and preserve the public health for future generations.

The Center on Liver Research, to be based in the National Institute of Diabetes and Digestive and Kidney Diseases, will provide the much-needed leadership to ensure that the liver research opportunities are increased and that promising medical leads do not go unexplored. The Liver Disease Advisory Board will suggest future funding priorities and recognize underperformance as well as achievement in the field. The Center's first mission will be to make an action plan to deal with research to prevent, cure and treat liver disease in America. By establishing this unifying bond for the 14 different institutes involved in liver research, this bill will make liver research more effective and responsive to the needs of the liver community.

I have enclosed letters from the American Liver Foundation and the Hepatitis Foundation International endorsing this bill.

I urge my colleagues to support this important legislation.

AMERICAN LIVER FOUNDATION,
June 18, 2002.

Hon. DAN MILLER,
Cannon House Office Bldg.,
Washington, DC.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN MILLER: The purpose of this letter is to express, on behalf of the American Liver Foundation (ALF), our strong support and enthusiasm for your leadership to pursue enactment of the Liver Research Enhancement Act.

As you know, approximately 10% of the population, or over 25,000,000 Americans, are afflicted with liver, bile duct or gallbladder disease and over 4 million Americans have been infected with hepatitis C. The CDC has projected that deaths due to hepatitis C will more than triple by the year 2010 to more than 30,000 deaths per year unless there are appropriate research and public health interventions. Furthermore, due to limited research, current treatments for hepatitis C are effective in fewer than 50 percent of the cases. As such, hepatitis C is a leading cause for liver transplants in the United State, but the availability of liver transplants, as you know, falls far short of the need. These are numerous liver diseases other than hepatitis C such as primary biliary cirrhosis affecting 15 out of every 100,000 Americans with 95% of the infected population being women. Finally, there is an emerging obesity-related chronic liver disease, nonalcoholic fatty liver disease (NAFLD), that may affect as many as 1 in every 4 adults over the age of 18.

Mr. Miller, your legislation to create a National Center on Liver Disease Research at the National Institute of Diabetes and Digestive and Kidney Diseases (NIDDK) will provide the dedicated scientific leadership necessary to create an action plan for liver disease research, and new authorities necessary to help assure that the scientific opportunities identified by the Liver Disease Research Action Plan are adequately funded. The coordination and focus this Center will provide for liver disease research will help increase our ability to find better treatments and cures for the millions of Americans afflicted with liver diseases.

We thank you for your tireless leadership on this issue and for all of your persistence in working to better the health of the nation. We stand ready to support the passage of this legislation.

Sincerely,

PAUL D. BERK, MD,
Chairman of the Board of Directors,
ALAN P. BROWNSTEIN, MPH,
President and CEO.

HEPATITIS FOUNDATION INTERNATIONAL,
June 26, 2002.

Hon. Dan Miller,
Cannon House Office Bldg., Washington, DC.
DEAR CONGRESSMAN MILLER: Hepatitis Foundation International (HFI) would like to express our support for the Liver Research Enhancement Act.

As you know, approximately 10% of the nation's population suffer from liver, bile duct, or gallbladder disease and over 4 million Americans have been infected with Hepatitis C. The Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) has projected that deaths due to Hepatitis C will more than triple by the year 2010 to more than 30,000 deaths per year unless there are appropriate research and public health interventions.

Mr. Miller, your legislation to create a National Center on Liver Disease Research at the National Institute of Diabetes and Digestive and Kidney Diseases (NIDDK) will provide the leadership necessary to create an action plan for liver disease research. The coordination and focus of this Center will help increase our ability to find better treatments and cures for the millions of Americans suffering with liver diseases.

Thank you for your leadership on this issue and for your persistence in working to better the health of all Americans. We offer

H.R. 4481, THE AIRPORT STREAMLINING APPROVAL PROCESS ACT

SPEECH OF

HON. MAXINE WATERS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 9, 2002

Ms. WATERS. Mr. Speaker, I rise to express my opposition to H.R. 4481, the Airport Streamlining Approval Process Act, which encourages the construction of airport capacity expansion projects at congested airports like Los Angeles International Airport (LAX).

LAX is the third largest airport in the United States, serving approximately 65 million air passengers per year. Nevertheless, the operator of LAX had proposed a massive expansion plan that could have increased the airports' capacity to as many as 120 million air passengers per year. A diverse coalition of over 80 cities and several grassroots organizations, known as the Coalition for a Truly Regional Airport Plan, organized to oppose LAX expansion and support a regional approach to Southern California's air transportation needs.

The proposed expansion of LAX would have had a severe impact upon the surrounding communities. According to the Draft Environmental Impact Statement and Report released by LAX expansion proponents, increased traffic in and out of LAX would have added 1,592 tons of pollutants per year to Los Angeles' air; an additional 7,150 persons would have been exposed to noise levels above 65 decibels; and inadequate noise mitigation efforts would have forced residents to remain indoors or move. Because of these negative impacts, many residents of the surrounding communities expressed strong opposition to LAX expansion.

Furthermore, the proposed expansion of LAX would have interfered with the development of a regional solution to Southern California's air transportation needs. While the communities surrounding LAX have been forced to endure a disproportionate share of the region's air traffic, other communities are eager for the economic benefits of development at their local airports. The expansion of LAX would have made it extremely difficult for these communities to attract service to their local airports. Residents and businesses in these communities would have had no alternative other than to commute to an expanded LAX for their air transportation needs, resulting in an increase in traffic congestion on the streets surrounding LAX. Clearly, the proposed expansion of LAX would not have ended air transportation-related gridlock in the Southern California region.

On April 18, 2002, I sent a letter to Chairman MICA and Congressman LIPINSKI, the Chairman and Ranking Member of the Aviation Subcommittee of the House Transportation and Infrastructure Committee, regarding the effect of airport streamlining legislation on the Southern California region. This letter, which was signed by three other Southern California Representatives, explained that we would oppose any legislation that would prevent the State of California and its regional and local governments from enacting a regional solution to our future aviation needs, including limiting or prohibiting the proposed expansion of LAX.

Airport expansion should not be carried out over the objections of local communities. It would be both unfair and unwise for the Federal government to disregard local concerns or override the authority of state and local officials to plan local airport development.

I strongly oppose H.R. 4481, the Airport Streamlining Approval Process Act. Airport expansion is a local issue. It should not be encouraged by the Federal government.

H.R. 5094, GOOD GOVERNMENT ACCOUNTING ACT

HON. MARK STEVEN KIRK

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 11, 2002

Mr. KIRK. Mr. Speaker, our confidence in the financial information reported by U.S. corporations was shaken by the disclosures of accounting irregularities discovered on the books of some of the largest companies on the New York Stock Exchange. Congress is taking important steps to improve the financial reporting requirements for every public corporation. The public should have similar confidence in the financial information it hears about our own Federal Government. This is not an obscure subject—literally trillions of dollars are at stake.

Two laws—The Chief Financial Officers Act passed in 1990, and the Government Management Reform Act passed in 1994—require Federal executive branch agencies to prepare audited financial statements, in accordance with undefined "applicable standards." Who would set these standards and make sure they were fairly applied to all government agencies? In October 1990, the Secretary of the Treasury, Director of OMB and Comptroller General of the Government Accounting Office jointly agreed to create and sponsor the Federal Accounting Standards Advisory Board, better known as "FASAB," to play a major role in establishing the rules that assess the government's efficiency and effectiveness. FASAB is entirely different from the Financial Accounting Standards Board, or "FASB," that governs private sector standards.

In carrying out its mission, the government's FASAB has published 18 Federal Government accounting standards and four accounting interpretations, covering topics as diverse as direct student lending, social insurance, and deferred maintenance of federal property. In addition, FASAB writes technical bulletins and releases, and makes a public reading room available to any citizen who wants more information on Federal Government accounting standards.

On January 11, Treasury, OMB, and GAO published a Memorandum of Understanding, or MOU, that announced a restructuring of FASAB. This MOU is designed to enhance the independence of FASAB and increase public involvement in the setting standards process. It became effective June 30, 2002. I am introducing legislation that simply takes the President's MOU and puts it into law. This bill, called the "Good Government Accounting Act," has already gained bipartisan support. It establishes FASAB as an independent entity, operating under the terms of the structure that has just been put into force.

Like the private sector, the Federal Government can benefit from using unbiased, equitable accounting standards with disclosures that increase public understanding of how our government works. FASAB should exist by law—not just by agreement between Treasury, OMB, and GAO.

This bill, H.R. 5094, makes a major step forward to ensure that public accounting standards that govern trillions of dollars in taxpayer funds are well spent and reported accurately to the American people.

TEXTILE AND APPAREL RECOGNITION ACT (TARA)

HON. HOWARD COBLE

OF NORTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 11, 2002

Mr. COBLE. Mr. Speaker, today I am pleased to join with my colleague, Representative JOHN SPRATT, along with 40 other original cosponsors to introduce the "Textile and Apparel Recognition Act" (TARA). This legislation recognizes the significant contributions the U.S. textile industry continues to make to our economy while also acknowledging that this industry is confronting a terrible crisis and deserves our attention.

Though it still employs nearly half a million Americans, the textile industry is in a state of crisis. Since 1994, a staggering 675,000 jobs have been lost in textiles and apparel. Last year alone the industry lost nearly 150,000 jobs and 2002 appears to be more of the same. These negative effects are not only being felt by the many thousands of textile workers who have lost their jobs, but by our local communities and states as well. As tax revenues have fallen as a result of plant closings, funding for schools, water infrastructure improvements, and basic services, such as garbage collection, have also been negatively affected.

Closed foreign markets, which persist despite trade policies that have opened our own markets; continuing large-scale customs fraud and transshipment; and currency devaluation in several textile-producing nations along with a strong dollar have all contributed to a prolonged period of industry-wide downsizing and plant closings. Those of us representing U.S. textile and apparel producers have seen thousands and thousands of jobs in our districts disappear.

We remain encouraged by the attention this administration has given to the crisis confronting this important sector of our economy and believe that this resolution offers an opportunity to show our support for continued efforts in this regard. I encourage my colleagues to join with us in this effort by cosponsoring this resolution, and I thank the Speaker for yielding me this time.

TRIBUTE TO QUEEN CHAPEL
A.M.E. CHURCH

HON. JAMES E. CLYBURN

OF SOUTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 11, 2002

Mr. CLYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to Queen Chapel African Methodist Episcopal (A.M.E.) Church on the occasion of their celebration of a new sanctuary after 136 years. It was my hope to join the congregation at the dedication and a daylong jubilee celebration this coming Saturday.

Queen Chapel A.M.E. Church is not only the oldest church on Hilton Head Island, but also the oldest A.M.E. church in the State of South Carolina. Queen Chapel represents the rich Gullah-Geechee cultural history and religious heritage that is characteristic of the coastal Sea Islands.

Queen Chapel A.M.E. Church was founded when Minister Richard Harvey Cain—who served in this body for four years—Reverend James A. Johnson, and Reverend James Handy arrived on Hilton Head Island in the area called Cherry Hill. As they waited for a violent storm to pass over, they decided to have church services with prayer and singing under a large, oak tree. This was to be an historic event because it was where the African Methodist Episcopal religion began in the state of South Carolina.

The property where Queen Chapel now sits was purchased from W.D. Brown in 1886, and the first church was built on September 11, 1892. The pastor of Queen Chapel during that era was Reverend R.C. Williams, and the presiding elder was Reverend P.W. Jefferson. Some of the Church's early members include Abraham Grant; Ben Singleton, Sr.; Jake Green; Ceasar Johnson; Paul Edwards; Ed Green; Perry Ward; Sarah Grant; Joe Jones; Ben Jones; Harry Burke; John Burke; John Henry Perry; Nellie Perry; Fannie Burke; Christina Williams; Martha Goff; Sarah Singleton; Mary Cannick; Maria Green; Blind Joe Ellis; Backus Johnson; Julia Reed; Lula Jones; Chamberlin Robinson; Mae Bell Simmons; and Ida Singleton. Later members were Charlie Singleton; Willie Singleton; Mae Bell Aiken; Beulah Kellerson; Raymond Perry; James Grant, Sr.; Viola Murray; Marion Aiken, Sr.; William Kellerson; William Brown, Sr.; Abraham Johnson; John Patterson; and many others whose relatives are still members of the congregation today.

The present church was built in 1954, with the Reverend S.C. Washington serving as pastor, the Reverend F.M. Reid as Bishop, and the Reverend J.C. James as presiding elder. The officers credited with building the new church were James Grant, Sr.; Solomon Grant, Sr.; John Patterson; Marion Aiken, Sr.; William Kellerson; Abraham Johnson; and Leander Cannick, Sr., just to name a few.

The new facilities of this prominent church on Hilton Head Island will not only serve the Queen Chapel congregation, but will also serve the entire community with considerations for amenities such as day care and after school tutoring.

Mr. Speaker, I ask you and my colleagues to join me today in honoring Queen Chapel A.M.E. Church which is raising another sanctuary after 136 years on the same hallowed grounds. I wish the congregation and surrounding community Good Luck and God-speed on this special occasion.

RECOGNIZING THE 19TH ANNUAL FREMONT FESTIVAL OF THE ARTS

HON. FORTNEY PETE STARK

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 11, 2002

Mr. STARK. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to the 19th Annual Fremont Festival of the Arts sponsored by the Fremont Chamber of Commerce.

The two-day Festival, to be held on July 27 and 28, 2002, is expected to attract over 450,000 attendees and has become a model of success for the modern festival. This single event provides some $400,000 in contributions to non-profits for the betterment of communities in Fremont, California.

Over 800 artists, 40 culinary selections and 20 musical groups will be featured at the Festival. Three thousand volunteers give willingly of their time to contribute to the Festival's success.

It takes generous and concerned individuals, such as the volunteers, to reach out and make a difference, ensuring promise and opportunity for this and future generations. It also takes the support of business sponsors and patrons to ensure the success of the Festival.

The Festival typifies the spirit of community service, which is alive and thriving in Fremont. I am proud to salute the efforts of this year's Festival Chairman, David M. O'Hara and Fremont Chamber of Commerce CEO Cindy Bonilor, the organizers, the volunteers, the sponsors and the patrons of the Fremont Festival of the Arts for their generous and inspiring efforts to ensure continued success.

UNDERGRADUATE SCIENCE, MATHEMATICS, ENGINEERING, AND

IMPROVEMENT ACT

SPEECH OF

HON. ANNA G. ESHOO

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 9, 2002

Ms. ESHOO. Mr. Speaker, I rise as a cosponsor and in support of this important bill.

Despite predictions for an increase in jobs requiring technical skills over the next decade, the number of students graduating with degrees in the sciences has decreased during the last decade.

This pattern has had serious ramifications for our nation's economic growth.

The H1-B visa increase we passed two years ago was a reflection of the failure of our educational system to produce students with strong proficiency in math, science and engineering . . . this bill addresses this failure.

The Tech Talent Bill is innovative legislation that will help reverse current trends by rewarding colleges and universities for taking steps to increase the numbers of science and engineering majors.

A relatively small investment made through the grants authorized in this bill will seed U.S. companies with the employees they need to remain competitive in a global marketplace.

By providing these financial incentives, we will not only be strengthening our own workforce but also lessening our dependence on foreign experts who may be here on H1-B visas.

I urge my colleagues to support this bill and look forward to its swift passage.

SENATE—Friday, July 12, 2002

The Senate met at 9:15 a.m., on the expiration of the recess, and was called to order by the Honorable DEBBIE STABENOW, a Senator from the State of Michigan.

PRAYER

The Chaplain, Dr. Lloyd John Ogilvie, offered the following prayer:

Blessed God, we praise You for this new day. You gave us good rest last night, replenishing our souls and our bodies. You awakened us with the reminder that this is Your day and You will show the way. With awe and wonder we acknowledge that any wisdom we will have will be a gift from You. You have given the Senators oversight of this Nation; now give them insight to know and do Your will. Give them humility to ask for a clear picture of Your best for each of the challenges ahead and for how they are to vote on the crucial legislation before them. You give wisdom to the humble, vision to the open-minded, and guidance to the receptive. Bless these Senators today, dear God. You are our Lord and Saviour. Amen.

PLEDGE OF ALLEGIANCE

The Honorable DEBBIE STABENOW led the Pledge of Allegiance, as follows:

I pledge allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America, and to the Republic for which it stands, one nation under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all.

APPOINTMENT OF ACTING PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will please read a communication to the Senate from the President pro tempore (Mr. BYRD).

The legislative clerk read the following letter:

U.S. SENATE,
PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE,
Washington, DC, July 12, 2002.

To the Senate:

Under the provisions of rule I, paragraph 3, of the Standing Rules of the Senate, I hereby appoint the Honorable DEBBIE STABENOW, a Senator from the State of Michigan, to perform the duties of the Chair.

ROBERT C. BYRD,
President pro tempore.

Ms. STABENOW thereupon assumed the chair as Acting President pro tempore.

RECOGNITION OF THE ACTING MAJORITY LEADER

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nevada is recognized.

SCHEDULE

Mr. REID. Madam President, the two managers will be here shortly. Senator SARBANES is now here. The vote will occur at 9:30 a.m. There are a number of people who have requested I not extend the time because they have work to do. So we will vote at 9:30 a.m. Additional rollcall votes could be possible until 12 noon today. As indicated last night, there will be votes Monday afternoon beginning at 2 o'clock.

RESERVATION OF LEADER TIME

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, the leadership time is reserved.

PUBLIC COMPANY ACCOUNTING REFORM AND INVESTOR PROTECTION ACT OF 2002

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, the Senate will now resume consideration of S. 2673, which the clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 2673) to improve quality and transparency in financial reporting and independent audits and accounting services for public companies, to create a Public Company Accounting Oversight Board, to enhance the standard setting process for accounting practices, to strengthen the independence of firms that audit public companies, to increase corporate responsibility and the usefulness of corporate financial disclosure, to protect the objectivity and independence of securities analysts, to improve Securities and Exchange Commission resources and oversight, and for other purposes.

Pending:

Edwards modified amendment No. 4187, to address rules of professional responsibility for attorneys.

Daschle (for Levin) amendment No. 4269 (to amendment No. 4187), to address procedures for banning certain individuals from serving as officers or directors of publicly traded companies, civil money penalties, obtaining financial records, broadened enforcement authority, and forfeiture of bonuses and profits.

McCain motion to recommit the bill to the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs with instructions to report back forthwith with amendment No. 4270, to require publicly traded companies to record and treat stock options as expenses when granted for purposes of their income statements.

Reid (for Edwards) amendment No. 4271 (to the instructions of the motion to recommit the bill to the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs), to address rules of professional responsibility for attorneys.

Reid (for Levin) amendment No. 4272 (to amendment No. 4271), to address procedures for banning certain individuals from serving as officers or directors of publicly traded companies, civil money penalties, obtaining financial records, broadened enforcement authority, and forfeiture of bonuses and profits.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, the time until 9:30 a.m. shall be equally divided between the two managers for debate only. Who yields time?

The Senator from Maryland.

Mr. SARBANES. Madam President, I understand there will be about 5 minutes allotted each manager now. Is that correct?

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator is correct.

Mr. SARBANES. Madam President, very shortly we will be voting on a cloture petition with respect to this legislation, S. 2673. I urge my colleagues to vote for the cloture motion.

I know there are a lot of amendments pending, but we have now been on this legislation a full week. Even with the voting of cloture today, this matter will carry over into next week. There have been a range of amendments, some that are pending that are germane under cloture to the bill. In other words, they have been drawn in a way and the subject matter is focused and limited enough that they remain germane even after cloture.

There are a number of amendments that are relevant to the bill but not germane. Once cloture is invoked, they will fall. I know that is a matter of some concern to those who are proposing those amendments, but I do not know how we can handle this differently and move along towards a resolution.

In addition to those relevant amendments—and I have sympathy there because while they may not meet the very narrow definition of germaneness, they do touch the subject matter of the legislation—there are also amendments that are not even relevant to the bill that are sort of—I was going to say floating around, but it would be more accurate to say they are sort of present. They touch matters that have nothing to do with this legislation.

I am frank to say to my colleagues, I do not see how we can progress and move towards a final vote and resolution on this issue without invoking cloture this morning. We tried not to precipitate that early on, although I know people were then blocked from getting votes, and I regret that. I was concerned, as anyone, to get the votes and give people a chance to have their amendments considered. Nevertheless, we are now where we are, and I urge my colleagues to vote for cloture.

We have to move forward on this legislation. This is important legislation.

I think the committee and my colleagues have fashioned legislation which will make a very important contribution toward addressing the serious economic challenge now confronting the country and this loss of confidence in the workings of our economic system. The fact that people cannot have any trust in or reliance on the basic financial information upon which they make important economic decisions is having a major impact on the workings of the economy and carries with it the very real potential of having an even more significant impact.

This is serious business, and the potential for an economic downturn, triggered in part by the difficulties we are trying to address in this legislation, I think is not insignificant. So I think it is important that we move forward and pass this legislation. This is but one step along the way, and there are many steps left yet to be done.

I am hopeful at some point the administration will come to see the necessity of putting into place a statutory framework to provide for an independent oversight board with respect to the accounting industry, to address the conflict that exists on the part of auditors when they are the auditor of a company and at the same time are providing certain consulting services to the company which carry with them an inherent conflict of interest with their responsibilities as an auditor.

There are extensive provisions in this bill with respect to corporate responsibility and accountability with respect to corporate disclosure and, of course, with respect to the conflict of interest we have seen manifest with respect to stock analysts who are often in the position of giving buy recommendations on the stock of a company with which the analyst's company is also having investment banking deals which, of course, raises the question: Is the recommendation on the stock being done in order to gain the investment banking business? So we try to provide some, as they call them, Chinese walls between those two sides of the company in order to reduce the degree of that conflict.

Furthermore, this has a very significant authorization of additional monies for the SEC in order to be able to meet its responsibilities, which I think is very important. The President asked the other day in his address for another $100 million. That is not sufficient. We have to do better than that so the SEC can do its job.

So we can move forward, I urge my colleagues to support the cloture motion which will be before us for a vote at 9:30.

I presume I have used my time, and I yield the floor so my colleague, the ranking Republican Member, may use his time.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Texas.

Mr. GRAMM. Madam President, we need to pass a bill. We are going to conference with a House bill that is substantially different from this bill. I believe that between the two bills, we can find a virtually unanimous vote. I think we can write a bill that will satisfy the President and both Houses of Congress. I do not think we are making the bill better. The amendments that are being offered now are largely non-germane. We have gotten into sort of a one-upmanship position, and I think we are harming the markets by convincing people that the cure may very well be worse than the disease.

It is very important that we get on with our business and that we pass this bill. I intend to vote for it today. I do not think it is the bill we need in the end, but it gets us to conference where we can get the bill we need in the end. I urge my Republican colleagues to vote for it, not because in the end they are for this version but because they want to do something. We need to bring this debate to a close. We do have some germane amendments. We will be dealing with those, but the time has come to get on about our business. Getting on about our business means bringing this debate to a close.

So I urge my colleagues to vote to end the debate. Let us go to conference. Let us write this bill. Let us let it be known with certainty what our policy is going to be. If we do that, it will help restore confidence in the country. So I urge my colleagues to vote for cloture and, as we get to the end of the process, for the bill.

I yield back the remainder of my time.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Michigan.

Mr. LEVIN. I do not know if the manager has any time.

Mr. SARBANES. Do I have any time remaining?

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The manager has no time.

Mr. LEVIN. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that I be allowed to proceed until 9:30 when cloture is invoked.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. LEVIN. Madam President, a number of amendments have been pending where we have been unable to get a vote. These are highly relevant amendments, including mine which would have given the SEC administrative powers to impose civil fines.

The Republican manager said the amendments were not particularly relevant. Well, we had a highly relevant amendment that goes directly to the issue of abuses by corporate officers and corporate directors. The current fine structure of the SEC does not reach officers and does not reach directors, except by going to court. They have no administrative authority in the SEC to impose civil fines, the way they do with brokers and the way a lot of other agencies that regulate business have authority to do. The SEC does not have the power to impose administrative fines on directors and on officers of corporations. They should have that power administratively.

We were blocked in getting a vote, and the amendment which is pending is going to fall if cloture is invoked. That is the use of the rules. But let it be clear what the rules were used to do, which was to prevent a strengthening amendment for this bill.

It is a good bill. I compliment the sponsors of this bill. I compliment Senator SARBANES and his cosponsors that this bill can be strengthened; it should be strengthened. One of the strengthening amendments was blocked from getting to a vote yesterday and will fall if cloture is invoked.

We also have a question. What about postcloture? There are 48 germane or arguably germane amendments. The question is whether or not the rules are going to be used again to block votes on germane amendments. I will object to that happening. I will do everything I can to make sure germane amendments, including some that I have filed, are considered postcloture.

I thank the manager for yielding. I yield the floor.

CLOTURE MOTION

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, the clerk will report the motion to invoke cloture.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

CLOTURE MOTION

We, the undersigned Senators, in accordance with the provisions of rule XXII of the Standing Rules of the Senate, do hereby move to bring to a close the debate on Calendar No. 442, S. 2673, the Public Company Accounting Reform and Investor Protection Act of 2002:

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. By unanimous consent, the mandatory quorum has been waived.

The question is, Is it the sense of the Senate that debate on S. 2673, the Public Company Accounting Reform and Investor Protection Act of 2002, shall be brought to a close? The yeas and nays are required under the rule. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. REID. I announce that the Senator from Hawaii (Mr. INOUE), the Senator from Massachusetts (Mr. KERRY), and the Senator from Louisiana (Ms. LANDRIEU) are necessarily absent.

Mr. NICKLES. I announce that the Senator from North Carolina (Mr. HELMS), the Senator from Ohio (Mr.

VOLINOVICH), the Senator from Idaho (Mr. CRAPO), and the Senator from Virginia (Mr. WARNER) are necessarily absent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there any other Senators in the Chamber desiring to vote?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CARPER). On this vote, the yeas are 91, the nays are 2. Three-fifths of the Senators duly chosen and sworn having voted in the affirmative, the motion is agreed to.

The pending motion to recommit is out of order.

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. DASCHLE. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senate is not in order. The Senate will be in order. The Senate is not in order.

The Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, we can have order in the Senate with Senators in their seats. At least they do not need to be cluttering up the well. I want to say a few words.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will be in order. The Senator will suspend.

Mr. GRAMM addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia has the floor.

Mr. BYRD. I have the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia.

SUPPLEMENTAL APPROPRIATIONS

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, no committee in this Senate works harder than the Appropriations Committee. We have been working for months on the supplemental appropriations bill. We held hearings, months ago now, on the supplemental appropriations bill, hearings specifically concerning budget requests for homeland security.

The administration put its feet in cement and its head in the sand and adamantly opposed the committee's request, which was in writing, and signed by Mr. STEVENS and myself, to have Mr. Ridge come up and testify so that the Appropriations Committee in the Senate, following a practice of 135 years of having witnesses appear in open sessions so that the people can hear what they said—the administration did not want that, and the President put a muzzle on his Homeland Security Director and said, no, he will not come.

Mr. STEVENS and I wrote a joint letter asking for an appointment with the President. We wanted to state our case. The President did not answer that letter. No. Some underling answered the letter.

So we had to proceed. We did. We proceeded as best we could. The full committee had excellent hearings over a period of 5 days, with testimony from firemen, policemen, local health officials, also testimony from seven Cabinet Members and the Director of FEMA.

So we proceeded as best we could. We put together a bill we thought was a good bill. Then, however, the President threatened to veto it because it had too much money, in his way of looking at it, too much money for homeland security. So there was the threat to veto the bill.

Only this week—perhaps it was Monday—the President, in a speech, assailed Congress for “delay” in getting this appropriations bill downtown, saying the Defense Department is hard up for moneys. So Mr. YOUNG, chairman of the House Appropriations Committee, Mr. OBEY, Mr. STEVENS, and I have been meeting. We met yesterday and we thought we had the whole thing pretty much wrapped up and that we could meet this morning in full committee and vote the conference report out, and send it back to both Houses for their judgments.

Lo and behold! At 7 o'clock last night, here comes a request from the White House to hold up further action. They want to send up a different budget.

So, who is holding up defense? The President, in a public speech, lambasts the Congress for not getting this appropriations bill to him sooner. We have been wanting to go with the President and get this bill on his desk, but he just has not supported the efforts of the appropriations members on both sides of the Capitol to move this bill, first withholding Mr. Ridge, who is the point man for the administration on homeland security, adamantly refusing to let him testify; then threatening to veto the bill. This is a difficult bill. The staffs work into the night around here on this bill; we try to work hard to get the bill down to the President. He assails the Congress for not sending the bill to him, saying that if he doesn't have it by a certain hour or day, it is going to affect the national defense, going to affect the military with personnel reductions and so on.

So we were prepared today to have a conference. I want all appropriations members within the sound of my voice to know that the meeting is canceled. Canceled, why? I understand that Mr. YOUNG is going to call me to tell me that it is canceled at the request of the Speaker of the House, who often acts at the request of the White House, I assume.

Mr. STEVENS. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRD. I don't mean any disrespect to the Speaker. I am just saying how this is being put off. Yes, I will, just in a moment, if I may.

I am upset about it. I am the chairman of this Appropriations Committee. I have never seen the appropriations process so meddled in and delayed by the White House. I know that Mr. YOUNG is doing this at the request of the White House. They want to send up a new budget right at the last minute, 7 o'clock last night. Mitch Daniels, I understand—

Mr. STEVENS. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRD. I will yield right in the middle of my sentence.

Mr. STEVENS. I am sorry to do this, Mr. President, but my distinguished friend, our chairman, I think is implying that this was done at the request of the White House. That is not my information. It was a decision of the Speaker because the Office of Management and Budget has not delivered to us the information we need to close this bill. The Speaker asked, notwithstanding the White House request that we get the bill done today, that we wait until we get the information from the Office of Management and Budget.

If the Senator will let me have one other comment, then I will yield back. I apologize for interrupting the distinguished President pro tempore, chairman of our committee, but the difficulty is this: We have faced such an enormous demand from the Office of Management and Budget to adhere to a line, a top line barrier that the Office of Management and Budget is willing to accept, $1.6 billion from the airline bill, airline supplemental bill, stabilization bill, that expired.

We have such a blind mindset down there about top lines that we are unwilling to look at reality. The reality is, the Senate and the House have worked, and we are almost closed, and now we are waiting for some more Enron-type offsets, offsets that are meaningless in order to justify this top line mentality with which we are dealing.

From my point of view, I think we should go see the President. I am going to ask to see the President. I have been here 34 years, not nearly as long as my friend from West Virginia, but I, too, have never gone through a period as I have gone through on this supplemental. This is not worthy of the constitutional process at all, and it is time we had an understanding of what the role of the Congress is with regard to appropriations.

Right now we face this demand, and because we wanted to get the bill out, we did meet with the Office of Management and Budget Director last night. Our staffs worked late into the night, and we came to an agreement about what we would do. But the Office of Management and Budget was to submit rescissions to us or at least changes in their budget by 8 a.m. this morning. They are not here.

But the Senator from West Virginia is absolutely right, part of it is a reduction in defense. We fought to increase defense. Some of these offsets may make a little sense in this sense; that the supplemental was submitted to us in March and there certainly has been a series of months pass by that people were not paid to carry out the work that was covered by the supplemental. That would be a legitimate offset, if it were identified properly.

We were told last night that there was such a list. When we asked to see it, it didn't appear. When we asked for it to appear here by 8, it was agreed to, to be here by 8. It didn't appear this morning either, hardly worthy of people who are working for the President.

The only thing on which I cannot agree with my friend from West Virginia is that this is the President. The President is ill served by what is going on, in my opinion. I hope people understand: This is blind adherence to a line that was established—a crazy line, in my opinion—without regard to the needs of the country at all, and we are asked now to get down on our knees and really thank God for this list when it comes. But I have to tell you, my good friend, I am up to here with this process. People know I have a short fuse anyway. I hope to calm down before I see the President, but I do thank the Senator from West Virginia for yielding to me.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished Senator from Alaska. He is precisely on point. If I have presumed to err in my judgment as to what was going on exactly in the process and have cast any reflection on the Speaker of the other body, I apologize for doing that.

My colleague is correct: This Office of Management and Budget, as far as I am concerned, is just above my ears. Upon what meat doth this our little Caesar feed? I am talking about Mitch Daniels, the Director of OMB. He is always meddling, always meddling in the Congress, in its work and in appropriations. Not only that; he is always lecturing the Congress. I have never mentioned his name publicly until now. But I am fed up to my ears also.

The appropriations process is being mangled. It is being maimed. It is being murdered at the hands of someone who is not elected by the people of this country. What bar of judgment does he stand before?

I repeat, "Upon what meat doth this our Caesar feed that he is become so great?"

I want to voice my disappointment in the circumstances that have brought about a cancellation of this appropriations conference today. If I have said something amiss here, which Mr. STEVENS felt I might have, I certainly apologize for that. But I am just fed up. I am tired. I am tired of this mangling of the appropriations process. Here is this outfit, blows into town like a tornado and they are going to change the tone in Washington. And the tone has been changed. It is to the nth degree worse than what it has ever been before. I wish the President would step in and stop this interruption, this mangling of the appropriations process, this meddling by his Office of Management and Budget director, and stop that bigmouth down there from constantly meddling in appropriations bills and criticizing the Congress.

That man, Mitch Daniels, is not elected by anybody. I hate to say this about a man. I like him personally, but he just goes too far. I am tired of it. We have Members who had planned to leave town, who canceled their trips, believing they were going to have this meeting this morning and that we would wrap up this appropriations bill and send it down to the President.

I don't want to hear anybody in the administration accusing the Congress of delay in passing this bill. It is on their table. Let them come into court with clean hands before they attack the Congress.

I am sorry to my colleagues for taking so much of their time. I am sorry profusely, I say, to the members of the Appropriations Committee who were here and who made changes in their day's schedule on the presumption that we were going to have a conference. I don't know when we will have a meeting. I suppose it will be soon.

I hope those Senators who are attempting to hold up the military construction bill, because of the need for moneys to help their States and districts in the case of floods and fires and drought, will desist. That is what a supplemental is for. We have a supplemental now. Let's do something about the drought, the fires, and the floods in this supplemental. It is my desire, as chairman of the Appropriations Committee, to get all of these appropriations bills passed by the beginning of the new fiscal year. We are going to do that. Mr. STEVENS and I worked hard on this.

I yield the floor.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DORGAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

Mr. REID. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard. The clerk will continue calling the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk continued with the call of the roll.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection—

Mr. REID. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard. The clerk will continue calling the roll.

The legislative clerk continued with the call of the roll.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

Mr. REID. I object, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard. The clerk will continue calling the roll.

The legislative clerk continued with the call of the roll.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The objection is heard.

The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

PUBLIC COMPANY ACCOUNTING AND INVESTOR PROTECTION ACT
OF 2002—Continued

Mr. REID. Mr. President, will the Chair inform us what the matter before the Senate now is?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Daschle second-degree amendment to the Edwards first-degree amendment.

Mr. REID. That is Daschle for Levin; is that not right?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct.

The Senator from Nevada.

Mr. ENSIGN. Mr. President, I raise a point of order that the pending second-degree amendment is not germane to the bill postcloture.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is well taken. The amendment falls.

The deputy majority leader.

AMENDMENT NO. 4286, AS MODIFIED, TO
AMENDMENT NO. 4187

Mr. REID. I call up amendment No. 4286, and I ask unanimous consent that Carnahan amendment No. 4286 be modified with the change at the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Nevada [Mr. REID], for Mrs. CARNAHAN, for herself, Mr. DODD, Mr. DURBIN, Mr. LEVIN, Mr. HARKIN, and Mr. CORZINE, proposes an amendment numbered 4286, as modified, to amendment No. 4187.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

(Purpose: To require timely and public disclosure of transactions involving management and principal stockholders)

At the end of the amendment, insert the following:

(b) ELECTRONIC FILING.—Notwithstanding the provisions of section 403 of this Act, section 16(a)(2) of the Securities and Exchange Act of 1934, as added by section 403, is amended to read as follows:

“(2) if there has been a change in such ownership, or if such person shall have purchased or sold a security-based swap agreement (as defined in section 206B of the Gramm-Leach-Bliley Act) involving such equity security, shall file electronically with the Commission (and if such security is registered on a national securities exchange, shall also file with the exchange), a statement before the end of the second business day following the day on which the subject transaction has been executed, or at such other times as the Commission shall establish, by rule, in any case in which the Commission determines that such 2 day period is not feasible, and the Commission shall provide that statement on a publicly accessible Internet site not later than the end of the business day following that filing, and the issuer (if the issuer maintains a corporate website) shall provide that statement on that corporate website not later than the end of the business day following that filing (the requirements of this paragraph with respect to electronic filing and providing the statement on a corporate website shall take effect 1 year after the date of enactment of this paragraph), indicating ownership by that person at the date of filing, any such changes in such ownership, and such purchases and sales of the security-based swap agreements as have occurred since the most recent such filing under this paragraph.”.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri.

Mrs. CARNAHAN. Mr. President, I am offering this amendment on behalf of myself and Senators DODD, DUBBIN, LEVIN, HARKIN, and CORZINE.

The Senate is engaged in an important debate about how to improve our Nation's financial system. Today I am offering an amendment that is intended to provide more timely information to average investors. America has the most vibrant and dynamic economy in the world. Our robust and resilient capital markets are the foundation of our economy. But the success of those markets depends on the free flow of accurate, reliable information.

Recent disclosures about the inaccuracy of some companies' financial reports have shaken that confidence. I am pleased the Senate has acted quickly to take up this important reform legislation. I believe that this bill makes tremendous progress in improving the quality of information available to the markets. In the interest of further improvement, I am offering an amendment to modernize the method of disclosure required when insiders trade in their own companies' stock.

One warning sign that a company may be in trouble is when its executives are selling large amounts of company stock, as occurred at Enron. I have learned, however, that information about insider selling is not easily accessible.

Under our current system a company's officers are required to file a disclosure form with the Securities and Exchange Commission, SEC, any time they sell securities of their company. Tens of thousands of these forms are filed annually. These are not complicated forms. I have a copy here. It is a simple 2-page form.

The Office of Management and Budget estimates that the form should not take more than 30 minutes to fill out. With capital markets as sophisticated as they are in the U.S., information must be available quickly to be useful. However, insiders currently have up to six weeks to file their disclosure forms. And the overwhelming majority of these forms—95 percent—are filed on paper, rather than electronically.

The Banking Committee has already addressed the issue of timely disclosure. This legislation would require disclosure of sales within 2 days, a vast improvement over the current deadlines. However, this legislation is silent on the issue of modernizing this arcane paper filing system.

Right now, there is no way for an investor in Missouri to quickly learn that a company executive is selling off company stock. The only ways to get the information are to go to a reading room at the SEC in Washington, or to write a letter to the SEC. These written requests may take weeks to process. This is unacceptable in the electronic age.

My amendment requires that information about insider sales of publicly traded companies be filed electronically. The SEC would then be required to make the forms available to the public over the Internet. Any company that maintains a corporate Web site would be required to post these disclosure forms on the Web site. The SEC, itself, has acknowledged the value of having these forms filed electronically.

I have here a letter from SEC Chairman, Harvey Pitt. He wrote to me that “expedited disclosure of trading by company insiders is imperative.” In fact, he applauded the legislation I introduced earlier this year that requires electronic disclosure.

I ask unanimous consent that a copy of this letter be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

U.S. SECURITIES AND EXCHANGE COMMISSION,
Washington, DC, March 1, 2002.

Hon. JEAN CARNAHAN,
U.S. Senate, Hart Office Building,
Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR CARNAHAN: Thank you for your February 14th letter regarding S. 1897, the Fully Informed Investor Act which you recently introduced. I share your concerns about the issues regarding reporting of insiders' securities transactions that your bill addresses. As we announced on February 13th, the Commission will shortly propose rules that would provide accelerated reporting by companies of insider transactions in public company securities. This is an integral part of our effort to supplement the periodic disclosure system with “current disclosure” in order to put information investors want and need into their hands more promptly.

I also share the view reflected in your bill that expedited electronic disclosure of trading by company insiders is imperative, and I applaud your initiative. As you know, the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, rather than rules adopted by the Commission, sets the deadlines for officers, directors and beneficial owners of ten percent of a class of equity securities of a public company to report their trading in those securities. A legislative solution, therefore, will be necessary to address fully the issue of investors' timely access to information about insiders' securities transactions.

While formal Commission comment on legislation is normally reserved for testimony or a response to a request from a committee or subcommittee given jurisdiction over the bill, we would welcome the opportunity to provide you with technical assistance on your bill if you would find that helpful. I have asked Casey Carter, the Director of our Office of Legislative Affairs, to contact your staff to see if you would like our assistance. Please feel free to call me or to have your staff call Ms. Carter at (202) 942-0019 if you have any questions.

Yours truly,

HARVEY L. PITT.

Mrs. CARNAHAN. This is not a new idea. In fact, more than 2 years ago, in April 2000, the SEC published a rulemaking for its electronic data system. In that rulemaking, the SEC indicated that it "anticipated" making insiders file disclosure forms electronically. I applaud the SEC for recognizing the need to modernize, but I am frustrated by the delay. It has been over 2 years since the SEC made this proposal.

An agency that is responsible for monitoring markets where trillions of dollars are electronically exchanged ought to be able to develop a fairly simple electronic database to make this information available.

The Senate now has the opportunity to require the SEC to move quickly. I am very pleased that the bill I introduced earlier this year on this subject was included in the House accounting reform bill. The House has required that insiders file electronically, within one day of their transactions. The House has also required that corporations disclose insider sales on their corporate Web sites.

I encourage my colleagues to support my amendment. We should not make investors wait any longer for these basic reforms.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. DORGAN. Mr. President, I have an amendment at the desk.

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, I ask to be heard on the Carnahan amendment very briefly. Does the Senator mind?

Mr. DORGAN. How briefly?

Mr. DODD. Two minutes or so.

Mr. DORGAN. I am happy to yield to the Senator from Connecticut, provided that I am recognized following his presentation.

Mr. DODD. I appreciate that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, I commend my colleague from Missouri for this very fine amendment. I think it is going to make a strong difference by improving electronic reporting. It doesn't get the kind of attention it should.

This is a positive and constructive suggestion. I am a cosponsor of the amendment and commend the distinguished Senator from Missouri for offering the amendment. It makes the bill stronger. It is something all our colleagues will be willing to support. I commend the Senator for her work.

AMENDMENT NO. 4215, AS MODIFIED

Mr. DORGAN. Mr. President, I have an amendment numbered 4215 at the desk. I have submitted a modification of that amendment which I believe has been reviewed by both sides. I ask for its immediate consideration and I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be modified.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to laying aside the pending amendment of the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. SARBANES. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. DORGAN. I am happy to yield.

Mr. SARBANES. Is this the amendment that deals with the offshore companies?

Mr. DORGAN. Yes.

Mr. SARBANES. I have no objection to setting aside the pending amendments in order to consider this amendment. I understand upon the conclusion of the consideration of this amendment we will revert to the Edwards-Carnahan amendment.

Mr. SCHUMER. Reserving the right to object, I believe I have two amendments that have been cleared by both sides. I would like to offer them immediately after the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. SARBANES. We are hoping to get to the Senator from New York. I make a unanimous consent request that following the disposition of the amendment of the Senator from North Dakota, we turn to the amendments referred to by the Senator from New York.

Mr. ENSIGN. Provided that no second-degree amendments are in order to any of the three amendments.

Mr. SARBANES. Furthermore, upon conclusion of the consideration of the Schumer amendments, we return to the regular order, which I take it would be the Edwards-Carnahan amendment.

Mr. REID. Reserving the right to object, Senator SCHUMER has a number of amendments on the list. I think we better get numbers of those amendments before there is an agreement they be next in order.

Mr. SARBANES. Let us withdraw the unanimous consent request and make it only that Senator SCHUMER be recognized after the disposition of the Dorgan amendment and we can address those questions.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. ENSIGN. Reserving the right to object, just to make sure we have this clarified, the unanimous consent request is just to the Dorgan amendment pending, and we would not object as long as the second-degree amendment is not in order to his amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. DORGAN. Mr. President, first of all I will offer an amendment that I believe will be accepted. I understand the process is that those who have amendments that will be accepted will be allowed to offer them and those whose amendments are not approved by both sides will not be allowed to offer them. In my judgment, this is not the kind of procedure we ought to use when considering this legislation. But I understand the Senator from Texas indicated he will object to setting aside or laying aside an amendment for the purpose of offering another first-degree amendment unless he agrees with the amendment. I will talk a little bit more about that in a couple of minutes.

I had asked unanimous consent my amendment be modified. Was the consent agreed?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It was agreed to.

Mr. DORGAN. Is amendment No. 4215 called up at this point?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending amendment is set aside and the clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. DORGAN], for himself and Mr. GRAHAM of Florida, proposes an amendment numbered 4215, as modified.

Mr. DORGAN. I ask unanimous consent reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

(Purpose: To clarify that the requirement that certain officers certify financial reports applies to domestic and foreign issuers)

(c) FOREIGN REINCORPORATIONS HAVE NO EFFECT.—Nothing in this section 302 shall be interpreted or applied in any way to allow any issuer to lessen the legal force of the statement required under this section 302, by an issuer having reincorporated or having engaged in any other transaction that resulted in the transfer of the corporate domicile or offices of the issuer from inside the United States to outside of the United States.

Mr. DORGAN. Let me describe what this amendment is briefly. There was a Wall Street Journal article on July 8 this week titled: "Offshore-based Firm's Officials Won't Have to Swear to Results."

The Securities and Exchange Commission's new order requiring chief executives and chief financial officers of the nation's biggest companies to swear to the accuracy of their financial results was intended to restore investors' battered confidence. But two of the companies that have promised the biggest concerns don't have to comply.

Why? Because Tyco International Ltd. and Global Crossing Ltd. are based in Bermuda, even though they conduct many of their operations and have main office in the United States and are listed on the U.S. stock exchanges.

Securities and Exchange Commission spokesmen said large foreign-domiciled companies over which the SEC has jurisdiction, such as and Global Crossing and Tyco, were excluded from the list because the agency wanted to issue the order "very quickly." Therefore it focused only on U.S. companies.

So the Securities and Exchange Commission says that the chief executives and chief financial officers of some of the biggest companies must swear to the accuracy of their financial results. But in recent times, we have had U.S. corporations decide that they want to renounce their American citizenship and they want to become citizens, for example, of Bermuda. That is called a corporate inversion. They have essentially renounced their American citizenship, saying we are now corporate citizens of another country.

Guess what? Under the SEC order, they are rewarded for leaving the United States, in that their chief executives no longer have to certify financial results. The SEC says: We had to get this done quickly, and we don't expect to change it at this point.

Why does a company renounce its U.S. citizenship? They do it because they don't want to pay U.S. taxes. Very simple. If they can become a citizen of another country and renounce their U.S. citizenship, they can save substantial money on their U.S. tax bill.

At a time when we are at war with terrorists, is that a patriotic thing to do? No, I don't think so. I hope the Senate, and I certainly encourage my colleagues to do this, will shut that door tight and stop these corporate inversions. Stop these corporations from creating a sham of renouncing their U.S. citizenship in order to avoid paying U.S. taxes.

It might be interesting to ask companies such as Tyco: If you get yourself in trouble someplace around the world, who are you going to call? The Bermuda navy? The Bermuda army? The Bermuda marines? You want the full protection of the U.S. Government and the U.S. military and all the benefits that being a U.S. citizen brings along. But then you want to renounce your citizenship and move to Bermuda, in a technical sense, while keeping your offices in the United States and saving big money on taxes. And then, under the SEC order, you don't even have to have your chief executive officers certify the financial results of the corporation.

That is a shame. The SEC should know better. What could they have been thinking? I have accused them of sleeping, but this is not sleeping; this is making really dumb decisions.

I have discussed my concern with the staff of the Banking Committee. They believe that their bill implicitly addresses the reincorporation problem. But Senator GRAHAM of Florida and I said we are not satisfied with "implicitly" being covered. We want the issue addressed explicitly.

Let me also say, the technical people smile when I talk about this, but, frankly, it took a day and a half for us to evaluate whether it was implicitly covered in the bill. So because of that, I think it is important to have an explicit provision in this bill that says those companies involved in inversions that renounce their citizenship, they, too, will be required to certify their results. Their chief executive officers and their CFOs will be required to certify their results.

In a moment I will conclude and ask that this amendment be attached to the bill. As I do that, I ask for the attention of the Senator from Maryland and the manager on the other side to say that I have another amendment that I will offer. I understand, based on your process, you don't want it offered now. Let me describe it briefly.

The other amendment deals with the issue of what is called disgorgement of profits.

The top executives of these corporations make bonuses, commissions, and a substantial amount of compensation—some of them hundreds of millions of dollars. Then they issue a restatement of earnings and everything collapses. But they keep their profits and they keep their commissions and they keep their bonuses.

This legislation says you can't do that. When you restate, and just prior to restatement you have made all these bonuses, you have to disgorge this money. It is a $2 word, but I think everybody understands what it means.

The thing that is missing in this bill is that disgorgement should be required in cases of bankruptcy as well. So I have an amendment that will say: Yes, disgorgement in this bill with respect to periods prior to restatement, but also disgorgement for the 12 months prior to the filing of bankruptcy by a corporation as well.

A fair number of people have had a lot to say about this. Former SEC Chairman, Richard Breeden, who was the Chairman of the SEC under President H.W. Bush from 1989 to 1993, said:

We should consider disgorgement to the company of any net proceeds of stock sales or option exercises within a 6-month or a 1-year period prior to a bankruptcy filing.

So he feels that way.

Goldman Sachs CEO Henry Paulson has also spoken in favor of this idea.

This bill will be incomplete if it does not include disgorgement in the period prior to bankruptcy. Those making a fortune, getting bonuses and commissions of tens of millions, yes hundreds of millions, as their companies are headed to bankruptcy—that is unfair. We need to do something about this.

I will not ask consent at the moment because I want to get my first amendment approved, but I will, following some discussions, either this morning or else on Monday, ask consent to set aside the second-degree amendment so we can consider, in first-degree, this issue. My hope is we would have a 100-to-0 vote on this matter because, failing that, this bill will be incomplete.

This bill is a great bill. I have credited Senator SARBANES and others at length. This is a wonderful piece of legislation that I fully support. It can be and will be improved by my amendments and by the amendments of Senator SCHUMER and others. Let's complete this amendment process.

Let me just say one last thing, if I might.

I know it has taken the patience of Job to try to manage this bill on the floor of the Senate. I understand all the difficulties that Senator SARBANES and Senator REID and many others have had these recent days because I have been here every day when this bill has been on the floor. My aggressiveness in trying to get these amendments considered has nothing at all to do with the wonderful stewardship of the chairman. I am very proud of the result he brings to the floor, and I believe both of my amendments will improve it. I hope I can work with him from now until Monday afternoon to have the bankruptcy amendment included in this legislation.

Mr. SARBANES. Will the Senator yield for just a moment?

Mr. DORGAN. I will be happy to yield.

Mr. SARBANES. Madam President, I simply want to say I think the subject matter with which the Senator's other amendment, that he just referred to, deals is a very important subject, and I think his observations are very much on point. Working with the other side, we are trying to work through the amendment. We are in the process of trying to do that. Of course, we will be continuing to talk with the Senator, and I hope we can resolve it. It would be very helpful. I appreciate his kind words.

Mr. DORGAN. I thank the Senator from Maryland. I ask my amendment be considered at this point and be voted upon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate on the amendment? If not, the question is on agreeing to amendment No. 4215, as modified.

The amendment, (No. 4215), as modified, was agreed to.

Mr. SARBANES. I move to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mrs. CLINTON). The Senator from New York.

AMENDMENT NO. 4295

Mr. SCHUMER. I ask unanimous consent the Carnahan amendment be laid aside, and I send an amendment to the desk which we have talked about.

Mr. SARBANES. Will the Senator describe the amendment?

Mr. SCHUMER. Yes. This amendment is the amendment that enhances the conflict of interest provisions by prohibiting personal loans by issuers to chief officers of the issuer. It has been agreed to by both sides.

Mr. SARBANES. I ask unanimous consent no second-degree amendment to the Schumer amendment, when it is sent to the desk, be in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Is there objection to laying aside the pending amendment for purposes of sending up a new amendment? Without objection, it is so ordered. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from New York (Mr. SCHUMER) proposes an amendment No. 4295.

Mr. SCHUMER. I ask unanimous consent the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

(Purpose: To enhance conflict of interest provisions by prohibiting personal loans by issuers to chief officers of the issue)

On page 91, strike line 19 and all that follows through page 93, line 22 and insert the following:

SEC. 402. ENHANCED CONFLICT OF INTEREST PROVISIONS.

(a) PROHIBITION ON PERSONAL LOANS TO EXECUTIVES.—Section 13 of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 (15 U.S.C. 78m), as amended by this Act, is amended by adding at the end the following:

“(k) PROHIBITION ON PERSONAL LOANS TO EXECUTIVES.—

“(1) IN GENERAL.—It shall be unlawful for any issuer, directly or indirectly, to extend or maintain credit, or arrange for the extension of credit, in the form of personal loan to or for any director or executive officer (or equivalent thereof) of that issuer.

“(2) LIMITATION.—Paragraph (1) does not preclude any home improvement and manufactured home loans (as that term is defined in Section 5 of the Home Owners Loan Act, consumer credit (as defined in section 103 of the Truth in Lending Act), or any extension of credit under an open end credit plan (as defined in section 103 of the Truth in Lending Act (15 U.S.C. 1602)), that is—

“(A) made in the ordinary course of the consumer credit business of such issuer;

“(B) of a type that is generally made available by such issuer to the public; and

“(C) made by such issuer on market terms, or terms that are no more favorable than those offered by the issuer to the general public for such loans.”.

Mr. SCHUMER. Madam President, I also ask unanimous consent that Senator FEINSTEIN be added as a cosponsor of this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. SCHUMER. Madam President, I am going to be very brief because I know we do not have too much time and we have other business. I thank both the majority and minority managers, Senator SARBANES and Senator GRAMM, for their work on this amendment. I have also spoken to the people in the White House who were supportive of this amendment. It is a very simple amendment. It basically says that with certain narrow exceptions, CEOs and CFOs of companies will not be able to get loans from those companies.

In his speech before Wall Street yesterday, President Bush forcefully stated: “. . . I challenge compensation committees to put an end to all company loans to corporate officers.”

I couldn't agree more. It seems like we didn't learn our lessons during the S&L crisis in the 1980's? These same kinds of transactions were used then to “cook the books” and our Nation's economy and financial institutions paid the price for it. Once again, history repeats itself.

My amendment is very simple: it makes it unlawful for any publicly traded company to make loans to its executive officers. Let me give a few examples as to why we should do this.

Executives of major corporations, including Enron, WorldCom, and Adelphia, collectively received more than $5 billion in company funds in the form of personal loans. For example, Bernard Ebbers, CEO of WorldCom, borrowed a mind-boggling $408 million from the corporation over several years, while receiving a compensation package valued at over $10 million annually, all the while the company was facing massive losses. In the case of Adelphia, the Rigas Family received loans and other financial benefits totaling a staggering $3.1 billion, while that company has also reported huge financial losses.

The question is: Why can't these super rich corporate executives go to the corner bank, the Suntrust's or Bank of America's, like everyone else to take loans?

In the case of WorldCom, Ebbers had funded his personal stock market activities by borrowing on margin. When the value of those investments plunged, Ebbers had to pay up. How did he do it? He borrowed money from his board of directors to pay for the stock he had bought that was now being called in.

This is just wrong, and it must be stopped.

I urge the amendment be agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate on the amendment? If not, the question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 4295) was agreed to.

Mr. SARBANES. I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. CRAIG. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 4296

Mr. SCHUMER. I have a second amendment that has also been agreed to, so I ask, again, the Carnahan amendment be laid aside, and I send the amendment to the desk and ask for its consideration. I ask unanimous consent Senator SHELBY be added as a cosponsor on this amendment on the SPEs.

Mr. SARBANES. I ask unanimous consent no second-degree amendment be in order to the Schumer amendment being sent to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered. Is there objection to laying aside the pending amendments for the purpose of introducing a new amendment? Without objection, it is so ordered. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from New York (Mr. SCHUMER), for himself and Mr. SHELBY, proposes an amendment numbered 4296.

Mr. SCHUMER. I ask unanimous consent the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

(Purpose: To require a study of the accounting treatment of special purpose entities)

On page 91, between lines 18 and 19, insert the following:

(c) STUDY AND REPORT ON SPECIAL PURPOSE ENTITIES.—

(1) STUDY REQUIRED.—The Commission shall, not later than 1 year after the effective date of adoption of off-balance sheet disclosure rules required by section 13(j) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, as added by this section, complete a study of filings by issuers and their disclosures to determine—

(A) the extent of off-balance sheet transactions, including assets, liabilities, leases, losses, and the use of special purpose entities; and

(B) whether generally accepted accounting rules result in financial statements of issuers reflecting the economics of such off-balance sheet transactions to investors in a transparent fashion.

(2) REPORT AND RECOMMENDATIONS.—Not later than 6 months after the date of completion of the study required by paragraph (1), the Commission shall submit a report to the President, the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs of the Senate, and the Committee on Financial Services of the House of Representatives, setting forth—

(A) the amount or an estimate of the amount of off-balance sheet transactions, including assets, liabilities, leases, and losses of, and the use of special purpose entities by, issuers filing periodic reports pursuant to section 13 or 15 of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934;

(B) the extent to which special purpose entities are used to facilitate off-balance sheet transactions;

(C) whether generally accepted accounting principles or the rules of the Commission result in financial statements of issuers reflecting the economics of such transactions to investors in a transparent fashion;

(D) whether generally accepted accounting principles specifically result in the consolidation of special purpose entities sponsored by an issuer in cases in which the issuer has the majority of the risks and rewards of the special purpose entity; and

(E) any recommendations of the Commission for improving the transparency and quality of reporting off-balance sheet transactions in the financial statements and disclosures required to be filed by an issuer with the Commission.

Mr. SCHUMER. Madam President, I will again be brief. This amendment relates to a second problem that we have seen in the latest crisis that we have faced in our financial markets, and that is the special purpose entities. Sometimes special purpose entities have a valid purpose. Many companies use them for valid purposes.

We have seen, particularly most egregiously in the case of Enron, these have been entities that have been used to take losses off the books, and then shareholders, and everybody else, don't know much about them.

Enron, for instance, conducted business through thousands of these with names such as LJM, Cayman LP, and Raptor. They become pretty famous and the Enron's former CFO, Andrew Fastow, contributed hard assets and related debt to Raptor SPE and then Raptor would turn around and borrow large sums of money from a bank to purchase assets or conduct other business.

This is the key. The debts of this SPE, Raptor, never showed up on Enron's financial statements.

People make money on it. Fastow made $30 million in management fees. These things go way overboard. The way we had proposed originally legislating on this was too complicated, but there are some good ones. There are some with legitimate purposes and many with bad purposes.

Congress can't set these accounting standards, nor should we. Rather, that is the SEC and FASB's job.

We have asked in this amendment that the SEC do a comprehensive study of the SPEs to show where the damage is, point the way to reform, and make recommendations. This amendment does not put Congress in the business of setting accounting standards.

It does, however, say to thousands of Enron and other employees who have lost pensions that we are stepping up to the plate now to stop these kinds of egregious practices.

I add that there are probably many of these SPEs for bad purposes floating around in other companies, and this study cannot come too soon.

We have received agreement. I thank Senators SARBANES and GRAMM.

I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment (No. 4296) was agreed to.

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. SANTORUM. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York.

Mr. SCHUMER. Madam President, I thank Senator SARBANES and his staff as well as Senator GRAMM and his staff for their work on accepting these two important amendments that I think improves the bill, which is a very fine bill that I am proud to support.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Idaho.

Mr. CRAIG. Madam President, let me spend a few minutes talking about the underlying legislation, S. 2673.

There has been a great deal of debate over the last good number of days on this issue. I am pleased that we were able to get cloture. It is time we move on to this issue.

The American public, a good many stockholders, a good many pension plans, a good many retirement plans are discussing what are we going to do about the meltdown that last occurred in corporate America at the executive level with some key corporations. It is really, in most instances, a crisis of confidence.

There are a lot of well-run corporations across America that are publicly held. They have historically observed the prudent rules. Their boards have acted responsibly. But there are bad players. There are big, bad players that have had a dramatic impact on the markets. There is no question that we have to deal with this straight away.

When I look at the whole of this issue, it isn't just in the markets where there is a crisis of confidence that Americans share: When you look at 9/11, then Enron, then WorldCom, and, of course, all the scandals that have occurred, and out in the West with the Ninth Circuit suggesting that the Pledge of Allegiance isn't constitutional, put all of that together, and America has to be scratching its head at this moment, asking: Where does all of this take us? Where is that rock of stability that we have come to rely on for so long?

I suggest that when we are debating this issue, while this is an issue that has to be dealt with, and we are now moving appropriately, it is one of a combination of factors that is critically important for our country to deal with.

One issue we have to deal with is the war on terrorism. The DOD appropriations ought to be the first bill we deal with on the defense side to begin to shore up again this sense of confidence in the American structure. Certainly, protecting our soldiers in the post-9/11 fighting that has gone on in Afghanistan is appropriate, and now, as we search out terrorism around the world, that is critical.

The next step I would suggest is the confirming of judges. It is important that we deal with judges. For the judicial system of this country to remain strong, vacancies need to be filled. People should receive their day in court in a timely fashion. That has been one of the hallmarks and the strengths of this country throughout its history, and it ought to be today.

Clearly, I hope we appoint judges who will not act as the ones in the Ninth Circuit who suggested that the Pledge of Allegiance is unconstitutional. I think President Bush has gone a long way in nominating good judges to the Senate.

Yet, the politics here in the Senate today is obvious: Withhold as long as you can. Withhold as long as you can.

The President spoke the other day on Wall Street relating to corporate accounting. The U.S. Senate is speaking today, as they should.

I ask unanimous consent that a commentary by Lawrence Kudlow be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Washington Times, July 11, 2002]

A CLASS ABOVE THE CORRUPTION AND CRITICS

(By Lawrence Kudlow)

In front of a New York audience on Tuesday, President Bush unveiled a revised plan to counter corporate wrongdoing and accounting fraud, saying, "There can be no capitalism without conscience, no wealth without character." Adam Smith, the father of free-market economics, couldn't have said it better.

Smith always argued that smooth-functioning markets require ethical behavior at their center. From Day One of his presidency, Mr. Bush has applied this rule even more broadly, emphasizing the need for ethical clarity and moral certitude in all areas of American life. He has successfully applied the rule of ethics to the war on terror, and now he is transferring the very same principle to root out corporate corruption.

From the election campaign to today, poll after poll shows that the public believes Mr. Bush is a leader with strong character and unshakable moral principles. Following the blowups of WorldCom, Enron and Tyco—and many other rotten apples—Mr. Bush's honest outrage has been heartfelt, and not political.

It has also shone above the political carping of Tom Daschle, Al Gore, Richard Gephardt and other national Democrats who would locate the source of the contagious virus of accounting fraud and corporate corruption within the Bush administration. Theirs is a political, reckless, and silly approach to a serious situation. The bad-business bug gained strength and spread well before George W. Bush became president. And today it is a grave problem that requires sober solutions.

Serious Democrats, such as Senate Banking Committee head Paul Sarbanes and Senate Investigations Subcommittee Chairman Carl Levin, have taken a completely different tack from the business-as-usual partisan politics of the Daschle gang.

Mr. Sarbanes has crafted a significant proposal to set up an independent accounting-standards board—one that will end conflict of interests between the auditing and consulting functions, properly score stock options, create new pressure for independent boards of directors, and legislate tough legal sanctions on executives, bankers, auditors, accountants and others who violate the new standards.

The accounting system desperately needs a fix; it is even more incoherent than the dreaded tax code. A new accounting-standards board should come under the aegis of the Securities and Exchange Commission. Along with proposals from the New York Stock Exchange to create truly independent boards of directors, this action will promote honest accounting and shareholder-based corporate governance.

Meanwhile, Mr. Levin has just as seriously proposed giving the SEC, the federal government's principal accounting overseer, the right to levy tough fines on corporate evildoers without having to go to court first.

Suburban liberals like Sens. Sarbanes and Levin, it seems, have suddenly become conservative lawmakers who will "move corporate accounting out of the shadows," as

Mr. Bush rightly put it, and protect the basic workings of our wealth-creating capitalist system.

President Bush, in tune with these focused Democrats, has proposed a doubling of the maximum prison term for mail- and wire-fraud statutes from five to 10 years. This severe jail-time penalty will greatly concentrate the executive mind. And so will Mr. Bush's proposal that fraudulently earned bonuses and compensation must be returned; and so will his request that corporate officers and directors who engage in serious misconduct be barred from again sitting in corporate-leadership positions. More, if the Bush corporate doctrine moves through Congress, top executives will now have to certify their financial statements with their own signatures. False reporting could lead to jail.

It seems that our more serious men in Washington want to bolster the rule of law by strengthening the incentive to choose right from wrong.

Incentives matter. If you tax something more you get less of it. If you tax something less you get more of it. A 10-year jail term for rotten corporate apples—or their accountants—is a huge legal tax on wrongful actions.

Of course, standing behind higher ethical standards in business is the great American investor class. Covering more than 50 percent of American households and more than 80 million people, this group is positively changing financial practices and the political culture. These shareholders have lost enormous wealth, in part from dishonest accounting and egocentric corporate misdeeds. And they're furious.

Financial markets have been democratized in the past 15 years with the rise of this investor class. They have already voted to depress the stock market as a signal of their indignation, and they're now prepared to vote this November against the silly politicians who fail to realize the enormity of the current problem. Consider this: Slightly more than 60 percent of the investor class voted in the last election. This may be the most powerful lobby in America.

In no uncertain terms, this new political movement is forcing Washington to renew the rule of law, strengthen accounting and financial standards across the board, and restore a proper incentive system that will return Adam Smith's ethical epicenter to the greatest wealth-creating machine in all of history. The days of egocentric and corrupt Soviet-style corporation have come to an end. In the stock market, moral amnesia is dead.

Mr. CRAIG. Madam President, I see Chairman SARBANES on the floor. It is not often that Lawrence Kudlow praises the chairman, but he did the other day in an op-ed and commentary that he often writes. He talked about the Sarbanes bill and said:

Serious Democrats, such as the Senate Banking Committee head Paul Sarbanes and Senate Investigations Subcommittee Chairman Carl Levin, have taken a completely different tact from the business as usual—

I will not repeat the remainder of it. But that ought to be a part of the RECORD because I think it reflects the spectrum of the thinking on the floor of the U.S. Senate at this moment. Whether you are conservative, moderate, or liberal, we know that we have to regain the confidence of the American investing public and the world investing public, and for that matter, the market systems of our country and in corporate America.

As long and as loud as many of us speak about the good corporations out there and how well run they are, the moment another Enron occurs or someone else speaks out about misdealings, that confidence is once again dashed.

This legislation moves to create a bright line between, good and bad accounting by separating auditing and consulting services for accountants in public corporations. It requires disclosure of off-balance sheet transactions and other obligations that might affect the corporate financial condition, and it establishes independent auditing boards to oversee corporate accounting.

All of those are very critical in creating bright lines of clarity, understanding, confidence, and stronger enforcement of criminal behavior.

Someone in my State said the other day: You don't have to strengthen the accounting procedure, CRAIG. Put the bums in jail. Those are criminal acts. When you knowingly are distorting the financial strength of a company which affects its stock, destroys retirement funds, employee's stock options, and all of that, it is, in fact, a criminal act.

Our President has said it. Others have spoken on the floor. But there is a line we have to draw. It is not one of grandstanding for political purposes but doing the right thing, to set in place good public policy that directs the free market system in the appropriate fashion. Do we want to make it so restrictive that decisionmaking in the board room means always looking over their shoulder to see that they have done it exactly right against a Federal law when the marketplace is a dynamic place and laws are static?

We know there have to be some static lines attached. There is no doubt about it. Those have to be clear. At the same time, we cannot be so restrictive that we blight the market and send investments outside the United States to the rest of the world.

The Wall Street Journal wrote yesterday that everything you are hearing now from Washington is aimed at winning the November elections and not at calming financial markets. I hope this bill is all about calming financial markets. And I believe the majority of this bill does have that goal. Some of rhetoric may not reflect it. But I truly believe the chairman and the ranking member are working in the direction of building a substantive bill that will go to conference, that works out our differences between the House and that goes to the President's desk.

I hope the Wall Street Journal is wrong. I hope we refrain from making corporate accountability simply another political exercise. It ought not be. It has not been. It should never be.

In Idaho they say: "You can't hang the same man twice." "You can't hang the same person twice."

So let's make the laws clear, easily defined, not arbitrary, not like our tax laws today where even the best consultants cannot give good advice.

What we are working with, I hope, is clean and clear and appropriate. There are more than 16,000 corporations under the jurisdiction of the SEC. Of those, no more than a handful have been accused of criminal wrongdoing. In the end—when all the dust settles, the market stabilizes, and investors begin again to regain confidence, and the Congress has acted—no more than a handful of corporations will have been the bad actors.

So I hope and I trust we can finalize what we are doing here today, and Monday possibly. It is important. The bottom line is very simple: Congress needs to act, and act now, and reaffirm the confidence the American people have in our public institutions.

I just came from a Republican bicameral meeting between the House and the Senate Republican leaders. They said: Get us the bill immediately. Assign conferees. Let's go to work. Let's get this out before the August recess.

Let's send a message to the American and the world investor that we have acted timely, that we have acted responsibly. The President has laid down his marker. The House has laid down their marker. It is now time for us to do the same. And in doing so, and in moving with expeditious action—not haste, not in an irresponsible way—I think we can turn to the American people and say: We have put in place the right safeguards, the right protections, the right firewalls. Study the papers, study the financials, and begin, once again, to reinvest in the American marketplace because it will be the right place to put your money.

Madam President, I yield floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. SANTORUM. Madam President, I want to pick up on what the Senator from Idaho just said, which is, we were just meeting on the House side among the leadership. One of the messages that was very clear was, when this bill passes, the House is very eager to appoint conferees and to move forward to get a bill out as quickly and as responsibly as possible, to send all the right messages to the investing public and to Wall Street that Congress has seen the problem and that we are ready, willing, and able to act, and act in an expeditious way.

I think it is important for us to act. I agree with that sentiment. The House, obviously, acted months ago in dealing with this problem. We have taken a little bit longer, which we have a tendency to do in the Senate—take a little longer to get things done. But we are now moving forward, and we should not delay in getting to conference. We should not delay in appointing conferees in the Senate. And we should have a process by which we engage in these meetings earnestly and come up with a product, if possible, by the August recess.

It is little difficult. The House is going to be out a week before the Senate. So it is a pretty big task ahead of us, but we should go about it in earnest, and we should do our best to move this forward and send the signals that the Congress has moved as expeditiously as possible to meet the concerns of the investing public about the markets and the reliability of the numbers that corporations are sending out to the investing public.

I have to say, as one of the four members of the committee who voted against this bill in the committee, I have some concerns about the underlying bill that came out of committee. I have some concerns about particularly the impact on some of the small companies that will be governed by this legislation.

A lot has been made that this is a piece of legislation that just deals with publicly traded companies, and so we are talking about the big companies. As any of you who have watched the market for any length of time know, there are a lot of small companies that go into the equity markets and are publicly traded, particularly a lot of technology companies.

A lot of the economic growth engines of our economy are small publicly traded companies. One of the concerns I have is this bill may be appropriate for large multinational corporations—such as General Motors or IBM; you can go down the list; Xerox, whatever—but it may not be particularly an appropriate vehicle of regulation for small-cap stocks.

As you know, there are small-capital stocks, mutual funds, small-cap funds. To apply the same rigorous accounting standards and rules and regulations that very well may be appropriate for these large companies to these smaller companies could have a very significant negative effect on economic growth in our country.

To put these kinds of rules and regulations in place for these small companies is going to be very expensive, very onerous, and make it very difficult for them to conduct business. And remember, folks, who is responsible for economic growth in America, job creation in America. Let me underscore this. We have job claims up again just last week. The economic engine for job creation is smaller businesses. A lot of them are these small publicly traded companies.

It is a very grave concern to me that, yes, we look at these companies we are talking about here. These are big companies that have done a lot of things that, obviously, they should not have done, and with big accounting firms. We are not hearing about scandal in these smaller publicly traded companies that use small accounting firms in most cases. To apply these rules to these smaller companies is really problematic and has a negative effect on our economy.

The last thing I want to see us do—yes, we want to strengthen confidence in the capital markets. Yes, we want to deal with the problems of fraud, and we want to hold people who commit fraud more accountable, and toughen punishments, which is what we have done on the floor. Those are very important things to do. But we should not do that at the expense of jobs and economic growth in our economy.

I understand there is a provision in the bill that allows smaller—any company, I guess, to seek a waiver as to some of the provisions of this act. I know a lot of small businesses, and most of them do not have a lot of money to hire lobbyists and lawyers and other people to come here to Washington, DC, or to New York and plead their case that they should somehow be preempted from the provisions of this act.

You are talking about 16,000 publicly traded companies, most of which—well over 75 percent—are relatively small in size. Imagine the burden of the regulators having to deal with petition after petition after petition.

Senator GRAMM has an amendment, which I presume he will offer on Monday. I am hopeful that the Senate will seriously consider giving the regulatory body some flexibility in providing blanket waivers to classes of companies, or based on some sort of rational scheme of determination of size and scope of a company, that we give a little flexibility to the regulators not to sort of throw all the babies in this one big basket, and understand that there are real significant consequences to jobs and future growth of this economy if we did that.

So I know that is an issue on which we are going to have a discussion next week. But, to me, it is a very significant issue, one where you can be for tougher regulation, you can be for increased accountability, you can be for tougher penalties—all those things, setting up this governing board, having standards in place—you can be for all these things in the bill, but you have to understand that General Motors and ABC Tech Company in Scranton, PA, are fundamentally different entities and should not be treated the same way.

It really is important for us to have some sort of provision for the regulatory body to exempt some of these smaller entities, where some of these regulations do not really apply or misapply, from this scheme of regulation that is in this bill.

So with that, it looks as if we have another Member who might be interested in offering an amendment or giving a speech.

I am happy to yield.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maryland.

Mr. SARBANES. Madam President, later I want to address a couple of points made by the Senator from Pennsylvania, but the Senator from Delaware is in the Chamber and wishes to speak. So I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Delaware.

Mr. CARPER. Madam President, I know the Senator from Maryland is getting tired of receiving all these bouquets, but he deserves them. Senator ENZI is not on the floor, but he deserves one or two as well, along with others of our colleagues, not just on the Banking Committee but other Members as recently as this morning who offered amendments to this legislation which improve it materially, especially the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri, Mrs. CARNAHAN. It is all well and good that we say to those who are senior officials within companies, if you have a stock transaction, you have to report it. Give them the paperwork, they report it, and it goes somewhere where few people ever have a chance to see it or be aware of it. It is quite another thing to list that transaction, do it electronically so anyone who has access to the Internet can find out about it. Senator CARNAHAN's amendment includes this electronic disclosure, and that is a very good improvement to the legislation.

I like what the Senator from North Dakota, Mr. DORGAN, has offered today, with respect to the process where we have companies normally registered and incorporated here in a State in America who somehow slip off to Bermuda and incorporate. We actually provide an incentive; if we don't adopt the Dorgan amendment, we provide an incentive for that kind of behavior. Not only does that have an adverse effect on States such as New York or Delaware or Maryland or Pennsylvania, it also has an adverse effect on shareholders because the heads of companies that are registered or incorporated in a place such as Bermuda would otherwise not have to sign off and vouch for the financial statements they are providing.

Even as recently as this morning, a good bill has gotten better.

I appreciate the amendment offered earlier by Senator LOTT on behalf of the President and the addition of a number of provisions in the bill that the administration supports, and, frankly, I think we all should.

I came across an interesting column this week. I didn't know if I would read it, but given that the Senator from New York is presiding, I have to at least read the first paragraph. This is a column by a fellow who writes in the LA Times and is syndicated across the country, Ronald Brownstein. I will read a paragraph and perhaps ask unanimous consent that the entire column be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

BUSH NEEDS TO DROP THE VELVET GLOVE APPROACH

(By Ronald Brownstein)

It's easy to imagine the frenzy that would be engulfing Washington if it was President Clinton now revising his explanation of a controversial 12-year-old stock deal.

Bush Limbaugh would be roaring in outrage. Robert H. Bork would be decrying the loss of moral authority in the Oval Office. Sen. Arlen Specter, R-Pa., would be demanding a special prosecutor. Congressional committees would be subpoenaing the president's old business partners.

President Bush probably will be spared all that, even after suddenly altering his explanation for why he was eight months late in reporting to the Securities and Exchange Commission his 1990 sale of stock in Harken Energy Corp., a company on whose board he sat, shortly before it announced large losses. (For years he blamed it on the SEC; now he's fingering Harken's lawyers.)

After the fanatical ethics wars of the Clinton years, few in Washington have much stomach for a full-scale confrontation—though the Washington Post raised eyebrows by revealing Bush's former personal attorney was the SEC general counsel at the time commission cleared him of wrongdoing in the stock sale. The attorney, James Doty, says he recused himself.

The demands of the war against terrorism also will discourage a political firefight over the sale. But even so, the disclosures were still creating awkward moments for Bush as he prepared to call for greater corporate responsibility.

Actually, the focus on Bush's behavior 12 years ago may frame the wrong debate. It's likely that the dominant argument in Washington will be over whether it's credible for Bush to demand better corporate behavior while facing these personal questions. The more relevant issue is whether it's credible for Bush to threaten a crackdown now after his administration spent its first 18 months promising business kinder and gentler enforcement of the range of federal laws against corporate misconduct—from the environment to the stock markets to the workplace.

In other words, can Bush plausibly shake the iron fist after stroking the Fortune 500 for so long with a velvet glove?

BUSINESS AS USUAL

For all the nouvelle elements of Bush's thinking on social issues such as education or home ownership, he's always been a conventional conservative on government oversight of business. As governor of Texas, presidential candidate and president, Bush has focused more on intrusive government than irresponsible corporations.

His consistent message has been that, in pursuing its goals and enforcing its laws, government should be more cooperative and less coercive. During the 2000 campaign, he crystallized his view on government's relationship with business when he insisted: "I do not believe you can sue your way or regulate your way to clean air and clean water."

Bush has put flesh on that philosophy by staffing many federal agencies with alumni of the industries they now regulate. The Interior Department is crowded with former lobbyists for the coal and oil industries. A former timber lobbyist is watching the national forests: Harvey L. Pitt, the SEC chairman, came from the accounting industry; Bush already has appointed another accounting industry alum to the five-member commission and nominated yet a third. (That means Bush is seeking to construct an SEC, for the first time, with a majority of commissioners tied to accounting.)

To monitor safety in the workplace, Bush found an executive from the chemical industry. To monitor safety in the mines, he appointed an executive from the mining industry. The list goes on.

In chorus, Bush's appointees have sung the same tune. At her confirmation hearing last year, Environmental Protection Agency Administrator Christie Whitman promised more negotiation and less litigation against recalcitrant companies. "Instilling fear does not solve problems," she insisted.

Over at the Occupational Safety and Health Administration, director John Henshaw as late as last month told a business audience: "Hopefully we can put the days of OSHA as an adversary behind us."

And before Enron and WorldCom and Martha Stewart forced the SEC chair to try to morph into Harvey Pitt-bull, he was sending the same message, telling the accounting industry last fall that he viewed them as the agency's "partner" and pledging "a new era of respect and cooperation" after the confrontations of the Clinton years.

Partnership with industry has its place. But enforcing federal law to police the market place isn't it. No cop anywhere would agree with Whitman; they instead would argue that the best way to discourage drug dealing or street crime is to instill fear—of relentless enforcement. The same is true in the boardroom. Polluters or stock swindlers are more likely to stop because they fear being caught than because Washington asks them nicely.

Mr. CARPER. Here is the first paragraph:

It's easy to imagine the frenzy that would be engulfing Washington if it was President Clinton now revising his explanation of a controversial 12-year-old stock deal. Rush Limbaugh would be reacting in outrage. Robert Bork would be decrying the loss of moral authority in the Oval Office. [One of our Senators] would be demanding a special prosecutor. Congressional committees would be subpoenaing the president's old business partners.

This is a whole lot more important than trying to find political advantage in a particularly difficult debate and a difficult time in this economic recovery. This is about the economy.

As a nation, we are trying to come out of a recession. There is a fair amount of financial data which suggests we are heading in the right direction. The number of people being laid off is slowing. Manufacturing activity is increasing. Even economic activity among some of the most hard-hit sectors of the economy, technology sectors, is showing signs of life. I am encouraged by that.

If you look at the stock exchange for much of the last several weeks and months, it does not really reflect the returning, emerging vibrancy in the rest of the economy. That is not a good thing.

One of the reasons why it is so important for us to pass this legislation is to send a clear signal to investors not just around the country, but around the world that the United States is a good place in which to invest. Our trade deficit last year was about $300 billion. This year it is going to be even more than $300 billion.

We are starting to see the value of American currency, the dollar, which was robust and strong for the last several years, deteriorate. The worst thing that could happen for us, at a time when we need to attract foreign investments, would be to send a message that the United States is not a good or safe place in which to invest. When we are looking to much of the rest of the world to help finance a trade deficit of over $300 billion, it is important that we send a strong message throughout the world that the U.S. remains the best place in which to invest.

There are a number of provisions. I will not go through this bill provision by provision. I want to talk about some of the groups that have the greatest interest, the most at stake, what our obligation is to them, and how this legislation seeks to make sure that we not only recognize that obligation but that we act on it.

Shareholders of companies, publicly traded companies, should have confidence. They should have confidence not only in the CEOs and top officials, but they should have confidence in the board of directors whose job it is to represent the interest of the shareholders and to know that that board is indeed independent. Shareholders should have confidence in the audit committees of the board. Investors should know that the audit committees of the board are comprised of independent-minded board members, knowledgeable board members who will act, not as a lap dog, but as a watchdog every day as they serve on the audit committee.

Shareholders should have confidence that there are rigorous auditing standards that exist in this country and not that there are rigorous auditing standards that are on a piece of paper somewhere, but there is a strong, independent, knowledgeable entity that is going to make sure that those auditing standards are enforced.

How about the auditors of publicly traded companies? We should take away from them the temptation to look the other way or give the benefit of the doubt to a company that they are auditing because of the temptation from some other part of the auditing company which deals with consulting services; in many cases, these are lucrative services. We want to make sure the folks doing the audits of publicly traded companies are interested in doing a good job because that is their responsibility. Auditors should not be interested in cutting corners, looking the other way because doing so might enable their accounting company to attract and to retain lucrative consulting services.

This bill goes a long way—some would say too far—toward curtailing that activity. To me, it strikes the right balance.

Most of us know of someone who used to work for one of the big eight, then big five, now the big four accounting firms who actually went to work for one of the companies that they audited. I do. I suspect all of us could think of someone who has made that transition in their lives. There is nothing wrong with that. However, the revolving door can be more troublesome when the person moves from the auditing company one day, the company responsible for doing the audit, and the next day, the next week, the next month ends up as a senior official of the company that last week, last month they were auditing.

This measure doesn't completely stop that revolving door, but it slows it down.

Another area that this bill tries to address is the question: How often is it appropriate to have a fresh set of eyes in charge of those independent auditors doing that independent audit of a publicly traded company? Under current standards every 7 years we say that the lead partner of an audit should be changed. This measure takes it down to 5 years. Not everyone agrees with that. Some would like to have a change in auditing companies, requiring auditing companies to rotate every 5 or 7 years. I don't think that is a good idea. I do believe the approach we take in this measure, moving from 7 to 5 years the period of time after which the lead auditor, the lead partner has to be changed, is sound.

How about investors? I talked about shareholders, about the auditors themselves. How about investors? The investors in this country and other countries need to be comforted by the knowledge that when they hear an analyst on television or read of an analyst's recommendation of a particular stock or stocks, when an analyst says buy, they mean buy. When an analyst says sell, they mean sell. When an analyst says hold, they mean hold.

Investors have the right to know that the analysts whose advice they are following or attempting to follow are not being pressured to color their recommendations of a buy, sell, or hold by what is happening on the investment banking side of the business, and to know that the analyst's compensation is going to be derived more from how well the analyst does his job, providing good analysis and investment advice, and not about how much new business that analyst can help bring to the investment banking side of their company.

How about the CEOs and senior management? When they break the law, they should be fully prosecuted under the law, and if what they have done is an offense for which they can be imprisoned, they ought to be. Our job in the Congress is to pass laws and to say what the crime or penalty should be when people violate those laws.

It is the job of the Justice Department to fully prosecute—with the help of the SEC and the other watchdog agencies—people who violate the laws. Senator LEAHY, on behalf of a number of Senators, earlier this week—yesterday, I believe—offered legislation that provides a new law that says not only can we prosecute some of the corporate wrongdoers—I am tempted to call them criminals, but I won't—who violate the trust, and to not only say you have to go after them under the mail and fraud provisions of the criminal code, but to broaden that—which is sometimes difficult to do—and make the prosecutions more easily done and with very tough penalties under another part of the code.

CEOs should not be allowed to profit from financial misinformation or from manipulation of their books. I commend the President and those who have worked on this legislation to say, to the extent that this does happen—a CEO or senior official benefits financially from tampering or cooking the books—they would be compelled to give that money back.

I mentioned earlier the legislation offered by Senator CARNAHAN of Missouri which would actually make sure there is a disclosure of sale when a CEO or senior official sells their stock; that the transaction would not only have to be reported to the SEC, but disclosed electronically.

Another provision in the bill that I think is especially good and timely, given what has gone on at WorldCom, where apparently a senior official of that company received a $360 million loan from the company—a loan which I don't believe the shareholders ever knew about—at least when they found out about it, it was too late for a lot of them. That kind of information should be fully disclosed promptly and through a medium that allows those who have some need to know—investors and shareholders—to have that information in a timely way.

Finally, a word about the employees who work for some of these companies that have gone through, or are going through, a meltdown. They need, I think, recourse when they are urged, on the one hand, by senior officials to buy company stock for their 401(k) investment plans at the very time when senior officials are bailing out of the company stock. There should be some kind of recourse for employees when that happens. In the belief of what is good for the goose is good for the gander, employees should never again face the situation that Enron employees faced where, during a lockdown period of time, employees could not sell their stock while senior officials were able to bail out and sell their stock. What is good for the goose is good for the gander. To the extent that employees in a lockdown period are not able to sell their company stock in their 401(k) plan, the senior officials of the company should not be able to enter into transactions involving their stock either.

There is one thing I don't believe we address in this bill; the others I mentioned, we do. One area we do not address—and I suspect it comes later—and a member of the staff will tell me if I am mistaken. One of the problems we have with 401(k)s for the employees, the investors, is that they don't get very good advice. The companies don't want to be held liable if they provide bad advice when all is said and done. And when we move on to other issues, I hope we will have agreed on a way to better ensure that the employees who are not getting very good advice do get that good advice.

I worry about the concentration of assets and investments. I know some people believe there should be a cap and that they should not be able to invest any more than half or a quarter in company stock for your 401(k). If I am an employee and I am buying company stock, maybe I should have to sign a form that is an acknowledgment that I am about to do something very stupid—something similar to what the employees did at Enron, where they put all their eggs in one basket—and acknowledge that is not a bright thing to do, and acknowledge that I am doing that unwise thing myself. Maybe that is needed here. In addition to that kind of disclosure, I think we do need to address the need for better advice for employees.

I will go back to where I started; that is to say, a lot is riding on this legislation—a whole lot more than we would have guessed 6 months ago. Six months ago, as we saw Enron melt down and the disclosures come forward, we thought it was one company that was poorly run, maybe fraudulently run. A lot of people were hurt who worked at that company. A lot of people who worked for the auditor, the accounting firm, Arthur Andersen, have lost their jobs and were, frankly, fully innocent, but they have been harmed. Six months ago, there was a full sense of outrage at Enron and the people who led it to its fall.

We know now that what happened at Enron may not be precisely the same as other companies, but it is symptomatic of the behavior in other companies, where the people who run those companies do not meet their obligations to the shareholders, to the employees, and where greed has corrupted too many people. While it is difficult for us to pass a law outlawing greed, we can try to outlaw fraud. But it is tough to do that; I acknowledge that.

With the developments within a whole host of other companies—disclosures of financial mismanagement and misstatements, misrepresentation of performance of other companies in recent months—the importance of what we are doing this week and next has grown. We need to get this economy moving in the right direction. I believe that, underneath, a lot of the fundamentals are pretty sound. If you look at growth, and productivity, and the manufacturing activity to which I alluded earlier, there is some good news. The troubling news is what is going on in the stock market, as investors are skittish, and that is understandable.

We can begin to restore, in a very meaningful and tangible way, the confidence of those investors in America and in American companies, and we ought to do that.

The last word I will say is this. I commend Chairman SARBANES. He is not presently on the floor. I also commend the committee staff and personal staffs for the kinds of hearings that have been held this year which have led us to this day. Chairman SARBANES is not the sort of person who is interested in rushing out and being on television every night. He is not interested so much in seeing his name or picture in the newspaper. He is interested in getting at the truth. I think the hearings that were held over many months have led us to finding the truth and, maybe just as important, to finding the right course for us to take as a nation, to be able to right some of the wrongs that have been done and to reduce the likelihood that further wrongs will occur in the future.

I know some have been impatient for us to get to this day and to take up this legislation, pass it, and to send it to the President. I think it has been worth the wait. I acknowledge that not everything that needs to be done ought to be done by the Congress. The stock exchanges have made a number of excellent changes, and they are to be commended. Many companies and many corporate boards, that have sort of been tarred with the same brush, and senior officials and CEOs who are doing a good job in acting and behaving in a most important way, have been tarred and feathered with the same brush.

A lot of companies have said, themselves, they have taken a look in the mirror—boards of directors, audit committees, and others—and said: We can do better. And they have adopted reforms. Shareholders—market forces—have come to bear on companies, their boards of directors, as they should, and that is helpful as well.

In the end, there are some things the Congress can do and ought to do, maybe not all of them, but a lot of them are included in this legislation before us. I am proud to have participated as a member of the Banking Committee in its development and proud to be a witness to the work that is going on in this Chamber to make a good bill even better. I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time? The Senator from Michigan.

Mr. LEVIN. Madam President, in a moment I am going to ask unanimous consent that the pending amendment be set aside and that I be allowed to call up amendment No. 4283. This amendment relates to stock options. The amendment is one line. It says that the standard-setting body for accounting principles that is set up in this bill shall review the accounting treatment of employee stock options—just review it—and shall within a year of enactment of this act adopt an appropriate generally accepted accounting principle for the treatment of employee stock options. They shall review it within a year and adopt an appropriate standard.

There has been a huge amount of debate about stock options. Recently the Republican Senate staff of the Joint Economic Committee issued a report about “Understanding the Stock Option Debate.” In that report, it concluded that, “Basic principles of financial accounting imply that stock option awards should be treated as a cost in corporate financial statements, and this cost should be recognized at the time of grant.”

We have a Republican Senate staff report which, after reviewing all of the pros and cons, concludes that stock option awards should be treated as costs in financial statements. It is a very strong document. It is an analysis that I recommend to people to read.

Our amendment, however, does not do that. Our amendment, which is an amendment I am offering on behalf of myself, Senator MCCAIN, and Senator CORZINE, simply says that the board we are funding in this bill should review the accounting treatment of employee stock options and adopt an appropriate standard.

How anybody can be opposed to the proper accounting board doing a review and coming up with an appropriate standard is something beyond my understanding. I can understand the arguments, the pros and the cons. I have been through them for 10 years. I have argued that we ought to treat stock options like any other form of compensation, and I believe we should. But I do not set accounting standards. That is not my job. That is the job of this newly independent board to set accounting standards, and we should urge them to take a look at this. This is where this matter should be referred and at a minimum, Madam President, I ought to be allowed to get a vote on this amendment.

This is a germane amendment. We are in a postclosure situation, and I do not know of a time—there may be; I have not been around here as long as some—but I do not know of a time when a germane amendment postclosure has not been permitted to go to a vote.

Apparently, that is what is going to happen, from what I hear. I hope it is not true, and I do not want to be unfair to my good friend from Pennsylvania. He may not object. But I think it is a misuse of our rules now I am going to get to a process issue—to not permit a germane amendment postclosure to be voted on. And this amendment is germane.

On the stock option issue, we have everyone from Alan Greenspan to economists. Let me read the list of some of the people who support a change in stock option accounting: Alan Greenspan; Paul Volcker; Arthur Levitt; Warren Buffett; TIAA-CREF, one of the largest pension funds in the United States for teachers; several economists; Paul O'Neill; Standard & Poors; Council for Institutional Investors; Citizens for Tax Justice; Consumer Federation of America; Consumers Union; AFL-CIO; on and on. They believe that stock options are a form of compensation, they have value, and they should be part of the expenses on the books of a corporation just as they are taken as a tax deduction at this point.

One of the driving factors in the corporate abuses that we have seen are the huge gobs of stock options which have been handed out to executives. Then executives push accounting principles beyond any comprehension to raise the value of the stock and then exercise their options and sell the stock. We have seen this situation repeated in corporation after corporation, and I believe we ought to try to put an end to it, but that is not what this amendment does. This amendment simply says: We are creating a newly independent board. This independent board should decide on what the appropriate standard is. That is why we are providing independent funding for it.

I want to read a part of a Washington Post editorial of April 18, 2002:

Alan Greenspan, perhaps the nation's most revered economist, thinks employee stock options should be counted, like salaries, as a company expense. Warren Buffett, perhaps the nation's foremost investor, has long argued the same line.

Skippping down:

The London-based International Accounting Standards Board recently recommended the same approach. In short, a rather unshort list of experts endorses the common-sense idea that, whether you get paid in cash or company cars or options, the expense should be recorded. . . .

Why does this matter? Because the current rules—which allow companies to grant executives and other employees millions of dollars in stock options without recording a dime of expenses—make a mockery of corporate accounts. Companies that grant stock options lavishly can be reporting large profits when the truth is that they are taking a large loss. In 2000, for example, Yahoo reported a profit of $71 million, but the real number after adjusting for the cost of employee stock options was a loss of $1.3 billion. Cisco reported $4.6 billion in profits; the real number was a $2.7 billion loss. By reporting make-believe profits, companies may have conned investors into bidding up their stock prices. This is one cause of the Internet bubble.

Then this editorial goes on:

But nobody wants to ban this form of compensation; the goal is merely to have it counted as an expense.

Madam President, that is what most of the accounting profession, economists, and business people, other than those executives who are taking such huge amounts of stock options, want to do. This is what the Accounting Standards Board wanted to do in 1993, but then were beaten down so badly that they had to come up with an alternative instead called disclosure.

Even when the accounting board decided to do that—which was not an independent accounting board because it did not have an independent source of financing, unlike this accounting board will have after we enact this bill—and now to read their report of 1994. The board issued an exposure draft called, “Accounting for Stock-Based Compensation,” and they decided that stock option values should be expensed. Then they said the draft was extraordinarily controversial, and the board not only expects but actively encourages debate on issues. Then they pointed out in the FASB document that the controversy escalated throughout the exposure process.

Then in paragraph 60 of their findings, the FASB board said the following, that “the debate on accounting for stock-based compensation unfortunately became so divisive that it threatened the board’s future working relationship with some of its constituents. The nature of the debate threatened the future of accounting standards-setting in the private sector.”

This is an extraordinary document and everybody should read it so people understand the kind of pressure that not only that board was under—hopefully, the newly independently funded board will not be under—but the kind of pressure which exists in this Congress. We have, in essence, a new board, because it has an independent source of funding. We ought to let that board reach an independent conclusion on one of the most controversial, contentious issues we have before us.

This is a tremendous bill we are voting on. But it can be strengthened. It is not a perfect bill, and from the point of view of pure fairness and deliberation, this Senate should be allowed to vote on a germane amendment postcloture.

I will read one additional paragraph from the FASB document report to set out the extent of the pressure which exists in this area and why it is so important there be a review of this whole matter by an independent board.

In December 1994, the board said it decided that “the extent of improvement in financial reporting that was envisioned when this project was added to its technical agenda was not attainable.”

Why was it not attainable, the FASB said? Because the “deliberate, logical consideration of issues that usually leads to improvement in financial reporting was no longer present.” These are incredible words. This is from the board that is supposed to set accounting standards in this country. They wrote in their report that when their proposal to expense stock operations was issued, it was not attainable because the “deliberate, logical consideration of issues that usually leads to the improvement in financial reporting was no longer present.”

Why was it no longer present? Because the debate had become so divisive, in their words, that it threatened the board’s future working relationship with some of its constituents.

The nature of the debate, they wrote, threatened the future of accounting standards-setting in the private sector.

Finally, the board, beaten down, threatened with extinction, said this: “The board chose a disclosure-based solution for stock-based employee compensation to bring closure to a divisive debate on this issue, not because it believes the solution is the best way to improve financial accounting and reporting.”

That was in 1994. We have seen what has happened in terms of stock option abuses because this board, if it had proceeded in the way it thought best, would have gone out of existence.

This bill creates a newly independent board, a board that has an independent source of revenue. This bill, it seems to me, is not complete, is not strong, unless we now say to this country that the newly independent board should review this accounting standard and reach an appropriate conclusion.

This amendment, which is cosponsored by Senators MCCAIN and CORZINE, does not say what that conclusion is. It does not, unlike the McCain amendment which was not allowed a vote yesterday, conclude that stock options should be expensed. It does say we have an independently funded board which should review this matter and reach the appropriate conclusion.

Mr. REID. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. LEVIN. I would be happy to.

Mr. REID. I am just curious. I am not sure I should get involved at this stage because the Senator knows the subject so well, but this board that is set up in this proposed law, they would not have authority to do that on their own?

Mr. LEVIN. They would.

Mr. REID. Why do we need your amendment?

Mr. LEVIN. Because this Congress has been on record as saying what the accounting standard should be. In the early 1990s we took a position. This neutralizes that position. This says, the accounting board is the right place. The Senate is on record by a vote of 88 to 9 as saying there should not be the expensing of stock options. What this amendment says is that the board should decide. It should review this matter. It takes a neutral position, thereby clearing the record as to what the position of this Senate is.

As of now, all we have on record is that stock options should not be expensed. What this amendment would say is, you should review this and reach an appropriate standard.

Mr. REID. My question to the Senator was, If we did not have the Senator’s amendment, would the board not have that authority anyway?

Mr. LEVIN. They could do it, but all that there would be on the record would be our last statement saying they should not expense. That same kind of pressure we put on them would still be on the record, and I think that should not be the last statement this Senate should make on this subject.

The last statement we ought to make on this subject is that the accounting board is the appropriate place to make that decision, not the Senate.

Mr. REID. I still ask my friend for the third time, if we have no Levin amendment, it would seem to me this newly created board would still have authority to do what the Senator is talking about.

Mr. LEVIN. Under the cloud we created in 1994. I would refer my friend to the debate in this body back on May 3, 1994, where the Senate reached a conclusion that it is the sense of the Senate, that was approved by, again, a vote of 88 to 9 or something like that, that the Financial Accounting Standards Board should not change the current generally accepted accounting treatment of stock options.

Mr. SARBANES. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. LEVIN. I am happy to yield.

Mr. SARBANES. I asked the Senator to yield because I do want to underscore that the legislation that is before us takes a major step in trying to guarantee the independence of the Financial Accounting Standards Board in terms of how it provides for its funding, and that is a dramatic improvement of the situation because heretofore the standard board had to seek voluntary funding. So the standards board ended up going to the people for whom it was establishing the standards in order to get money to fund its operations. Well, when it came to the crunch—and this issue was one such crunch as far as the Financial Accounting Standards Board was concerned—the people from whom they were voluntarily getting the money said we are not going to give you any money. You are not going to be able to carry out your activities.

So we moved in this legislation because one of the things we require is that the issuers pay a mandatory fee. If you are an issuer, you are registered with the SEC and you have to pay a fee. That goes into a fund and that fund pays for the budget of the Public Accounting Oversight Board and the budget of the Financial Accounting Standards Board, so they are assured a revenue source.

I urge people to stop and think about that because it is a very important step to ensuring the independence of both boards. But here we are talking about the Financial Accounting Standards Board, and the dramatic change from its previous situation.

So it really will have, at least on the budget side, the independence to go ahead and make these decisions as they choose to call them. The issue that becomes involved in all of this otherwise is the question, Should the Congress of the United States be itself actually establishing accounting standards? Of course, as the Senator indicated, when an opinion was voiced on that a few years ago, it went in one direction. And now people want the Congress to come along and express an opinion in another direction. I have some sympathy. Obviously, we have seen things happen. Most people might have sympathy.

But we come back to the basic question, whether the Congress should be doing this. We set up this accounting standards board so it could make independent judgments. Unfortunately, there is no question about the fact that previously the standards board was subjected to tremendous pressure which affected its ability to make an independent judgment. It got tremendous pressure from industry groups, pressure from Congress reflecting the pressure of industry groups, and of course this exposure on its budget.

We have tried in the legislation to address this very basic question of making sure this board has its independence. That does not reach to the specific issue the Senate is now addressing, but I wanted that on the record. It is important that be understood.

Mr. REID. Mr. President I ask unanimous consent I be allowed to speak using my own time for up to 2 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. LEVIN. I will conclude, but I need to reclaim the floor because apparently all time otherwise is counted against my allotted time postcloture.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent the pending amendment be set aside and that I be allowed to call up the amendment I filed at the desk relative to this subject which I understand has been ruled germane.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. SANTORUM. Reserving the right to object, I want to make a couple of points.

No. 1, the Senator from Michigan suggested that all amendments that are germane postcloture should be allowed to be offered. I wish that were the case. I wish we had the opportunity to do that in all situations, but that has not been the case in this Senate, or has not been necessarily the history of the Senate. There have been many instances where germane amendments have not been allowed to be offered postcloture.

No. 2, I make a point and reiterate the point that the chairman of the committee has made. The Senator from Michigan has made the point that FASB has been compromised because it wanted to do things and it felt constrained by the constituency which funds it. We have set up an independent funding source for FASB now, and I think that would allow a lot more independence to be able to deal with these accounting issues, such as the way we treat stock options, in a way that allows an independent judgment.

Finally, while we do have a sense of the Senate that is 8 years old on this issue, the Congress has never directed FASB to study an issue of accounting. This is precedent setting. There is nothing in this bill that directs FASB to do anything. It is an independent board. It sets up the accounting standards. I think there is no question that it will in all likelihood review this issue.

For the Congress to begin to weigh in—even 8 years ago, we did not direct FASB to do this; we simply expressed our opinion. To direct FASB to do something would be a very bad precedent to set.

I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The objection is heard.

The Senator from Michigan.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I see no reason that a vote should not be permitted on this amendment. That is what this objection leads to. I urge we come back on Monday, or whenever we do come back, and I will make this motion again because this is a critical issue, that is not addressed in this bill, which is a big part of the lack of credibility we have right now in our markets. It needs to be addressed in some way. This is a neutral way to do it.

The arguments given by our friend from Pennsylvania are reasons to vote no on an amendment. They are not reasons to prevent an amendment from being called up and being offered.

I will say again, I don't know where an amendment that is ready to be offered is not permitted to be offered because postcloture one side of the aisle has decided it is going to leave a first- and second-degree amendment standing out there without a vote in order to prevent other germane amendments from being voted on. I don't think that has ever happened. Obviously, we have reached the end of the 30 hours at times and there are still germane amendments that are pending. But this is not that situation.

There is no further debate on the Carnahan amendment that I know of. Why not vote on the Carnahan amendment? There is no further debate—or if there is, let the debate take place so that other people can offer their germane amendments. That is being precluded here. I believe it is a misuse of postcloture rules to do that.

That being the situation, I will be offering a unanimous consent at this time that my amendment be made in order at 2 p.m. on Monday.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. SANTORUM. I object.

Mr. LEVIN. I thank the Chair, and I will make a unanimous consent request again on Monday that we be allowed to offer germane amendments in the time that remains on Monday and that we not be precluded by a blocking action which, it seems to me, is a distortion and a misuse of the postcloture rules which are intended to allow 30 hours to consider germane amendments. If that 30 hours is being used up and either being sworn off or not used, it seems to me that then precludes consideration of highly relevant—indeed, germane—amendments which are important to strengthening this bill.

I thank the sponsors of this bill. It is a strong bill. There is no reason we should not be able to vote on a way to make it stronger.

I yield the floor.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, I appreciate the chance to speak about the Public Company Accounting Reform and Investor Protection Act. I would like to strengthen section 302 of this legislation which is entitled, "Corporate Responsibility For Financial Reports."

I have discussed several ideas with Senator SARBANES and greatly appreciate his leadership on this legislation. He has been tireless in his efforts to strengthen corporate accountability and protect the American investing public.

My first area of concern involves companies that have chosen to move their headquarters overseas. This legislation requires that CEOs and CFOs sign a statement saying that the financial documents they have filed are fair and accurate. This is consistent with an order just issued by the Securities and Exchange Commission, SEC, that requires CEOs and CFOs to attest to the accuracy of their company's most recent financial statement.

But there is a glaring omission to this recent SEC order. Only companies that are U.S.-based would be required to send in these signed documents. If a company once based in the U.S. has fled our shores and gone overseas for tax reasons, they now just received a reward for leaving our Nation. Those CEOs and CFOs would not have to sign financial documents and attest to their accuracy.

The SEC has also overlooked the accuracy of future financial documents by non-U.S.-based companies. Under a proposed rule, that is in the "open comment period," foreign based companies are again enjoying a lesser standard of accountability. This is wrong, and unfair to American companies.

In the proposed rule, the SEC does invite comments on how to cover overseas-based companies. However, this could be a case of "too little too late." If companies are being publicly traded in the United States, regardless of where their headquarters are located, they ought to be required to meet the same level of accountability that we are establishing for everyone else in this legislation.

Let's not give U.S.-based companies one more reason to leave our Nation and incorporate someplace else. We need to hold all companies in our markets to the same high standard—there should be no reward of a lower standard if your company leaves the U.S. for a new overseas headquarters.

My staff placed a call to the SEC to uncover the reason why foreign based companies were excluded from their recent order. To the credit of the SEC, they wanted to act quickly. They thought that the quickest way to promulgate this order was to cover only U.S.-based companies. However, in doing this quickly, they ended up sending the wrong message. U.S.-based CEOs and CFOs are "on the hook" in signed statements. Foreign-based CEOs and CFOs, simply put, are not.

Senator DORGAN and I want to change this. We want it to be clear in the statute that no matter where your company is based, you must comply with this obligation. Senator DORGAN has filed an amendment to correct this, amendment No. 4125.

I appreciate the consideration that the floor managers, Senator SARBANES and Senator GRAMM, have given our amendment and I encourage all my colleagues to support us in this effort. I look forward to seeing it in the final legislation.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, I rise today to urge my colleagues to take swift and decisive action to stem the tide of corporate greed that is eroding the integrity of America's capital markets. I am a strong believer in the free enterprise system, and I am proud of America's leadership in creating tremendous economic opportunity for all investors, big or small, domestic or foreign. However, it is time that Congress curb the appalling corporate excesses and misinformation that have hurt investors, employees and taxpayers. Passage of the Public Company Accounting Reform and Investor Protection Act is a critical step in addressing these concerns.

It is tempting to blame the problems corporate America is facing on just a few bad actors. For the most part, America's business men and women are industrious, innovative, and honest people who work hard to build our economy and provide jobs for our communities. However, we simply cannot ignore the shocking number and size of failed or failing companies, the marked increase in earnings restatements, and the profound toll this has taken on hard-working Americans. In fact, state pension funds have plummeted more than $1 billion from the WorldCom restatement and billions more from other companies involved in the scandals.

In light of these inexcusable revelations, it is hard to believe that these problems are just isolated instances. Almost daily discoveries of accounting irregularities at some of America's largest and most highly respected companies, such as Enron, WorldCom, Tyco, and Xerox, to name just a few, clearly demonstrate the need for systemic accounting and corporate governance reform. Just recently, in fact, the Wall Street Journal reported that the drug company Merck may have understated revenue by over $12 billion.

We must address systemic problems that are undermining the efficiency and transparency of our free market system, and which are eroding the faith of everyday Americans in the fundamental fairness of American business practices. We must clean up the current corporate culture that rewards misleading financial reporting and lax or corrupt corporate governance. We need strong legislation that will end the conflicts of interest and lack of disclosure that have misled investors and shaken their faith in America's financial markets. And we need to ensure that the SEC has the tools and money it needs to become a strong and formidable enforcer of securities laws. A kinder and gentler SEC serves only those corporate executives who have something to hide.

The Public Company Accounting Reform and Investor Protection Act addresses these problems in a way that limits regulatory burden but provides affirmative measures to restore the integrity of our free market system. I support the bill's creation of a strong Public Company Accounting Oversight Board and restrictions on non-audit services accounting firms can provide to public company audit clients. Further, the bill imposes tough new corporate responsibility standards and implements controls over stock analyst conflicts of interest. Also, the bill requires public companies to quickly and accurately disclose financial information, so that high-level executives don't have a head start over small investors in bailing out when a company is in trouble. Finally, the bill ensures that the SEC has the resources to accomplish its mission of regulating the securities markets.

On this last point, I was disappointed that President Bush's budget did not include money that the Banking Committee authorized last year that would have strengthened the SEC. The SEC has long been hobbled by its inability to compete for top-notch employees because of a pay scale that was out of line with other financial regulators. Late last year, Congress passed, and the President signed, H.R. 1088, which provided pay parity for SEC employees. Unfortunately, the President's budget did not allocate additional funds, making it difficult if not impossible for the SEC to carry out its enforcement mission. I am pleased that President Bush is now calling for additional funding for the SEC, which should be better able to police public companies with adequate resources.

Without the threat of real consequences, however, dishonest corporate executives have little to fear from being caught with their hands in the cookie jar. For this reason, Congress must implement a plan to hold irresponsible corporate executives responsible for their actions. We must not allow these criminals to hide behind the corporate veil, while stealing millions of dollars from hard-working Americans. In that vein, I support provisions contained in the Corporate and Criminal Fraud Accountability Act, sponsored by Senator LEAHY. The bill would provide stronger criminal penalties for corporate managers who defraud investors of publicly traded securities, criminal prosecution of persons who alter or destroy documents related to investigations, and protection for corporate whistleblowers against retaliation by their employers, among other provisions designed to protect investors from corporate greed.

Finally, I believe that we should take a strong stance against another form of corporate greed: corporations that profit from American consumers, yet intentionally dodge U.S. taxes by moving their headquarters abroad. It is outrageous that these so-called "American" companies take advantage of the benefits of operating in this country and yet shirk even the most basic responsibilities of corporate citizenship. That's why I strongly support the Tax Shelter Transparency Act, sponsored by Senator BAUCUS, which would close the loopholes that allow corporate executives to use evasive accounting tactics to enrich themselves on the backs of American taxpayers.

Before I close, I would like to thank Chairman SARBANES for his leadership on this important issue. I also want to thank the Chairman as well as the Banking Committee staff for conducting a series of ten inclusive and comprehensive hearings on the issues addressed in his bill. The content of those hearings provided a conceptual foundation for our subsequent discussions of Senator SARBANES' bill and a previous bill proposed by Senators DODD and CORZINE. In addition, our work has been enhanced by the fine contributions of Senator ENZI, who is the Senate's only Certified Public Accountant. The deliberative process used to develop this legislation has led to an appropriate, thoughtful, bipartisan bill that makes great strides in addressing the problems in our financial markets and restoring investor confidence.

Ms. LANDRIEU. Mr. President, I would like to voice my strong support for S. 2673, the Public Company Accounting Reform and Investor Protection Act. This legislation will bring accountability to our corporate boardrooms and end the accounting abuses that threaten to undermine the free enterprise system.

The hallmark of our economic system is free, fair, and open competition. The system rewards innovation, efficiently, and hard work. It allows individuals to take an idea, a dream, or an invention; build a business around it; and turn it into a livelihood. Some of our greatest corporations today started with just one idea.

The recent revelations from Wall Street have thrown much of this in doubt. For the Enrons, and WorldComs of the world, success was based on hiding losses, misstating earnings, destroying documents, and getting cozy with their so-called "independent" auditors and the stock analysis who are supposed to give the stock buying public objective information. Instead of winning through open competition, these companies and others won through accounting sleight-of-hand.

The price of this deception has been too high. While much has been made in the media about how far the Dow, the NASDAQ, and the S & P 500 have fallen on Wall Street, the real pain is being felt on Main Street—in retirement plans, pensions, and the investment portfolios of hard working people in our country. The pain is being felt by the very wealthy and people with modest means. Fortunately no Louisiana-based corporation has been caught up in this mess and hopefully that will remain the case, but many Louisiana investors were not so lucky.

Many have said that all of these problems have been caused by a few bad apples. But when we hear about corporations hiding losses, creating off-book partnerships, insider trading, and inside loans to corporate officers, it means that something may be wrong with the whole tree: the tree is rotten because of loopholes in regulations and limited oversight.

My State of Louisiana is home to a large number of small businesses—94,000 of the employer businesses in my state employ fewer than 500 people—and they employ about 54 percent of the state's workforce. This does not include the estimated 135,000 self-employed people in my state. I find myself wondering what small business owners think of all of the news reports about these big, sophisticated corporations and their crooked accounting?

Small business owners work hard to keep clean books. They do not have a team of creative accountants that turn losses into gains. The small business does not create sham, off-book partnerships to hide losses. I have never heard of a small business being forced to restate its earnings. Small business grow by playing by the rules. Many small business owners dream of taking the honest approach to turning their ideas and dreams into big businesses. How disheartening must it be for them to see that in the world of big corporate business the way to get ahead is by cheating.

The bill before us today will help restore faith in the free market. It creates a strong oversight board that will set auditing standards for public companies backed up with the power to investigate abuses. It gets rid of the inherent conflict of interest faced by accounting firms that provide management consulting services to their auditing clients. Here on the floor we have added tough criminal penalties to this bill and given greater protections to whistle blowers. The whistle blower protections are an especially needed reform. We want the honest people in business to know that there is still a place for them.

We must take this opportunity to restore confidence in the free market. I urge my colleagues to vote in favor of this legislation and I want to commend the chairman of the Committee, Mr. SARBANES, for bringing this legislation to the floor.

VOTE EXPLANATION

• Mr. KERRY. Mr. President, due to a longstanding commitment I was necessarily absent for the vote on cloture on the Public Company Accounting Reform and Investor Protection Act of 2002 (S. 2673). Although my vote would not have affected the outcome, had I been present, I would have voted for cloture on the bill. •

ANDEAN TRADE ACT

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Chair lay before the Senate a message from the House of Representatives on H.R. 3009.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Presiding Officer (Mr. BAUCUS) laid before the Senate the following message from the House of Representatives:

Resolved, That the House insist upon its amendment to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 3009) entitled "An Act to extend the Andean Trade Preference Act, to grant additional trade benefits under that Act, and for other purposes", and ask a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Ordered, That the following Members be the managers of the conference on the part of the House.

From the Committee on Ways and Means, for consideration of the House amendment and the Senate amendment, and modifications committed to conference: Mr. Thomas, Mr. Crane, and Mr. Rangel.

From the Committee on Education and the Workforce, for consideration of section 603 of the Senate amendment, and modifications committed to conference: Mr. Boehner, Mr. Sam Johnson of Texas, and Mr. George Miller of California.

From the Committee on Energy and Commerce, for consideration of section 603 of the Senate amendment, and modifications committed to conference: Mr. Tauzin, Mr. Bilirakis, and Mr. Dingell.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate disagree to the House amendment, agree to the request for a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and that the Chair be authorized to appoint conferees on the part of the Senate with the ratio being 3 to 2.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

TO AMEND FOREIGN ASSISTANCE ACT AND THE GLOBAL AIDS AND TUBERCULOSIS RELIEF ACT

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Foreign Relations Committee be discharged from further consideration of H.R. 2069 and the Senate proceed now to that matter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BAUCUS). Without objection, it is so ordered.

The clerk will report the bill by title.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (H.R. 2069) to amend the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961 to authorize assistance to prevent, treat, and monitor HIV/AIDS in sub-Saharan Africa and other developing countries.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to the immediate consideration of the bill.

AMENDMENT NO. 4297

(Purpose: To amend the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961 to increase assistance for foreign countries seriously affected by HIV/AIDS, tuberculosis, and malaria; to amend the Public Health Service Act with respect to the authority of the Department of Health and Human Services to act internationally with respect to HIV/AIDS, tuberculosis, and malaria; and for other purposes)

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The bill clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Nevada [Mr. REID], for Mr. KERRY, Mr. FRIST, Mr. KENNEDY, Mr.

BIDEN, and Mr. HELMS, proposes an amendment numbered 4297.

Mr. REID. I ask unanimous consent the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(The amendment is printed in today's RECORD under "Text of Amendments".)

AMENDMENT NO. 4298

Mr. REID. I send an amendment to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The bill clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Nevada [Mr. REID], for Mr. KERRY, Mr. FRIST, Mr. KENNEDY, Mr. BIDEN, and Mr. HELMS, proposes an amendment numbered 4298.

Mr. REID. I ask unanimous consent the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

(Purpose: To amend the title)

Amend the title to read as follows: "An Act to amend the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961 to increase assistance for foreign countries seriously affected by HIV/AIDS, tuberculosis, and malaria; to amend the Public Health Service Act with respect to the authority of the Department of Health and Human Services to act internationally with respect to HIV/AIDS, tuberculosis, and malaria; and for other purposes."

Mr. REID. I ask unanimous consent both amendments at the desk be agreed to; the bill, as amended, be read the third time and passed; the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table, all with no intervening action or debate; and any statements be placed in the RECORD at the appropriate place as if read.

Mr. SANTORUM. Reserving the right to object—and I will not object—this is a very important piece of legislation for the continent of Africa and has to do with AIDS relief, tuberculosis, and other infectious diseases. There is a provision in this legislation that Senator BIDEN and I have offered on debt relief for Third World countries. This is a vitally important piece of legislation that dovetails very well with the President's initiative in trying to stem the scourge of AIDS in Africa and provide some hope for some of these heavily debt ridden countries.

I am very pleased we were able to do this in wrap-up today. I will not object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment (No. 4297) was agreed to.

The amendment (No. 4298) was agreed to.

The bill (H.R. 2069), as amended, was read the third time and passed.

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. President, I am very pleased that we have just passed a bill that will give the President and his team the tools they will need to back up their words about fighting the scourge of HIV and AIDS with action.

The omnibus HIV, AIDS, TB, and malaria authorization bill vastly increases our focus on treatment, giving hope to the millions of people already infected with this virus. It intensifies our ongoing prevention efforts. And it makes a new commitment to training local health care workers so that underdeveloped nations can create modern health infrastructures.

The bill also authorizes nearly $5 billion over 2 years so that this commitment is matched with the resources to get it done. But unless we work in a bipartisan fashion to see that money appropriated, this bill offers little more than false hope. I want to commend Senators KENNEDY, KERRY, BIDEN, HELMS, FRIST, and GREGG for their leadership on this vital effort. And I want to ask the House of Representatives to match the commitment the Senate has shown.

More than 20 million people have already died from HIV/AIDS. Last year, 5 million people contracted the virus, more than half of these new infections in young people. The UN estimates that 65 million more people could die by 2020. These numbers are so horrible as to seem unreal. But they are real, and we must act. Nothing we can do here is the solution—but today the Senate is taking a step, and a meaningful one.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, first of all I thank our majority leader for his leadership in the development of this legislation, which is true bipartisan legislation. It is the United States Leadership on HIV/AIDS, Tuberculosis, and Malaria Act to deal with the AIDS pandemic that is most evident in the continent of Africa, and also expanding it through India, central Asia, China, and so many parts of the Third World.

I am grateful to him for his persistence in making sure that this legislation would pass just a few moments ago. I thank him and I thank the cooperation of our Republican leader as well, making sure the Senate would go on record, as it did a few moments ago, in favor of this extremely important legislation.

At the outset I want to acknowledge the very strong leadership of my friends and colleagues in this body who have been very much involved in shaping and helping develop this legislation: Senator KERRY, my colleague from Massachusetts, who had introduced very similar legislation with members of the Foreign Relations Committee, Senators BIDEN, BOXER, DASCHLE, DEWINE, DODD, DURBIN, FEINGOLD, FRIST, HAGEL, HELMS, LEAHY, LUGAR, SANTORUM, SARBANES, SMITH of Oregon, and WELLSTONE. This is truly not only bipartisan, but it is also a real reflection from all different philosophies, of the recognition that the United States has an important opportunity—in many respects, a responsibility—to take action.

I am grateful to all those Members for their support of our legislation. I also thank a number of our colleagues, Senators EDWARDS, FEINSTEIN, FRIST, HARKIN, JEFFORDS, MIKULSKI, MURRAY, and REED, who are strong supporters of this program.

We, in America, know the pain and the loss that this disease cruelly inflicts. Millions of our fellow citizens—men, women, and children—are infected with HIV/AIDS, and far too many have lost their lives.

While we still seek a cure to AIDS, we have learned to help those infected by the virus to lead long and productive lives through the miracle of prescription drugs. But this disease knows no boundaries. It travels across borders to infect innocent people in every continent across the globe. We have an obligation to continue the fight against this disease at home. But we should also share what we have learned to help those in other countries in this life-and-death battle. And we must do all we can to provide new resources to help those who cannot afford today's therapies. We must carry the fight against AIDS to every corner of the globe, and the legislation passed this afternoon is a step in that direction.

The United States Leadership Against HIV/AIDS, Tuberculosis, and Malaria Act of 2002 provides new legal authority and funding to our nation's strongest health care agencies to join the global battle against AIDS. It promotes models of community-based care that reach the real people affected by this disease; better access to the research and therapies needed to prevent transmission of this deadly disease; and most importantly, funds research and treatment models to prevent transmission of HIV/AIDS from mothers to their infants including the family support service necessary to stem the orphan crisis.

Governments can make the difference in battling this epidemic. When governments in poor countries have been provided resources to fight the spread of AIDS, infection rates have dropped 80 percent. With this legislation, the United States will do its part to support countries to turn the corner on AIDS on their own.

I am pleased that the administration increased funding for the fight against the global AIDS epidemic, and together with this legislation, we can truly lead the international community in the fight against the greatest public health threat of our times.

I have a summary of the legislation that I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD. I think it will help people better understand the aspects of the legislation that can really not only make an immediate lifesaving difference to millions of our fellow human beings in Africa but to those other Third World countries as well.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SUMMARY OF THE UNITED STATES LEADERSHIP AGAINST HIV/AIDS, TUBERCULOSIS, AND MALARIA ACT OF 2002

The bill strikes all after the enacting clause of the House-passed HIV/AIDS bill (H.R. 2069) and inserts S. 2525 (Kerry) and S. 2649 (Kennedy). Both bills have broad bipartisan support.

S. 2525 (Kerry) was co-sponsored by Senators Biden, Boxer, Daschle, DeWine, Dodd, Durbin, Feingold, Frist, Hagel, Helms, Leahy, Lugar, Santorum, Sarbanes, Smith (OR), and Wellstone. S. 2649 (Kennedy) was co-sponsored by Senators Bingaman, Clinton, Corzine, Daschle, DeWine, Dodd, Durbin, Edwards, Feinstein, Frist, Harkin, Jeffords, Mikulski, Murray, Reed, Santorum, and Sarbanes.

The S. 2525 portion of the bill would:

Mandate a comprehensive, integrated 5-year U.S. government strategy for promoting goals and objectives of the June 2001 UN General Assembly Declaration of Commitment on HIV/AIDS;

Require the U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID) to develop an "empowerment of women" plan, including provision of currently available technologies to prevent the spread of HIV/AIDS;

Create a new HIV/AIDS Response Coordinator in the Department of State;

Create a new Health Care Provider Service and Training Program enabling American health care professionals to provide basic health care services and on-the-ground training to African and other countries severely affected by HIV/AIDS, tuberculosis and malaria; and Require a comprehensive report on U.S. efforts to increase access to treatment for people living with HIV/AIDS.

The bill would authorize more than $4.5 billion over two years for U.S. efforts to fight global HIV/AIDS, tuberculosis and malaria. Of this, $2.152 billion would be authorized in FY 2003, including $1 billion for the Global Fund to Fight HIV/AIDS, Tuberculosis and Malaria, and $2.521 billion would be authorized in FY 2004, including $1.2 billion for the Global Fund.

The bill would require a new 5-year strategy to meet or exceed the maternal-to-child transmission (MTCT) goals in the UN Declaration of Commitment on HIV/AIDS; create a new Assistance to Children Program to provide care and treatment to parents and/or care givers infected with HIV; and mandate a comprehensive report on U.S. government MTCT and MTCT plus programs.

The bill would authorize expansion of the Enhanced Heavily Indebted Poor Countries (HIPC) Initiative to achieve debt reduction for health programs; expand the Department of Defense's HIV/AIDS Prevention Education Program to include countries beyond Africa and international peacekeepers; and set forth an HIV/AIDS Code of Conduct for U.S. Businesses Abroad.

Funding levels for this portion of the bill are summarized in the attached chart.

The S. 2649 portion of the bill would: authorize $400 million (in 2003) for the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) and Health Resources Services Administration (HRSA) to work in collaboration with USAID to carry out care, treatment, and capacity building for HIV/AIDS, malaria, and tuberculosis in countries with, or at-risk for severe HIV/AIDS epidemics.

The bill would authorize $50 million (in both 2003 and 2004) for grants for clinical education and training in the delivery of HIV/AIDS care and treatment services; authorize $45 million (in 2003) and $30 million (in 2004), out of amounts authorized under Prevention and Treatment, for public-private partnerships to prevent mother-to-child transmission; provide for inter-agency coordination of global HIV/AIDS initiatives under the Secretary of Health and Human Services (HHS); direct the HHS Secretary to write a strategic plan to carry out and support microbicide research, develop research teams through contacts with private and public entities, and report to Congress on this initiative; and authorize $10 million (in 2003) for the Department of Labor for work-based prevention and education programs that protect against discrimination, promote on-site wellness, and strengthen collaboration among governmental, business, and labor leaders.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I thank the Chair. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDER OF PROCEDURE

Mr. REID. Mr. President, we intend to be back on this bill at 1 o'clock on Monday. I ask unanimous consent the Senator from Michigan, Mr. LEVIN, be recognized at 1 o'clock when we resume consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate reconvenes on Monday and resumes consideration of this bill at 1 o'clock, there be 5 hours of time left postcloture.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate now proceed to a period of morning business with Senators allowed to speak therein for up to 10 minutes each.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ANNIVERSARY OF THE REORGANIZATION OF THE SENATE JUDICIARY COMMITTEE

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, this week marks the first anniversary of the reorganization of the Senate Judiciary Committee following the change in majority last year. This past year has been a busy one for our committee.

Just this week the Senate adopted as an amendment to the accounting reform and investor protection bill the text of S. 2010, the Corporate and Criminal Fraud Accountability Act. That is a bill we reported in May after committee action in February and April. The Senate also acted on important amendments offered by Senator BIDEN, Senator HATCH, and Senator EDWARDS to that bill and many members of this committee have made important contributions to improve these measures over the last several months.

In the days and months following the terrorist attacks on September 11, members of this committee led the Senate in its responses leading to enactment of the USA PATRIOT Act, the Enhanced Border Security and Visa Entry Reform Act, the Terrorist Bombings Convention Implementation Act, and the Mychal Judge Police and Fire Chaplains Public Safety Officers' Benefit Act. The committee also reported a number of resolutions to honor the victims of those attacks with the Public Safety Medal of Valor and the Law Enforcement Tribute Act, S. 2431. We continue to work on important matters for victims of terrorism.

We have reported a number of other law enforcement related measures including the Drug Abuse Education, Prevention and Treatment Act, S. 304; the Federal Judiciary Protection Act, S. 1099; the National Child Protection Improvement Act, S. 1868; the Safe Explosives Act, S. 1956; the National Cyber Security Defense Team Authorization Act, S. 1989; a bill clarifying the definition of "vehicle," S. 2621; and an annual authorization for the Department of Justice, S. 1319 and its House counterpart H.R. 2215. The committee reported the Local Law Enforcement Enhancement Act, S. 625, which is an important hate crimes bill; and the COPS Reauthorization Act, S. 924, which extends the highly successful COPS Program. We have also reported legislation on identity theft, such as the Social Security Number Misuse Prevention Act, S. 848, and the Restore Your Identity Act, S. 1742.

In addition, we have reported a number of measures to improve competitive business conditions and protect consumers, such as the Drug Competition Act, S. 754; the Motor Vehicle Franchise Contract Arbitration Fairness Act, S. 1140; and the Product Packaging Protection Act, S. 1233. We have acted on important intellectual property legislation, such as the Madrid Protocol Implementation Act, S. 407; the TEACH Act, S. 487; and the Patent and Trademark Office Authorization Act, S. 1754, as well as related House measures H.R. 1866 and H.R. 1886.

We have reported and worked on a number of immigration matters, including the Anti-Atrocity Alien Deportation Act, S. 864; the Child Status Protection Act, S. 672, and its House counterpart, H.R. 1209; a bill for children of Vietnamese refugees, H.R. 1840; bills to provide work authorization for spouses, H.R. 2277 and H.R. 2278; and others.

Among our most important work has been our aggressive oversight efforts involving the Department of Justice, the FBI, the INS, and the Civil Rights Division. Our oversight efforts have already led to the committee's reporting a bipartisan FBI Reform Act, S. 1974, which is awaiting Senate action.

This week the committee finally began its consideration of a most important legislative initiative we began years ago, the Innocence Protection Act, S. 486.

All in all, in our first year we reported 80 legislative matters and over 250 Presidential nominations to the Senate. We have held more than 100 hearings during our first tumultuous year.

We have had a record year in considering this President's nominees. Partisans have perpetuated an untrue and unfortunate myth that the Democratic-led Senate and Judiciary Committee have blocked the President's nominees. Nothing could be further from the truth.

The Democratic-led Judiciary Committee has had a recordbreaking year fairly and promptly considering President Bush's nominees. In addition to the dozens of high-ranking Justice Department officials for whom we held hearings, and our work in connection with more than 180 executive branch nominees the committee reported, we have had a record year with respect to judicial nominees.

In this, our first year, we held hearings for 78 of the President's nominees. That is more hearings for this President's district and circuit court nominees than ever held in any of the 6½ years that preceded the change in majority last summer.

In particular, we held more hearings for more of President Bush's circuit court nominees, 16, than in any of the 6½ years in which the Republicans controlled the committee before the change in majority last summer. For that matter, we held twice as many hearings for court of appeals nominees than were held in the first year of the Reagan administration when the Senate was controlled by Republicans and five times more than in the first year of the Clinton administration when the Senate was controlled by Democrats. Those are the facts.

Under Democratic leadership, this Committee in its first year also voted on more judicial nominees, 74, than in any of the 6½ years of Republican control that preceded the change in majority. We voted on almost twice as many circuit court nominees, 15, than the Republican majority averaged in the years they were in control. In fact, this last year we voted on more nominees than were voted on in 1999 and 2000 combined and on more circuit court nominees than the Republicans allowed during 1996 and 1997 combined. And the committee voted on an additional court of appeals nominee yesterday.

We have achieved what we said we would by treating President Bush's nominees more fairly and more expeditiously than President Clinton's nominees were treated by Republicans. By many measures the Senate Judiciary Committee has achieved almost twice as much this last year as Republicans averaged during their years in control.

The Senate has confirmed more circuit and district court judges, 57, than were confirmed during 2000, 1999, 1997, 1996, and 1995, 5 of the prior 6 years of Republican control of the Senate. Republicans averaged 38 confirmations a year. By contrast the Democratic Senate achieved 57 judicial confirmations in our first 10 months, before the Administration's obstructionism stalled Senate floor actions on nominations for more than 2 months. There are another 17 judicial nominees on the Senate Executive Calendar. The delay in the votes on these nominees has been due to the delay in the administration's fulfilling its responsibility to work with the Senate in the naming of members of bipartisan boards and commissions.

I congratulate the majority leader for overcoming this impediment and for his patience and determination in achieving some movement on these matters. I understand that he hopes to be able to resume voting on judicial nominations as soon as next Monday. Had the administration not caused this delay, I am confident that the Senate would have confirmed more than 70 judicial nominations before the end of this week and far outdistanced any Republican total for any preceding year. Nonetheless, we were able to overcome the other obstacles created by the administration and proceed to confirm 57 circuit and district court nominees in our first 10 months in the majority, a record outpacing any Republican total in any 10-month period in which they held the majority.

We have also addressed longstanding vacancies on circuit courts caused by Republican obstruction of President Clinton's judicial nominees. We held the first hearing for a Fifth Circuit nominee in 7 years, the first hearings for Sixth Circuit nominees in almost 5 years, the first hearing for a Tenth Circuit nominee in 6 years, and the first hearings for Fourth Circuit nominees in 3 years.

We have reformed the process for considering judicial nominees. For example, we have ended the practice of anonymous holds that plagued the period of Republican control, when any Republican Senator could hold any nominee from his home State, his own circuit or any part of the country for any reason, or no reason, without any acknowledgment or accountability. We have returned to the Democratic tradition of holding regular hearings, every few weeks, rather than going for months without a single hearing.

It would certainly have been easier and less work to retaliate for the unfair treatment of the last President's judicial nominees. We did not. We have been, and will continue to be, more fair than the Republican majority was to President Clinton's judicial nominees. More than 50 of Clinton's nominees never got a vote; many languished for months and years before they were returned without a hearing. Others waited years—not just a year, but up to more than 4 years to be confirmed. Some never were accorded a hearing, some were finally confirmed after years of delay.

Those who now seek to pretend that the Democratic majority in the Senate caused a vacancy crisis in the Federal courts are ignoring the facts. Under Republicans, court vacancies rose from 63 in January 1995 to 110 in July 2001, when the committee reorganized. During Republican control before the reorganization of the committee, vacancies on the courts of appeals more than doubled, increasing from 16 to 33. That is what we inherited. But in 1 year of Democratic control, and despite 45 additional vacancies caused largely by the retirements of many past Republican appointees, we have reduced the number of district and circuit court vacancies.

Vacancies continue to exist on the court of appeals, in particular, because a Republican Senate majority was not willing to hold hearings or vote on more than half—56 percent—of President Clinton's circuit nominees in 1999 and 2000, and was not willing to confirm a single circuit judge during the entire 1996 session. Republicans caused the circuit vacancy crisis, and it has taken a tremendous effort to evaluate and have hearings for 16 circuit court nominees in less than a year.

We are hard at work evaluating the records of the few remaining nominees who have not yet had hearings. While we have moved as quickly as possible to evaluate all of the nominees, the Senate is not, and should not be, a rubber stamp. If this President is successful in filling all of the vacancies he inherited due to Republican obstruction as well as the new vacancies that have arisen on the circuits, Republican appointees will constitute the majority, and often a two-thirds majority, on 11 of the 13 appellate courts below the Supreme Court. Such a takeover would affect the next 20 years of judicial decisions coming from the courts of appeal.

The President and his advisers know this and, aside from the few relatively moderate nominees we have been able to confirm quickly, they have also chosen a number of people with records of judicial activism or out-of-mainstream ideology, including several young men in their thirties and early forties, for many of these lifetime appointments to the federal bench. What the President and his advisers acknowledge they are doing is nominating ideologically conservative judicial nominees to stack the fifth, sixth, and DC Circuits with judicial activists of their choice. That is part two of the Republican strategy.

In part one, several Republicans in the Senate prevented many of these vacancies from being filled in the first place, so that whatever balance there might be, or might have been, on those courts is missing. They kept off well qualified moderate nominees, not chosen because of any litmus test or ideology. They did so to provide a Republican President with the opportunity to load the bench, especially the appellate court bench, with right wingers.

Advice and consent does not mean giving the President carte blanche to pack the courts. The ingenious system of checks and balances in our Constitution does not give the power to make lifetime appointments to one person alone, to remake the courts along narrow ideological lines, to pack the courts with judges whose views are outside of the mainstream, and whose decisions would further divide our Nation.

We have worked hard to balance these competing concerns over the past year: how to address the vacancy crisis we inherited, while also not being a rubberstamp and abdicating our responsibilities to provide a democratic check on the President's choices for lifetime appointment to the Federal courts. These are the only lifetime appointments in our system of government, and they matter a great deal to our future.

In 1801, when Thomas Jefferson, the first President who was not a member of the Federalist Party was elected, he faced a similar situation. The Federalists in Congress had passed, and the lame duck President Adams had signed, a bill creating a number of new seats on the Federal courts. President Adams then appointed a number of Federalists who have been called "midnight judges." One of the first things President Jefferson did was to get that law repealed and to refuse to sign the appointment papers of some of those judges. That is part of the story of the famous Supreme Court case, Marbury v. Madison.

Thus, it took only 12 years of our new Nation for an effort to pack the courts to occur. It took the first transition in political parties for one to give in to the temptation to try to stack the deck and affect the outcome of cases through the appointment of judges.

The best-known attempt to pack the courts occurred during the administration of President Franklin Roosevelt. President Roosevelt's attempt to pack the Supreme Court with justices of his choosing, to get more votes on the side of cases he wanted to win, was rejected by Congress and the American people.

If one thoroughly examines the types of nominees this President is sending us, one might conclude that we are facing another attempt to pack the courts. The Senate Judiciary Committee is working very hard to analyze all of President Bush's judicial nominees fairly, one by one. In our first year, we have already had 21 hearings on 78 judicial nominees, including 16 circuit court nominees. We are planning another hearing for next week.

In the meantime, Republicans have been unfairly critical that not every nominee has yet had a hearing or been confirmed. Some have asserted that there is some sort of "honeymoon" period for Presidents in getting confirmation of their first choices for the courts. Of course, the Constitution provides for no such abdication of responsibility for a President's first few lifetime appointees or his last. To support this extra-constitutional theory, Republicans assert that the last three Presidents had a 100-percent confirmation rate of their first several circuit court nominees. When they say this, they conveniently leave a few details out. First, it took previous Senates more than a year to confirm 11 circuit court nominees of past Presidents. We have only had a year and the Senate has already confirmed nine of this President's circuit court nominees and five more are awaiting a vote by the full Senate.

President George W. Bush has said previously that he would choose judges in the mold of two ideologically conservative activists, Justice Scalia and Justice Thomas. No judicial nominees should be rubber-stamped by the Senate, not even a President's first few choices. All nominees for these lifetime positions merit careful review by the Senate. When a President is using ideological criterion to select nominees, it is fair for the Senate to consider it as well. Federalist Society credentials are not a substitute for fairness, moderation or judicial temperament. When a President is intent on packing the courts and stacking the deck on outcomes, consideration of balance and how ideological and activist nominees will affect a court are valid considerations for Senators entrusted by the Constitution to evaluate these lifetime appointees.

The high dudgeon expressed by Republicans about the order in which we have been considering this President's circuit court nominees is especially unwarranted in light of the objectively unfair way they treated President Clinton's circuit court nominees. Some of the vacancies we inherited date back to 1990, 1994 and 1996.

Partisans conveniently ignore the Republicans' terrible record of obstruction when they complain that a few of President Bush's nominees have not yet had a hearing. Those nominees chosen without consultation with both parties in the Senate and, in particular, those who do not have home-State Senator support do not get hearings, according to longstanding Senate tradition. Republicans have tried to measure our achievements by standards they never met but surely even they are not now suggesting overriding the longstanding Senate tradition of consent or blue slips from both home-State Senators on which they themselves insisted. Republicans averaged only seven confirmations a year for President Clinton's circuit court nominees. We confirmed nine in our first 10 months.

I have tried to work with the White House on judicial nominations. I have gone out of my way to encourage them to work in a bipartisan way with the Senate, like past Presidents, but in all too many instances they have chosen to bypass bipartisanship. I have encouraged them to include the ABA in the process earlier, like past Presidents, but they have refused to do so even though their decision adds to the length of time nominations must be pending before the Senate before they can be considered.

This past January, I again called on the President to stop playing politics with judicial nominations and act in a bipartisan manner. Just last month I sent a detailed letter to the President on these issues. My efforts to help the White House improve the judicial nominations process have been rejected. My most recent effort met with a perfunctory acknowledgment or receipt, which I will ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at the end of my remarks. Unfortunately, this letter is about the most constructive response that I have received from the White House to my many efforts to improve the process and speed up the filling of judicial vacancies with qualified, fair-minded judges.

Republican statements on judicial nominees regularly rely on superficially appealing but misleading statistics to gloss over the types of nominees they are choosing for our Federal courts. For example, they complain that Presidents Reagan, Bush and Clinton got 97, 95 and 97 percent, respectively, of their first 100 judicial nominations confirmed. What they conveniently fail to mention is that it took 2 full years for President Reagan to have 89 of his judicial nominees confirmed, and well into year 3 to reach the 100 mark. Similarly, the first President Bush had only 71 judicial nominees confirmed after 2 full years, and it took well into year 3 to reach 100 confirmations.

We are moving quickly, but responsibly, to fill judicial vacancies with qualified nominees we hope will not be activists. In our first year we confirmed 57 judges and reported 74 judicial nominees. Partisans ignore these facts. The facts are that we are reporting President Bush's nominees at a faster pace than the nominees of prior Presidents, including those who worked closely with a Senate majority of the same political party. We have accomplished all this during a period of tremendous tumult and crisis.

The Judiciary Committee noticed the first hearing on judicial nominations within 10 minutes of the reorganization of the Senate, and held that hearing on the day after the committee was assigned new members. Yesterday was the 1-year anniversary of that first hearing for Judge Roger Gregory, who was initially nominated by President Clinton, but like so many other judicial candidates, including other African-American nominees to the Fourth Circuit, his nomination languished without a hearing by the Republican-controlled Senate. Because of this history of inaction on such nominees to that court, President Clinton made a recess appointment to make Roger Gregory the first African-American judge in history to sit on the Fourth Circuit, and he sent his nomination for a permanent position on that court back to the Senate at the beginning of the 107th Congress. Unfortunately, President Bush withdrew Judge Gregory's nomination in March of 2001, but he finally sent it back to us later that year. When the Senate Judiciary Committee held the hearing on the nomination of Judge Roger Gregory to the Fourth Circuit last year, it was the first hearing on a Fourth Circuit nominee in 3 years, although five nominees to that court during that period were never given hearings by Republicans.

Subsequent to that hearing, we held unprecedented hearings during the August recess last year and proceeded with a hearing 2 days after the 9/11 attacks and shortly after the anthrax attack. We will hold our 22nd hearing for judicial nominees next week. We are doing our best to address the vacancy crisis we inherited.

The Senate Judiciary Committee and the Democratic-led Senate has a record of achievement and of fairness to be proud of on this anniversary. I thank the Members who have worked cooperatively with me to make progress in so many areas over the last year.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the letter previously referred to be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, June 27, 2002.

Hon. PATRICK LEAHY,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR LEAHY: This is to acknowledge the receipt of your letter to the President expressing the need for bipartisan cooperation while the Senate considers judicial nominations.

I hope you will understand that in light of the tragic events of September 11th, enhanced screening of all incoming White House mail prevented our office from receiving your correspondence and providing you with a prompt reply to your letter.

I have shared your letter with the President's advisors and the appropriate agencies who have been formulating policy recommendations in this area. Your letter is receiving their close and careful attention.

Thank you for your patience.

Sincerely,

NICHOLAS E. CALIO,
Assistant to the President and Director of Legislative Affairs.

HONORING 65 MEN FROM ALEXANDRIA WHO WERE KILLED IN ACTION OR MISSING IN ACTION IN SOUTHEAST ASIA DURING THE VIETNAM WAR

Mr. ALLEN. Mr President, I rise today to recognize 65 fallen servicemen from Alexandria, VA, who paid the ultimate sacrifice with their life while defending freedom in the Vietnam war.

No mere words can express the depth of gratitude this country owes to the families of our fallen service members for the loss of their sons, daughters, brothers, sisters, husbands, or wives. By touching their names etched in granite and marble on monuments and statues in countries around the world, we who are living and those who come after us have the ability to connect with these fallen heroes. We must never take the sacrifices of past generations of Americans for granted, for each new generation is called upon to defend representative democracy's first axiom: that "freedom is not free."

On July 6, 2002, the city of Alexandria dedicated a beautiful memorial plaza to pay tribute to the 65 fallen American heroes from Alexandria who were killed in action or who remain missing in action in southeast Asia from the Vietnam war. Toby Mendez, a brilliant young sculptor, has created a work that will allow us to touch the names of the brave men whose sacrifice will be memorialized for all time.

A statue of U.S. Army Cpt. Humbert Roque "Rocky" Versace is the centerpiece of the plaza. On July 8, 2002, I had the distinct honor of being present at the White House for the posthumous awarding of the Medal of Honor by President George W. Bush for Rocky's conspicuous gallantry at the risk of his life above and beyond the call of duty while a captive of the Viet Cong from October 29, 1964, until he was executed on or about September 26, 1965. His captors took his life after they had given up trying to break Rocky's indomitable will to resist interrogation and indoctrination, his unshakable faith in God, and his steadfast trust in his country and his fellow prisoners.

Captain Versace was a 1959 graduate of the U.S. Military Academy and lived his life by the West Point ideals of Duty, Honor, and Country. His fellow prisoner, U.S. Army 1st Lt James Nicholas "Nick" Rowe recalled that Rocky told his captors that "as long as he was true to God and true to himself, what was waiting for him after this life was far better than anything that could happen now. So he told his captors that they might as well kill him then and there if the price of his life was getting more from him than name, rank, and serial number."

Captain Versace's statue shows him holding hands with two Vietnamese children, who had been orphaned by Viet Cong terror against their parents. Rocky did many good works on his own to improve the lives of the many orphans he came in contact with. In fact, he planned on entering the Maryknoll priesthood after his tour of duty ended in Vietnam. It was Rocky's desire to return to Vietnam after ordination to be a missionary priest to work among the villagers and help educate their children so they could achieve a better life for themselves, free of Communist domination.

The remains of Captain Versace and three other men from Alexandria lie in unmarked graves in southeast Asia, known only to God. They are: U.S. Army SSG Douglas Randolph Blodgett; U.S. Air Force Maj Joseph Edwin Davies; and U.S. Air Force Maj Morgan Jefferson Donahue.

Additionally, two other servicemen drowned, and their bodies did not resurface: U.S. Army 1st Lt Leland S. McCants III, who drowned on his first day in Vietnam while trying to save another soldier; and U.S. Navy Seaman Apprentice John Anthony Winkler, who was swept off of the deck of the Navy aircraft carrier USS Bon Homme Richard and was lost at sea. The waters, jungles, and mountains of southeast Asia may never reveal these missing men's remains, but the U.S. Government is committed to continue to search for all those of our missing in action personnel, those brave souls who, in the words of General of the Army Douglas MacArthur gave up their "youth and strength, . . . love and loyalty . . . all that mortality can give."

Each of the 65 names engraved on the limestone benches in Alexandria has a story to tell of honor and courage. Two outstanding examples of the dedication and service of this fine group of men are Robert William Cupp and Herman Leroy Judy, Jr.

U.S. Army Cpl. Robert William Cupp served proudly with Company D, 2d Battalion, 1st Infantry Brigade of the Americal Division. He was killed in action in South Vietnam on June 6, 1968, by an enemy booby trap. Corporal Cupp was laid to rest in his family's plot at Mount Comfort Cemetery on June 17, 1968, his 21st birthday.

U.S. Cpl. Herman Leroy Judy, Jr. served proudly with Company B, 2nd Battalion, 505th Infantry, 82nd Airborne Division. He was killed in action in South Vietnam on May 29, 1969, a day before his first wedding anniversary. He is buried in Arlington National Cemetery.

Both of these brave men received the Combat Infantryman's Badge, Bronze Star Medal, and Purple Heart Medal for their heroism in combat.

Plato, that wise philosopher of ancient times, observed that "only the dead have known the end of war." So it is today with the never-ending struggle between freedom and evil. All those brave men and women who proudly wear the uniform of our armed services, and who willingly risk their lives to achieve battlefield victories over our enemies, deserve our Nation's eternal gratitude.

Mr. President, it is my great honor to enter into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD the names of the 65 men from Alexandria who were killed in action or remain missing in action in southeast Asia during the Vietnam war, and who were memorialized on July 6, 2002.

I ask unanimous consent that the list be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the list was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ADDITIONAL STATEMENTS

RECOGNIZING THE NATIONAL HIGH SCHOOL FINALS RODEO IN FARMINGTON, NM

• Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I rise to recognize the Tres Rios High School Rodeo Association, which will soon host the 2002 National High School Finals Rodeo in Farmington, NM. The association, formed in cooperation with San Juan County and the cities of Farmington, Aztec, and Bloomfield, is rolling out the welcome mat for all to visit the beautiful Four Corners area of New Mexico for the July 22–28 competition.

I join in welcoming the thousands of student athletes and spectators who will descend on Farmington to celebrate the athleticism associated with the rodeo competitions. Farmington, a burgeoning city that has already proven itself as an excellent host for sporting events with the annual Connie Mack World Series tournament, will be a wonderful setting for this rodeo. The Tres Rios High School Rodeo Association knows it is in a national spotlight for showcasing a richly blessed, multicultural region that has been cherished since the dawn of the ancient Anasazi and Navajo cultures.

Just last month, I had the pleasure of meeting with students from San Juan County who briefed me on their work to host this national competition. Their enthusiasm and excitement was contagious, and I share in their anticipation for hosting the rodeo in northwest New Mexico. This is a great opportunity for the youth in the area to showcase their talents, and an excellent chance to boost the Four Corners area economy.

This year's competition is a continuation of a tradition begun in 1949 in Hallettsville, TX, with the first National Championship Rodeo. That contest laid the foundation for what became the National Championship High School Rodeo Association. New Mexico was one of the first five charter members. Subsequently, in 1961, this association was incorporated into the National High School Rodeo Association and included 20 states. Today, they have grown to include 39 States and two foreign countries.

Every year, the National High School Rodeo Association holds a National High School Finals Rodeo. New Mexico has been the proud host of three previous finals, and is proudly hosting the 2002 and 2003 competitions at the San Juan County Fairgrounds.

The National High School Rodeo Association serves to challenge high school students to keep alive a rich tradition of Western life through rodeo competitions. By providing a competitive environment, participants learn the spirit of sportsmanship and grow as individuals. In addition, participation in the association promotes student achievement and provides opportunities for college scholarships and further professional development. I believe their efforts at furthering student education bodes well for the association, and I applaud them for impacting young lives in such a positive manner.

Being selected as a host site is an honor, and I commend the Tres Rios High School Rodeo Association, San Juan County, the cities of Farmington, Aztec and Bloomfield, and everyone associated with the event for their efforts to prepare for the National High School Finals Rodeo. I wish all participants in the rodeo the best of luck.●

TRIBUTE TO JOE FORD

• Mrs. LINCOLN. Mr. President, for the last several months the American people have been subjected to a string of stunning revelations from some of our largest public companies. Accounting irregularities, shady business practices, and exorbitant executive compensation packages are apparently standard operating practice in some of our corporate boardrooms. As a result, thousands of families have lost their jobs and their savings, and investor confidence in our system of free enterprise has been severely shaken.

I would like to take a few minutes today to pay tribute to an Arkansas businessman who represents a vastly different picture of the American business leader Joe Ford of ALLTEL Corporation, who retired from his position as CEO this year.

A native of Conway, AR, Joe graduated from the University of Arkansas in 1959 before joining Little Rock's Allied Telephone Company. He advanced through several management positions and was named vice-president in 1963. By 1977, he was named president of Allied, a position he held until 1983 when his company merged with the Mid-Continent Telephone Corporation of Hudson, OH, to form ALLTEL. This merger, along with the 1990 purchase of Systematics, Inc., in Little Rock, laid the foundation for the telecommunications leader that ALLTEL has since become. Joe Ford was named ALLTEL president and CEO in 1987. He became chairman and CEO in 1991.

In a competitive and rapidly changing environment, Joe steered ALLTEL through a number of changes, including the deregulation of the telephone industry. He also led ALLTEL into a number of new, growing markets most notably wireless communications.

When ALLTEL turned on its cellular service in 1986, they had only 310 customers. Ford and many of his colleagues were unsure as to whether the new technology would catch on. But as we know now, the wireless industry exploded, and ALLTEL expanded across the southeastern United States. Today, ALLTEL covers portions of 23 States, serving six million wireless customers. Today, the company has expanded even further into information services, financial services, and mortgage processing.

When Joe Ford joined Allied Telephone in 1959, the company had 65 employees and 5,000 telephone customers. Today, ALLTEL is my State's largest high-tech company, with 4,100 employees working at the main campus in Little Rock. ALLTEL is also the sixth largest wireline and wireless company in the world, a Fortune 500 company with 26,000 employees worldwide serving 8 million communications customers. Many have contributed to ALLTEL's success in the American marketplace, but clearly it has been Joe Ford's vision and leadership that has brought the company to this level.

I will also pause to note that, throughout his career, Joe Ford has been the very embodiment of the engaged corporate citizen. In 1966, while serving as a vice-president for Allied Telephone, Joe ran for a seat in the Arkansas Senate. He served in this body from 1967 to 1982, a term spanning the administrations of five governors. A longtime advocate for public education, Joe chaired the Senate Education Committee, where he worked to improve our state's educational system and helped to create the kindergarten program in Arkansas public schools. He has also been involved with numerous civic organizations.

Joe Ford once offered the following words of advice to his son: "In all that you do in life, seek to make life better for others, work hard and honestly, be a man of strong character, humble in times of greatness, and try to leave things a little better than they were left to you." His record certainly indicates that he has lived by these words himself. On the occasion of Joe's retirement, I'm proud to pay tribute to an Arkansan whose every move has represented the ideals of the American business world: trust, responsibility, hard work, and the greater public good. I hope that all of our business leaders will follow Joe's example in adhering to these ideals.●

LOCAL LAW ENFORCEMENT ACT OF 2001

● Mr. SMITH of Oregon. Mr. President, I rise today to speak about hate crimes legislation I introduced with Senator KENNEDY in March of last year. The Local Law Enforcement Act of 2001 would add new categories to current hate crimes legislation sending a signal that violence of any kind is unacceptable in our society.

I would like to describe a terrible crime that occurred in November 1998 in Providence, MA. A gay man was assaulted outside a bar. The assailants, David E. Sheldon, 19, and Taylor Grenier, 18, who used antigay slurs during the attack, were charged with a hate crime in the incident.

I believe that Government's first duty is to defend its citizens, to defend them against the harms that come out of hate. The Local Law Enforcement Enhancement Act of 2001 is now a symbol that can become substance. I believe that by passing this legislation and changing current law, we can change hearts and minds as well.●

DO THE WRITE THING CHALLENGE 2002

● Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, Do the Write Thing Challenge, sponsored by the National Campaign to Stop Violence, is a national writing contest in which students express their concerns about subjects such as domestic violence, easy access to guns, and gang activity. DtWT currently operates in 14 cities, including Detroit, MI. In 2002, more than 75,000 students from more than 550 schools participated in the DtWT program. This week 38 Do the Write Thing national finalists came to Washington, DC, to talk to lawmakers about the impact of and solutions to the epidemic of youth violence in our Nation.

The national student finalists, along with their teachers and family members, also attended a ceremony at the Library of Congress on Monday. Representatives of the Secretary of Education and the Library of Congress placed the students' writings in the Library of Congress. The writings, ranging from poems to essays to stories, describe the impact of youth violence on the lives of children. Two students from Michigan, Chastity Stewart and Justin Mozader, were honored by the National Campaign to Stop Violence for their writings on youth violence. Justin's poem offers excellent advice on dealing with feelings of anger and aggression.

What can I do about the problem at hand?
It can't be solved by one man
To begin, I must look inside myself
And put my violence on the shelf

One of the top priorities of the Do the Write Thing Challenge is to address youth violence by drawing attention to the problem of easy access to guns. This is a laudable and important goal. One step the Senate can take to prevent easy access to guns is to pass the Children's Access Prevention Act, which Senator DURBIN introduced. Under this bill, adults who fail to lock up a loaded firearm or an unloaded firearm with ammunition would be held criminally liable if a child uses the weapon to kill or injure him or herself or another person. The bill also increases the penalties for selling a gun to a juvenile and creates a gun safety education program that includes parent-teacher organizations, local law enforcement, and community organizations. This bill is similar to a bill President Bush signed into law during his tenure as the Governor of Texas. I support this bill and hope the Senate will act on it during this Congress.

In addition to preventing our youth from having unsupervised access to deadly weapons, we should encourage schools to conduct violence prevention programs. We need to provide funding to allow schools to partner with local law enforcement in crime prevention, creative onsite school violence prevention programs, and alcohol and drug counseling.

I know my colleagues will want to join me in congratulating Chastity and Justin for their writings and efforts to combat youth violence, and I urge my colleagues to join me in pushing for the passage of sensible gun safety legislation like Senator DURBIN's bill.●

CEDAR GROVE'S 100TH YEAR OF INCORPORATION

● Mr. ROCKEFELLER. Mr. President, I rise today in recognition of a historical milestone in my State of West Virginia. July 13, 2002, marks the 100th year of incorporation for the town of Cedar Grove—making it the oldest town in Kanawha County. I take this opportunity to congratulate Cedar Grove on its centennial.

Cedar Grove is a small community nestled along the upper Kanawha Valley. Although only in existence for 100 years, the history of the town's site is much longer. The first settlement in the Kanawha Valley was on the site of what is now Cedar Grove. Walter Kelly first settled the area, then known as Kelly's Fort, in 1744. This was one of the first settlements started after the English bought what is now West Virginia from the Iroquois Indians. This site was also hotly contested land during the Civil War, when control of the Kanawha Valley went back and forth between the North and the South.

From being the oldest settlement in the area to the oldest town, Cedar Grove has stood the test of time and remains strong to this day. It has been a historical keystone to the Kanawha Valley, and has greatly contributed to the richness of West Virginia culture and history.

On behalf of all citizens from the Mountain State, I would like to once again commend Cedar Grove on its 100th birthday and ask that my distinguished colleagues join with me in recognizing its rich history.●

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA'S FISCAL YEAR 2003 BUDGET REQUEST ACT—PM 102

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, together with an accompanying report; which was referred to the Committee on Governmental Affairs:

To the Congress of the United States:

Pursuant to my constitutional authority and consistent with sections 202(c) and (e) of The District of Columbia Financial Management and Responsibility Assistance Act of 1995 and section 446 of The District of Columbia Self-Governmental Reorganization Act as amended in 1989, I am transmitting the District of Columbia's Fiscal Year 2003 Budget Request Act.

The proposed FY 2003 Budget Request Act reflects the major programmatic objectives of the Mayor and the Council of the District of Columbia. For FY 2003, the District estimates total revenues and expenditures of $5.7 billion

GEORGE BUSH.

THE WHITE HOUSE, July 11, 2002.

MESSAGES FROM THE HOUSE

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

At 9:29 a.m., a message from the House of Representatives, delivered by Ms. Niland, one of its reading clerks, announced that the Speaker has signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolution:

H.R. 2362. An act to establish the Benjamin Franklin Tercentenary Commission.

H.R. 3971. An act to provide for an independent investigation of Forest Service fighter deaths that are caused by wildlife entrapment or turnover.

H.J. Res. 87. A joint resolution approving the site at Yucca Mountain, Nevada, for the development of a repository for the disposal of high-level radioactive waste and spent nuclear fuel, pursuant to the Nuclear Waste Policy Act of 1982.

The enrolled bills and joint resolution was signed subsequently by the President pro tempore (Mr. BYRD).

At 11:08 a.m., a message from the House of Representatives, delivered by Ms. Niland, the of its reading clerks, announced that the House has passed the following bills, in which it requests the concurrence of the Senate:

H.R. 2486. An act to authorize the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration, through the United States National Weather Research Program, to conduct research and development, training, and outreach activities relating to inland flood forecasting improvement, and for other purposes.

H.R. 2733. An act to authorize the National Institute of Standards and Technology to work with major manufacturing industries on an initiative of standards development and implementation for electronic enterprise integration.

MEASURES REFERRED

The following bills were read the first and the second times by unanimous consent, and referred as indicated:

H.R. 2486. An act to authorize the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration, through the United States National Weather Research Program, to conduct research and development, training, and outreach activities relating to inland flood forecasting improvement, and for other purposes, to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation.

H.R. 2733. An act to authorize the National Institute of Standards and Technology to work with major manufacturing industries on an initiative of standards development and implementation for electronic enterprise integration; to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation.

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

The following bills and joint resolutions were introduced, read the first and second times by unanimous consent, and referred as indicated:

By Mr. BINGAMAN (for himself, Mr. BREAUX, Mr. CONRAD, and Mrs. LINCOLN):

S. 2726. A bill to treat certain motor dealer transitional assistance as an involuntary conversion, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Finance.

By Mr. AKAKA:

S. 2727. A bill to provide for the protection of paleontological resources on Federal lands, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

SUBMISSION OF CONCURRENT AND SENATE RESOLUTIONS

The following concurrent resolutions and Senate resolutions were read, and referred (or acted upon), as indicated:

By Ms. LANDRIEU (for herself and Mr. BREAUX):

S. Res. 303. A resolution expressing the sense of the Senate that a commemorative postage stamp should be issued to celebrate the 250th anniversary of the arrival of the first Acadians in the American colonies; to the Committee on Governmental Affairs.

ADDITIONAL COSPONSORS

S. 1828

At the request of Mr. LEAHY, the name of the Senator from Missouri (Mrs. CARNAHAN) was added as a cosponsor of S. 1828, a bill to amend chapter III of chapter 83 and chapter 84 of title 5, United States Code, to include Federal prosecutors within the definition of a law enforcement officer, and for other purposes.

S. 2513

At the request of Mr. BIDEN, the name of the Senator from Vermont (Mr. JEFFORDS) was added as a cosponsor of S. 2513, a bill to assess the extent of the backlog in DNA analysis of rape kit samples, and to improve investigation and prosecution of sexual assault cases with DNA evidence.

S. 2528

At the request of Mr. DOMENICI, the name of the Senator from Wyoming (Mr. ENZI) was added as a cosponsor of S. 2528, a bill to establish a National Drought Council within the Federal Emergency Management Agency, to improve national drought preparedness, mitigation, and response efforts, and for other purposes.

S. 2622

At the request of Mr. HOLLINGS, the name of the Senator from Wisconsin (Mr. FEINGOLD) was added as a cosponsor of S. 2622, a bill to authorize the President to posthumously award a gold medal on behalf of Congress to Joseph A. De Laine in recognition of his contributions to the Nation.

S. 2642

At the request of Mr. NELSON of Florida, the name of the Senator from Arizona (Mr. KYL) was added as a cosponsor of S. 2642, a bill to require background checks of alien flight school applicants without regard to the maximum certificated weight of the aircraft for which they seek training, and to require a report on the effectiveness of the requirement.

S. 2654

At the request of Ms. CANTWELL, the name of the Senator from Iowa (Mr. GRASSLEY) was added as a cosponsor of S. 2654, a bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 to exclude from gross income loan payments received under the National Health Service Corps Loan Repayment Program established in the Public Health Service Act.

S. 2667

At the request of Mr. DODD, the name of the Senator from Michigan (Ms. STABENOW) was added as a cosponsor of S. 2667, a bill to amend the Peace Corps Act to promote global acceptance of the principles of international peace and nonviolent coexistence among peoples of diverse cultures and systems of government, and for other purposes.

S. RES. 293

At the request of Mr. BIDEN, the name of the Senator from Missouri (Mr. BOND) was added as a cosponsor of S. Res. 293, a resolution designating the week of November 10 through November 16, 2002, as "National Veterans Awareness Week" to emphasize the need to develop educational programs regarding the contributions of veterans to the country.

AMENDMENT NO. 4215

At the request of Mr. DORGAN, the name of the Senator from Iowa (Mr. HARKIN) was added as a cosponsor of amendment No. 4215 proposed to S. 2673, an original bill to improve quality and transparency in financial reporting and independent audits and accounting services for public companies, to create a Public Company Accounting Oversight Board, to enhance the standard setting process for accounting practices, to strengthen the independence of firms that audit public companies, to increase corporate responsibility and the usefulness of corporate financial disclosure, to protect the objectivity and independence of securities analysts, to improve Securities and Exchange Commission resources and oversight, and for other purposes.

STATEMENTS ON INTRODUCED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

By Mr. BINGAMAN (for himself, Mr. BREAUX, Mr. CONRAD, and Mrs. LINCOLN):

S. 2726. A bill to treat certain motor dealer transitional assistance as an involuntary conversion, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce legislation important to thousands of independent small businesses across the country. The legislation I am introducing is a modest tax proposal designed to aid the Nation's 2,801 Oldsmobile franchised automobile dealers who are currently in the process of ending that relationship with General Motors, GM, due to GM's decision to eliminate the Oldsmobile product line. This legislation is similar to legislation that has been introduced in the House with bipartisan majority of the House Ways and Means Committee.

As many of my colleagues know, GM notified their 2,801 Oldsmobile dealers in the United States on December 12, 2000 that they were phasing out the 100 year-old Oldsmobile brand and its complete line-up of vehicles. The announcement came with little warning to Oldsmobile dealers. In fact, many of the dealers had recently signed a new agreement with GM on November 1, 2000, with most dealers receiving a five-year term.

As a consequence of its actions, GM is in the process of compensating Oldsmobile dealers to assist in the phase-out of their Oldsmobile dealerships. These dealers will be required, out of financial necessity, to reinvest the payment from GM into other dealership opportunities. In many cases, these dealers may face a significant financial burden in connection with their efforts to continue in the automobile retail business.

The legislation I am introducing today seeks to lessen that burden by treating GM's financial assistance payments, made in connection with GM's unilateral decision to phase-out the Oldsmobile product line, as an involuntary conversion under an existing section of the Internal Revenue Code. Thus, the effect of the legislation is to allow the Oldsmobile dealer to defer tax consequences on GM's payments, provided that the proceeds are reinvested in other dealership properties in the time period specified in the Code.

Small and family-owned businesses, such as automobile dealerships, form the economic backbone of local communities across our country, particularly in rural states like my home state of New Mexico. Allowing Oldsmobile dealers to reinvest the entire payment received from GM into replacement dealership property gives these dealers an opportunity to continue family-owned businesses and greatly benefits local economies throughout New Mexico and the Nation. I look forward to working with my colleagues on advancing this legislation.

I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2726

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. MOTOR VEHICLE DEALER TRANSITIONAL ASSISTANCE TREATED AS AN INVOLUNTARY CONVERSION.

(a) IN GENERAL.—For purposes of subtitle A of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986, in the case of a taxpayer who was a party to a motor vehicle sales and service agreement with a motor vehicle manufacturer who announced in December 2000 that it would phase-out the motor vehicle brand to which such agreement relates—

(1) amounts received by such taxpayer from such manufacturer on account of the termination of such agreement shall be treated as received in an involuntary conversion to which section 1033 of such Code applies, and

(2) the period described in section 1033(a)(2)(B) of such Code shall begin on December 12, 2000.

(b) CHARACTER OF CONVERTED PROPERTY.—In applying section 1033 of such Code for purposes of this section, the property involuntarily converted shall be treated as being property used in the trade or business of a motor vehicle retail sales and service dealership.

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—This section shall apply to amounts received after December 12, 2000, in taxable years ending after such date.

By Mr. AKAKA:

S. 2727. A bill to provide for the protection of paleontological resources on Federal lands, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

Mr. AKAKA. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce the Paleontological Resources Preservation Act to protect and preserve the Nation's important fossil record for the benefit of our citizens. Vertebrate fossils are rare and valuable natural resources that are threatened by a growing commercial market which is being supplied, in part, by the illegal collection of fossil specimens. This Act establishes a comprehensive national policy for preserving and managing paleontological resources found on Federal lands. It provides uniformity to the patchwork of statutes and regulations that currently exist, and it ensures that the public will have educational and scientific access to this part of their geological and biological past.

I would like to emphasize that this bill in no way affects archaeological or cultural resources under the Archaeological Resources Protection Act of 1979 or the Native American Graves Protection and Rehabilitation Act. They are exempted. This bill covers paleontological remains, fossils on Federal lands only.

Fossils are the remains, imprints and traces of once-living organisms preserved in the earth's crust. Fossils of vertebrates are the remains of animals with a backbone or spinal column, such as dinosaur bones, sabertooth tiger teeth, or imprints of bear paws and mammoth tusks. The fossil record is our only evidence that life existed on earth 3.5 billion years ago. Fossils show us that dinosaurs evolved about 220 million years ago, and that four-legged creatures first walked on land about 350 million years ago. Fossils tell us how the physical earth has changed over time, how the climate has warmed and cooled, and how the mountains have been lifted up from the ocean depths. Fossils can also explain how living things have responded to changing conditions, such as why mass extinctions of species have occurred at certain times in our planet's history.

In 1999, Congress requested that the Secretary of the Interior review and report on the Federal policy concerning paleontological resources on Federal lands. In its request, Congress noted that no unified Federal policy exists regarding the treatment of fossils by Federal land management agencies, and our concern was that the lack of appropriate standards would lead to the deterioration or loss of fossils, which are valuable scientific resources.

In response, seven Federal agencies and the Smithsonian Institution released a report in May 2000 entitled, "Assessment of Fossil Management on Federal and Indian Lands." The report presented seven governing principles for the management of fossils on Federal lands. These principles are that fossils on Federal lands are rare and a part of America's heritage; that effective stewardship requires accurate information and inventories; that penalties for fossil theft should be strengthened; and that Federal fossil collections should be preserved and available for research and public education.

The Paleontological Resources Preservation Act embodies these principles, and provides the paleontological equivalent of protections found in the Archeological Resources Preservation Act. The bill finds that fossil resources on Federal lands are an irreplaceable part of the heritage of the United States. It affirms that reasonable access to fossil resources should be provided for scientific, educational, and recreational purposes. The bill acknowledges the value of amateur collecting, but protects vertebrate fossils under a system of permits.

You might wonder why such a bill is needed. Who would want to take these fossils, and what would a person do with them? Let me give you an example. On September 24, 2000, four individuals at Badlands National Park in South Dakota collected 1,700 fossil specimens that represented a variety of different types of animals. This area was scheduled for a scientific survey in July 2002, but because these four individuals removed the fossils from their context, scientists could no longer ascertain the position of the fossils in the layers of rock, and the scientific and educational value of the fossils was destroyed. So what happened to these individuals? To be honest, not much. Each one of the four was fined between $250 and $1,000 for the theft of 1,700 pieces of our paleontological history.

You might think the fines were a lot of money until you realize how much fossils are worth. Trade in fossils is big business. With the popularity of paleontology programs on the Discovery Channel and movies like Jurassic Park, people are starting their own collections at home, and corporations are buying fossils as investments, similar to the purchase of works of art. For example, the complete skeleton of a T-Rex was recently sold for $8.6 million at auction to the Field Museum of Chicago.

Paleontological resources can be sold on the market for a hefty price, and they are being stolen from public lands without regard to science and education. Even worse is the fact that the people who steal fossils aren't being held responsible for their actions and there is no incentive to stop the theft in the future. Less than one percent of organisms become fossils, and they are the key to understanding evolutionary patterns and processes. We need to protect these resources before it's too late.

The protections I offer in this Act are not new. Federal land management agencies have individual regulations prohibiting theft of government property. However, the reality is that U.S. Attorneys are reluctant to prosecute cases involving fossil theft because they are difficult. We in Congress have not provided a clear statute stating the value of paleontological resources to our nation, as we did for archeological resources. Fossils are too valuable to be left within the general theft provisions that are impossible to defend in court, and they are too valuable to the education of our children to not ensure public access. We need to work together to make sure that we in Congress fulfill our responsibility as stewards of public lands, and as protectors of our nation's natural resources.

I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2727

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Paleontological Resources Preservation Act".

SEC. 2. FINDINGS.

The Congress finds the following:

(1) Paleontological resources are non-renewable. Such resources on Federal lands are an accessible and irreplaceable part of the heritage of the United States and offer significant educational opportunities to all citizens.

(2) Existing Federal laws, statutes, and other provisions that manage paleontological resources are not articulated in a unified national policy for Federal land management agencies and the public. Such a policy is needed to improve scientific understanding, to promote responsible stewardship, and to facilitate the enhancement of responsible paleontological collecting activities on Federal lands.

(3) Consistent with the statutory provisions applicable to each Federal land management system, reasonable access to paleontological resources on Federal lands should be provided for scientific, educational, and recreational purposes.

SEC. 3. PURPOSE.

The purpose of this Act is to establish a comprehensive national policy for preserving and managing paleontological resources on Federal lands.

SEC. 4. DEFINITIONS.

As used in this Act:

(1) CASUAL COLLECTING.—The term "casual collecting" means the collecting of a reasonable amount of paleontological resources for noncommercial use with the use of non-powered hand tools resulting in negligible disturbance to the Earth's surface.

(2) SECRETARY.—The term "Secretary" means the Secretary of the Interior with respect to lands administered by the Secretary of the Interior or the Secretary of Agriculture with respect to National Forest System Lands administered by the Secretary of Agriculture.

(3) FEDERAL LANDS.—The term "Federal lands" means lands administered by the Secretary of the Interior or National Forest System Lands administered by the Secretary of Agriculture.

(4) PERSON.—The term "person" includes an individual, corporation, partnership, trust, institution, association, any other private entity, an officer, employee, agent, department, or instrumentality of the United States, an Indian tribe, and a State or political subdivision of a State.

(5) STATE.—The term "State" means the fifty States, the District of Columbia, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, and any other territory or possession of the United States.

(6) PALEONTOLOGICAL RESOURCE.—The term "paleontological resource" means any fossilized remains, traces, or imprints of organisms, preserved in or on the Earth's crust, except that the term does not include—

(A) any materials associated with an archaeological resource (as defined in section 3(1) of the Archeological Resources Protection Act of 1979 (16 U.S.C. 470bb(1));

(B) any cultural item (as defined in section 2 of the Native American Graves Protection and Rehabilitation Act (25 U.S.C. 3001)); or

(C) energy minerals such as coal, oil and gas, oil shale, bitumen, lignite, asphaltum, and tar sands.

SEC. 5. MANAGEMENT.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary shall manage and protect paleontological resources on Federal lands using scientific principles and expertise. The Secretary shall develop appropriate plans for inventory, monitoring, and the scientific and educational use of paleontological resources, in accordance with applicable agency laws, regulations, and policies. These plans shall emphasize inter-agency coordination and collaborative efforts where possible with non-Federal partners, the scientific community, and the general public.

(b) COORDINATION OF IMPLEMENTATION.—To the extent possible, the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of Agriculture shall coordinate in the implementation of this Act.

SEC. 6. PUBLIC AWARENESS AND EDUCATION PROGRAM.

The Secretary shall establish a program to increase public awareness about the significance of paleontological resources.

SEC. 7. COLLECTION OF PALEONTOLOGICAL RESOURCES.

(a) PERMIT REQUIREMENT.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in this subsection, a paleontological resource may not be collected from Federal lands without a permit issued under this Act by the Secretary.

(2) CASUAL COLLECTING EXCEPTION.—The Secretary may allow casual collecting of abundant invertebrate and plant paleontological resources, for scientific, educational, and recreational uses, without a permit, where such collection is consistent with the laws governing the management of those Federal lands and this Act.

(3) PREVIOUS PERMIT EXCEPTION.—Nothing in this section shall affect a valid permit issued prior to the date of enactment of this Act.

(b) CRITERIA FOR ISSUANCE OF A PERMIT.—The Secretary may issue a permit for the collection of a paleontological resource pursuant to an application if the Secretary determines that—

(1) the applicant is qualified to carry out the permitted activity;

(2) the permitted activity is undertaken for the purpose of furthering paleontological knowledge or for public education;

(3) the permitted activity is consistent with any management plan applicable to the Federal lands concerned; and

(4) the proposed methods of collecting will not threaten significant natural or cultural resources.

(c) PERMIT SPECIFICATIONS.—A permit for the collection of a paleontological resource issued under this section shall contain such terms and conditions as the Secretary deems necessary to carry out the purposes of this Act. Every permit shall include requirements that—

(1) the paleontological resource that is collected from Federal lands under the permit will remain the property of the United States;

(2) the paleontological resource and copies of associated records will be preserved for the public in an approved repository, to be made available for scientific research and public education; and

(3) specific locality data will not be released by the permittee or repository without the written permission of the Secretary.

(d) MODIFICATION, SUSPENSION, AND REVOCATION OF PERMITS.—

(1) The Secretary shall modify, suspend, or revoke a permit—

(A) for resource, safety, or other management considerations; or

(B) when there is a violation of term or condition of a permit issued pursuant to this section.

(2) The permit shall be revoked if any person working under the authority of the permit is convicted under section 9 or is assessed a civil penalty under section 10.

(e) AREA CLOSURES.—In order to protect paleontological resource or other resources and to provide for public safety, the Secretary may restrict access to or close areas under the Secretary's jurisdiction to the collection of paleontological resources.

SEC. 8. CURATION OF RESOURCES.

Any paleontological resource, and any data and records associated with the resource, collected under a permit, shall be deposited in an approved repository. The Secretary may enter into agreements with non-Federal repositories regarding the curation of these resources, data, and records.

SEC. 9. PROHIBITED ACTS; PENALTIES.

(a) IN GENERAL.—A person may not—

(1) excavate, remove, damage, or otherwise alter or deface or attempt to excavate, remove, damage, or otherwise alter or deface any paleontological resources located on Federal lands unless such activity is conducted in accordance with this Act;

(2) exchange, transport, export, receive, or offer to exchange, transport, export, or receive any paleontological resource if such resource was excavated, removed, exchanged, transported, or received from Federal lands in violation of any provisions, rule, regulation, law, ordinance, or permit in effect under Federal law, including this Act; or

(3) sell or purchase or offer to sell or purchase any paleontological resource if such resource was excavated, removed, sold, purchased, exchanged, transported, or received from Federal lands.

(b) FALSE LABELING OFFENSES.—A person may not make or submit any false record, account, or label for, or any false identification of, any paleontological resource excavated or removed from Federal lands.

(c) PENALTIES.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in paragraphs (2) and (3), a person who knowingly or willingly violates or counsels, procures, solicits, or employs another person to violate subsection (a) or (b) shall, upon conviction, be guilty of a class A misdemeanor.

(2) DAMAGE OVER $1,000.—If the sum of the scientific or fair market value of the paleontological resources involved and the cost of restoration and repair of such resources exceeds the sum of $1,000, such person shall, upon conviction, be guilty of a class E felony.

(3) MULTIPLE OFFENSES.—In the case of a second or subsequent such violation, such person shall, upon conviction, be guilty of a class D felony.

(d) GENERAL EXCEPTION.—Nothing in subsection (a) shall apply to any person with respect to any paleontological resource which was in the lawful possession of such person prior to the date of the enactment of this Act.

SEC. 10. CIVIL PENALTIES FOR VIOLATIONS OF REGULATIONS OR PERMIT CONDITIONS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—

(1) HEARING.—A person who violates any prohibition contained in an applicable regulation or permit issued under this Act may be assessed a penalty by the Secretary after the person is given notice and opportunity for a hearing with respect to the violation. Each violation shall be considered a separate offense for purposes of this section.

(2) AMOUNT OF PENALTY.—The amount of such penalty assessed under paragraph (1) shall be determined under regulations promulgated pursuant to this Act, taking into account the following factors:

(A) The scientific or fair market value, whichever is greater, of the paleontological resource involved.

(B) The cost of response, restoration, and repair of the resource and the paleontological site involved.

(C) Any other factors considered relevant by the Secretary assessing the penalty.

(3) MULTIPLE OFFENSES.—In the case of a second or subsequent violation by the same person, the amount of a penalty assessed under paragraph (2) may be doubled.

(4) LIMITATION.—The amount of any penalty assessed under this subsection for any one violation shall not exceed an amount equal to double the cost of response, restoration, and repair of resources and paleontological site damage plus double the scientific or fair market value of resources destroyed or not recovered.

(b) PETITION FOR JUDICIAL REVIEW; COLLECTION OF UNPAID ASSESSMENTS.—Any person against whom an order is issued assessing a penalty under subsection (a) may file a petition for judicial review of the order with an appropriate Federal district court within the 30-day period beginning on the date the order making the assessment was issued. The court shall hear the action on the record made before the Secretary and shall sustain his action if it is supported by substantial evidence on the record considered as a whole.

(b) HEARINGS.—Hearings held during proceedings instituted under subsection (a) shall be conducted in accordance with section 554 of title 5, United States Code.

(c) USE OF RECOVERED AMOUNTS.—No penalties collected under this section shall be available to the Secretary and without further appropriation may be used only as follows:

(1) To protect, restore, or repair the paleontological resources and sites which were the subject of the action, or to acquire sites with equivalent resources, and to protect, monitor, and study the resources and sites. Any acquisition shall be subject to any limitations contained in the organic legislation for such Federal lands.

(2) To provide educational materials to the public about paleontological resources and sites.

(3) To provide for the payment of Rewards as provided in section 11.

SEC. 11. REWARDS FORFEITURE.

(a) REWARDS.—The Secretary may pay from penalties collected under section 9 or 10 of this Act an amount equal to the lesser of one-half of the penalty or $500, to any person who furnishes information which leads to the finding of a civil violation, or the conviction of criminal violation, with respect to which the penalty was paid. If several persons provided the information, the amount shall be divided among the persons. No officer or employee of the United States or of any State or local government who furnishes information or renders service in the performance of his official duties shall be eligible for payment under this subsection.

(b) FORFEITURE.—All paleontological resources with respect to which a violation under section 9 or 10 occurred and which are in the possession of any person, and all vehicles and equipment of any person that were used in connection with the violation, may be subject to forfeiture to the United States upon—

(1) the person's conviction of the violation under section 9;

(2) assessment of a civil penalty against any person under section 10 with respect to the violation; or

(3) a determination by any court that the paleontological resources, vehicles, or equipment were involved in the violation.

SEC. 12. CONFIDENTIALITY.

Information concerning the nature and specific location of a paleontological resource the collection of which requires a permit under this Act or under any other provision of Federal law shall be withheld from the public under subchapter II of chapter 5 of title 5, United States Code, or under any other provision of law unless the responsible Secretary determines that disclosure would—

(1) further the purposes of this Act;

(2) not create risk of harm to or theft or destruction of the resource or the site containing the resource; and

(3) be in accordance with other applicable laws.

SEC. 13. REGULATIONS.

As soon as practical after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Secretary shall issue such regulations as are appropriate to carry out this Act, providing opportunities for public notice and comment.

SEC. 14. SAVINGS PROVISIONS.

Nothing in this Act shall be construed to—

(1) invalidate, modify, or impose additional restrictions on any activities permitted under the general mining laws, or the mineral leasing, geothermal leasing, and mineral materials disposal laws;

(2) apply to, or require a permit for, amateur collecting of a rock, mineral, or invertebrate or plant fossil that is not protected under this Act;

(3) affect any lands other than Federal lands or affect the lawful recovery, collection, or sale of paleontological resources from lands other than Federal lands; or

(4) alter or diminish the authority of a Federal agency under any other law to provide protection for paleontological resources on Federal lands in addition to the protection provided under this Act.

SEC. 15. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

There is authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to carry out this Act.

SUBMITTED RESOLUTIONS

SENATE RESOLUTION 303—EX-PRESSING THE SENSE OF THE SENATE THAT A COMMEMORATIVE POSTAGE STAMP SHOULD BE ISSUED TO CELEBRATE THE 250TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE ARRIVAL OF THE FIRST ACADIANS IN THE AMERICAN COLONIES

Ms. LANDRIEU (for herself and Mr. BREAUX) submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Governmental Affairs:

S. RES. 303

Whereas, in 1755, British troops expelled 6,000 Acadians from their home in Acadie, an area that is part of modern-day Nova Scotia, Canada, and many of these Acadians relocated to the American colonies;

Whereas this expulsion, known as the Grand Derangement, resulted in the dispersal of the Acadians and the spread of their French-Canadian culture throughout the American colonies;

Whereas, as a result of the Treaty of Paris in 1763, many Acadians migrated to Louisiana;

Whereas the unique Acadian culture had a strong influence on life in the American colonies;

Whereas, the 1990 census found that there were just under 700,000 people of Acadian ancestry in the United States, and the uniquely Acadian culture and traditions of this group continue to influence culture in the United States;

Whereas the 250th anniversary of the arrival of the first Acadians in the United States occurs in 2005; and

Whereas a postage stamp would be an appropriate commemoration of this anniversary, would increase public awareness of the history of American prerevolutionary immigration, and would benefit the American public by giving recognition to a distinct and truly American subculture: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved,

SECTION 1. SENSE OF THE SENATE.

It is the sense of the Senate that the Citizens' Stamp Advisory Committee should recommend to the Postmaster General that a commemorative postage stamp be issued in 2005 to celebrate the 250th anniversary of the arrival of the first Acadians in the American colonies in 1755.

SEC. 2. TRANSMITTAL TO CITIZENS' STAMP ADVISORY COMMITTEE.

The Secretary of the Senate shall transmit a copy of this resolution to the chairperson of the Citizens' Stamp Advisory Committee.

SEC. .—(a) RULES REQUIRED.—Notwithstanding section 404 of the Act, the Commission shall prescribe rules requiring each annual report required by section 13 of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 (15 U.S.C. 78m) to contain an internal control report, which shall—

(1) state the responsibility of management for establishing and maintaining an adequate internal control structure and procedures for financial reporting; and

(2) contain an assessment, as of the end of the most recent fiscal year of the issuer, of the effectiveness of the internal control structure and procedures of the issuer of financial reporting.

(b) INTERNAL CONTROL EVALUATION AND REPORTING.—With respect to the internal control assessment required by subsection (a), each registered public accounting firm that prepares or issues the audit report for the issuer shall attest to, and report on, the assessment made by the management of the issuer. An attestation made under this subsection shall be made in accordance with standards for attestation engagements issues or adopted by the Board.

SA 4286. Mr. REID (for Mrs. CARNAHAN) proposed an amendment to the bill S. 2673, to improve quality and transparency in financial reporting and independent audits and accounting services for public companies, to create a Public Company Accounting Oversight Board, to enhance the standard setting process for accounting practices, to strengthen the independence of firms that audit public companies to increase corporate responsibility and the usefulness of corporate financial disclosure, to protect the objectivity and independence of securities analysts, to improve Securities and Exchange Commission resources and oversight, and for other purposes; as follows:

At the end of the amendment, insert the following:

(b) ELECTRONIC FILING.—Notwithstanding the provisions of section 403 of this Act, section 16(a)(2) of the Securities and Exchange

Act of 1934, as added by section 403, is amended to read as follows:

“(2) if there has been a change in such ownership, or if such person shall have purchased or sold a security-based swap agreement (as defined in section 206B of the Gramm-Leach-Bliley Act) involving such equity security, shall file electronically with the Commission (and if such security is registered on a national securities exchange, shall also file with the exchange), a statement before the end of the second business day following the day on which the subject transaction has been executed, or at such other times as the Commission shall establish, by rule, in any case in which the Commission determines that such 2 day period is not feasible, and the Commission shall provide that statement on a publicly accessible Internet site not later than the end of the business day following that filing, and the issuer (if the issuer maintains a corporate website) shall provide that statement on that corporate website not later than the end of the business day following that filing (the requirements of this paragraph with respect to electronic filing and providing the statement on a corporate website shall take effect 1 year after the date of enactment of this paragraph), indicating ownership by that person at the date of filing, any such changes in such ownership, and such purchases and sales of the security-based swap agreements as have occurred since the most recent such filing under this paragraph.”.

SA 4287. Mr. GRASSLEY submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill S. 2673, to improve quality and transparency in financial reporting and independent audits and accounting services for public companies, to create a Public Company Accounting Oversight Board, to enhance the standard setting process for accounting practices, to strengthen the independence of firms that audit public companies, to increase corporate responsibility and the usefulness of corporate financial disclosure, to protect the objectivity and independence of securities analysts, to improve Securities and Exchange Commission resources and oversight, and for other purposes; which was ordered to lie on the table; as follows:

(1) STUDY REQUIRED.—The Commission shall, not later than 1 year after the effective date of adoption of off-balance sheet disclosure rules required by section 13(j) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, as added by this section, complete a study of filings by issuers and their disclosures to determine—

(A) the extent of off-balance sheet transactions, including assets, liabilities, leases, losses, and the use of special purpose entities; and

(B) whether generally accepted accounting rules result in financial statements of issuers reflecting the economics of such off-balance sheet transactions to investors in a transparent fashion.

(2) REPORT AND RECOMMENDATIONS.—Not later than 6 months after the date of completion of the study required by paragraph (1), the Commission shall submit a report to the President, the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs of the Senate, and the Committee on Financial Services of the House of Representatives, setting forth—

(A) the amount or an estimate of the amount of off-balance sheet transactions, including assets, liabilities, leases, and losses of, and the use of special purpose entities by, issuers filing periodic reports pursuant to section 13 or 15 of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934;

(B) the extent to which special purpose entities are used to facilitate off-balance sheet transactions;

(C) whether generally accepted accounting principles or the rules of the Commission result in financial statements of issuers reflecting the economics of such transactions to investors in a transparent fashion;

(D) whether generally accepted accounting principles specifically result in the consolidation of special purpose entities sponsored by an issuer in cases in which the issuer has the majority of the risks and rewards of the special purpose entity; and

(E) any recommendations of the Commission for improving the transparency and quality of reporting off-balance sheet transactions in the financial statements and disclosures required to be filed by an issuer with the Commission.

SA 4297. Mr. REID (for Mr. KERRY (for himself, Mr. FRIST, Mr. KENNEDY, Mr. BIDEN, and Mr. HELMS)) proposed an amendment to the bill H.R. 2069, To amend the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961 and the Global AIDS and Tuberculosis Relief Act of 2000 to authorize assistance to prevent, treat, and monitor HIV/AIDS in sub-Saharan African and other developing countries; as follows:

SEC. 2. FINDINGS.

Congress makes the following findings:

(1) During the last 20 years, HIV/AIDS has assumed pandemic proportions, spreading from the most severely affected region, sub-Saharan Africa, to all corners of the world, and leaving an unprecedented path of death and devastation.

(2) According to the Joint United Nations Programme on HIV/AIDS (UNAIDS), more than 60,000,000 people worldwide have been infected with HIV since the epidemic began; more than 22,000,000 of these have lost their lives to the disease; and more than 13,000,000 children have been orphaned by the disease. HIV/AIDS is the fourth-highest cause of death in the world.

(3) At the end of 2001, an estimated 40,000,000 people were infected with HIV or living with AIDS. Of these, more than 2,700,000 were children under the age of fifteen and more than 17,600,000 were women.

Women are four times more vulnerable to infection than are men and are becoming infected at increasingly high rates because in many societies women lack control over sexual encounters and cannot insist on the use of protective measures. Women and children who are refugees or are internally displaced persons are especially vulnerable to sexual violence, thereby increasing the possibility of HIV infection.

(4) As the leading cause of death in sub-Saharan Africa, AIDS has killed more than 17,000,000 people (more than 3 times the number of AIDS deaths in the rest of the world) and will claim the lives of one-quarter of the population, mostly adults, in the next decade.

(5) An estimated 1,800,000 people in Latin America and the Caribbean and another 7,100,000 people in Asia and the Pacific region are infected with HIV or living with AIDS. Infection rates are rising alarmingly in Eastern Europe (especially in the Russian Federation), Central Asia, and China.

(6) HIV/AIDS threatens personal security by affecting the health, lifespan, and productive capacity of the individual and the social cohesion and economic well-being of the family.

(7) HIV/AIDS undermines the economic security of a country and individual businesses in that country by weakening the productivity and longevity of the labor force across a broad array of economic sectors and by reducing the potential for economic growth over the long term.

(8) HIV/AIDS destabilizes communities by striking at the most mobile and educated members of society, many of whom are responsible for security at the local level and governance at the national and subnational levels as well as many teachers, health care personnel, and other community workers vital to community development and the effort to combat HIV/AIDS. In some countries the overwhelming challenges of the HIV/AIDS epidemic are accelerating the outward migration of critically important health care professionals.

(9) HIV/AIDS weakens the defenses of countries severely affected by the HIV/AIDS crisis through high infection rates among members of their military forces. According to UNAIDS, in sub-Saharan Africa, many military forces have infection rates as much as five times that of the civilian population.

(10) HIV/AIDS poses a serious security issue for the international community by—

(A) increasing the potential for political instability and economic devastation, particularly in those countries and regions most severely affected by the disease; and

(B) decreasing the capacity to resolve conflicts through the introduction of peace-keeping forces because the environments into which these forces are introduced pose a high risk for the spread of HIV/AIDS.

(11) The devastation wrought by the HIV/AIDS pandemic is compounded by the prevalence of tuberculosis and malaria, particularly in developing countries where the poorest and most vulnerable members of society, including women, children, and those living with HIV/AIDS, become infected. According to the World Health Organization (WHO), HIV/AIDS, tuberculosis, and malaria accounted for more than 5,700,000 deaths in 2001 and caused debilitating illnesses in millions more.

(12) Tuberculosis is the cause of death for one out of every three people with AIDS worldwide and is a highly communicable disease. HIV infection is the leading threat to tuberculosis control. Because HIV infection so severely weakens the immune system, individuals with HIV and latent tuberculosis infection have a 100 times greater risk of developing active tuberculosis diseases thereby increasing the risk of spreading tuberculosis to others. Tuberculosis, in turn, accelerates the onset of AIDS in individuals infected with HIV.

(13) Malaria, the most deadly of all tropical parasitic diseases, has been undergoing a dramatic resurgence in recent years due to increasing resistance of the malaria parasite to inexpensive and effective drugs. At the same time, increasing resistance of mosquitoes to standard insecticides makes control of transmission difficult to achieve. The World Health Organization estimates that between 300,000,000 and 500,000,000 new cases of malaria occur each year, and annual deaths from the disease number between 2,000,000 and 3,000,000. Persons infected with HIV are particularly vulnerable to the malaria parasite. The spread of HIV infection contributes to the difficulties of controlling resurgence of the drug resistant malaria parasite.

(14) Although HIV/AIDS is first and foremost a health problem, successful strategies to stem the spread of the pandemic will require not only medical interventions, the strengthening of health care delivery systems and infrastructure and determined national leadership and increased budgetary allocations for the health sector in countries affected by the epidemic but also measures to address the social and behavioral causes of the problem and its impact on families, communities, and societal sectors.

(15) Basic interventions to prevent new HIV infections and to bring care and treatment to people living with AIDS, such as voluntary counseling and testing and mother-to-child transmission programs, are achieving meaningful results and are cost-effective. The challenge is to expand these interventions from a pilot program basis to a national basis in a coherent and sustainable manner.

(16) The magnitude and scope of the HIV/AIDS crisis demands a comprehensive, long-term, international response focused upon addressing the causes, reducing the spread, and ameliorating the consequences of the HIV/AIDS pandemic, including—

(A) prevention and education, care and treatment, basic and applied research, and training of health care workers, particularly at the community and provincial levels, and other community workers and leaders needed to cope with the range of consequences of the HIV/AIDS crisis;

(B) development of health care infrastructure and delivery systems through cooperative and coordinated public efforts and public and private partnerships;

(C) development and implementation of national and community-based multisector strategies that address the impact of HIV/AIDS on the individual, family, community, and nation and increase the participation of at-risk populations in programs designed to encourage behavioral and social change and reduce the stigma associated with HIV/AIDS; and

(D) coordination of efforts between international organizations such as the Global Fund to Fight AIDS, Tuberculosis and Malaria, the Joint United Nations Programme on HIV/AIDS (UNAIDS), the World Health Organization (WHO), national governments, and private sector organizations.

(17) The United States has the capacity to lead and enhance the effectiveness of the international community's response by—

(A) providing substantial financial resources, technical expertise, and training, particularly of health care personnel and community workers and leaders;

(B) promoting vaccine and microbicide research and the development of new treatment protocols in the public and commercial pharmaceutical research sectors;

(C) encouraging governments and community-based organizations to adopt policies that treat HIV/AIDS as a multisectoral problem affecting not only health but other areas such as education, the economy, the family and society, and assisting them to develop and implement programs corresponding to these needs; and

(D) encouraging active involvement of the private sector, including businesses, pharmaceutical and biotechnology companies, the medical and scientific communities, charitable foundations, private and voluntary organizations and nongovernmental organizations, faith-based organizations, community-based organizations, and other nonprofit entities.

SEC. 3. DEFINITIONS.

In this Act:

(1) AIDS.—The term “AIDS” means the acquired immune deficiency syndrome.

(2) APPROPRIATE CONGRESSIONAL COMMITTEES.—The term “appropriate congressional committees” means the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate and the Committee on International Relations of the House of Representatives.

(3) DESIGNATED CONGRESSIONAL COMMITTEES.—The term “designated congressional committees” means the Committee on Foreign Relations and the Committee on Health, Education, Labor, and Pensions of the Senate and the Committee on International Relations and the Committee on Energy and Commerce of the House of Representatives.

(4) GLOBAL FUND.—The term “Global Fund” means the public-private partnership known as the Global Fund to Fight AIDS, Tuberculosis and Malaria that was established upon the call of the United Nations Secretary General in April 2001.

(5) HIV.—The term “HIV” means the human immunodeficiency virus, the pathogen that causes AIDS.

(6) HIV/AIDS.—The term “HIV/AIDS” means, with respect to an individual, an individual who is infected with HIV or living with AIDS.

(7) RELEVANT EXECUTIVE BRANCH AGENCIES.—The term “relevant Executive branch agencies” means the Department of State, the United States Agency for International Development, the Department of Health and Human Services (including the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, the Health Resources and Services Administration, the National Institutes of Health, the Agency for Health Care Research and Quality, and the Food and Drug Administration), the Department of Labor, the Department of Commerce, the Department of the Treasury, and the Department of Defense.

SEC. 4. PURPOSE.

The purpose of this Act is to strengthen United States leadership and the effectiveness of the United States response to certain global infectious diseases by—

(1) establishing a comprehensive, integrated five-year, global strategy to fight HIV/AIDS that encompasses a plan for phased expansion of critical programs and improved coordination among relevant Executive branch agencies and between the United States and foreign governments and international organizations;

(2) providing increased resources for multilateral efforts to fight HIV/AIDS;

(3) providing increased resources for United States bilateral efforts, particularly for technical assistance and training, to combat HIV/AIDS, tuberculosis, and malaria;

(4) encouraging the expansion of private sector efforts and expanding public-private sector partnerships to combat HIV/AIDS; and

(5) intensifying efforts to support the development of vaccines and treatment for HIV/AIDS, tuberculosis, and malaria.

TITLE I—POLICY PLANNING AND COORDINATION

SEC. 101. DEVELOPMENT OF A COMPREHENSIVE, FIVE-YEAR, GLOBAL STRATEGY.

(a) STRATEGY.—The President shall establish a comprehensive, integrated, five-year strategy to combat global HIV/AIDS that promotes the goals and objectives of the Declaration of Commitment on HIV/AIDS, adopted by the United Nations General Assembly at its Special Session on HIV/AIDS in June 2001, and strengthens the capacity of the United States to be an effective leader of the international campaign against HIV/AIDS. Such strategy shall—

(1) include specific objectives, multisectoral approaches, and specific strategies to treat individuals infected with HIV/AIDS and to prevent the further spread of HIV infections, with a particular focus on the needs of women, young people, and children;

(2) assign priorities for relevant Executive branch agencies;

(3) improve coordination among relevant Executive branch agencies and foreign governments and international organizations;

(4) project general levels of resources needed to achieve the stated objectives;

(5) expand public-private partnerships and the leveraging of resources; and

(6) maximize United States capabilities in the areas of technical assistance and training and research, including vaccine research.

(b) REPORT.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Not later than 180 days after the date of enactment of this Act, the President shall submit to designated congressional committees a report setting forth the strategy described in subsection (a).

(2) REPORT ELEMENTS.—The report required by paragraph (1) shall include a discussion of the following:

(A) The objectives, general and specific, of the strategy.

(B) A description of the criteria for determining success of the strategy.

(C) A description of the manner in which the strategy will address the fundamental elements of prevention and education; care and treatment, including increasing access to pharmaceuticals and to vaccines and microbicides when available; research, including incentives for vaccine development and new protocols; and training of health care workers, and the development of health care infrastructure and delivery systems.

(D) A description of the manner in which the strategy will promote the development and implementation of national and community-based multisectoral strategies and programs, including those designed to enhance leadership capacity particularly at the community level.

(E) A description of the specific strategies developed to meet the unique needs of women, including the empowerment of women in interpersonal situations, young people and children, including those orphaned by HIV/AIDS.

(F) A description of the programs to be undertaken to maximize United States contributions in the areas of technical assistance, training particularly of health care workers and community-based leaders in affected sectors, and research including the promotion of research on vaccines.

(G) An identification of the relevant Executive branch agencies that will be involved and the assignment of priorities to those agencies.

(H) A description of the role of each relevant Executive branch agency and the types of programs that the agency will be undertaking.

(I) A description of the mechanisms that will be utilized to coordinate the efforts of the relevant Executive branch agencies, to avoid duplication of efforts, to enhance on-site coordination efforts, and to ensure that each agency undertakes programs primarily in those areas where the agency has the greatest expertise, technical capabilities, and potential for success.

(J) A description of the mechanisms that will be utilized to ensure greater coordination between the United States and foreign governments and international organizations including the Global Fund, UNAIDS, international financial institutions, and private sector organizations.

(K) The level of resources that will be needed on an annual basis and the manner in which those resources would generally be allocated among relevant Executive agencies.

(L) A description of the mechanisms to be established for monitoring and evaluating programs and for terminating unsuccessful programs.

(M) A description of the manner in which private, nongovernmental entities will factor into the United States Government-led effort and a description of the type of partnerships that will be created to maximize the capabilities of these private sector entities and to leverage resources.

(N) A description of the manner in which the United States strategy for combating HIV/AIDS relates to and promotes the goals and objectives of the United Nations General Assembly's Declaration of Commitment on HIV/AIDS.

(O) A description of the ways in which United States leadership will be used to enhance the overall international response to the HIV/AIDS pandemic and particularly to heighten the engagement of the member states of the G-8 and to strengthen key financial and coordination mechanisms such as the Global Fund and UNAIDS.

(P) A description of the manner in which the United States strategy for combating HIV/AIDS relates to and enhances other United States assistance strategies in developing countries.

SEC. 102. COMPREHENSIVE PLAN TO EMPOWER WOMEN TO PREVENT THE SPREAD OF HIV/AIDS.

(a) STATEMENT OF POLICY.—It is in the national interest of the United States—

(1) to assist in empowering women socially, economically, and intellectually to prevent coercive practices which contribute to the spread of HIV/AIDS;

(2) to ensure that there are affordable effective female controlled preventative technologies widely available;

(3) to assist in providing adequate pre- and post-natal care to women infected with HIV or living with AIDS to prevent an increase in the number of AIDS orphans; and

(4) to educate communities in order to lessen the stigma facing women who are infected with HIV or living with AIDS.

(b) DEVELOPMENT OF PLAN.—The United States Agency for International Development, working in conjunction with other relevant Executive branch agencies, shall develop a comprehensive plan to empower women to protect themselves against the spread of HIV/AIDS. The plan shall include—

(1) immediately providing women greatly increased access to and program support for currently available prevention technologies for women and microbicides when they become available;

(2) providing funding for research to develop safe, effective, usable microbicides, including support for—

(A) development and preclinical evaluation of topical microbicides;

(B) the conduct of clinical studies of candidate microbicides to assess safety, acceptability, and effectiveness in reducing the HIV infection and other sexually transmitted infections;

(C) behavioral and social science research relevant to microbicide development, testing, acceptability, and use; and

(D) introductory studies of safe and effective microbicides in developing countries;

(3) increasing women's access to microfinance programs;

(4) comprehensive education for women and girls including health education that emphasizes skills building on negotiation and the prevention of sexually transmitted infections and other related reproductive health risks and strategies that emphasize the delay of sexual debut;

(5) community-based strategies to combat gender-based violence and sexual coercion of women and minors;

(6) expansion of peer education strategies for men which emphasize responsible sexual behavior and consultation with their wives and partners in making decisions about sex and reproduction;

(7) resources for households headed by females caring for AIDS orphans;

(8) followup monitoring of and care and support for post-natal women living with HIV or at high risk of infection; and

(9) targeted plans to reduce the vulnerability of HIV/AIDS for women, young people, and children who are refugees or internally displaced persons.

(c) REQUIREMENT.—The plan shall specify, for the assistance to achieve each of the objectives set forth in paragraphs (1) through (9) of subsection (b), the section of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961 or other law that authorizes such assistance.

(d) STAFFING.—The Administrator of the United States Agency for International Development shall ensure that the Agency dedicates a sufficient number of employees to implementing the plan described in subsection (b).

(e) REPORT.—Not later than 270 days after the date of enactment of this Act and every year for the next 3 years thereafter, the Administrator of the United States Agency for International Development shall submit to the appropriate congressional committees a report on the plan being implemented by the United States Agency for International Development on empowering women in order to prevent the spread of HIV/AIDS. The report shall include a description of—

(1) the programs being carried out that are specifically targeted at women and girls to educate them about the spread of HIV/AIDS and the use and availability of currently available prevention technologies for women, together with the number of women and girls reached through these programs;

(2) the steps taken to increase the availability of such technologies; and

(3) the progress on developing a safe, effective, user-friendly microbicide.

SEC. 103. HIV/AIDS RESPONSE COORDINATOR.

(a) ESTABLISHMENT OF POSITION.—Section 1 of the State Department Basic Authorities Act of 1956 (22 U.S.C. 265(a)) is amended—

(1) by redesignating subsections (f) and (g) as subsections (g) and (h), respectively; and

(2) by adding after subsection (e) the following:

“(f) HIV/AIDS RESPONSE COORDINATOR.—

“(1) IN GENERAL.—There shall be within the Department of State a Coordinator of United States Government Activities to Combat HIV/AIDS Globally, who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. The Coordinator shall report directly to the Secretary of State and shall have the rank and status of ambassador.

“(2) DUTIES.—

“(A) IN GENERAL.—The Coordinator shall have primary responsibility for the oversight and coordination of all activities of the United States Government to combat the international HIV/AIDS pandemic, including all programs, projects, and activities of the United States Government under titles I through V of the United States Leadership Against HIV/AIDS, Tuberculosis, and Malaria Act of 2002 or any amendment made by those titles.

“(B) SPECIFIC DUTIES.—The duties of the Coordinator shall specifically include the following:

“(i) Ensuring program and policy coordination among the relevant Executive branch agencies.

“(ii) Ensuring that each relevant Executive branch agency undertakes programs primarily in those areas where the agency has the greatest expertise, technical capabilities, and potential for success.

“(iii) Avoiding duplication of effort.

“(iv) Enhancing onsite coordination.

“(v) Pursuing coordination with other countries and international organizations.

“(vi) Resolving policy, program, and funding disputes among the relevant Executive branch agencies.”.

(b) FIRST COORDINATOR.—The President may designate the incumbent Special Representative of the Secretary of State for HIV/AIDS as of the date of enactment of this Act as the first Coordinator of United States Government Activities to Combat HIV/AIDS Globally.

SEC. 104. REPORT ON REVERSING THE EXODUS OF CRITICAL TALENT.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Not later than one year after the date of enactment of this Act, the President shall submit a report to designated congressional committees analyzing the emigration of critically important medical and public health personnel, including physicians, nurses, and supervisors from sub-Saharan African countries that are acutely impacted by HIV/AIDS.

(b) ELEMENTS OF THE REPORT.—The report shall include—

(1) an analysis of the causes for the exodus of such personnel, the present and projected trend lines, and the impact on the stability of health infrastructures; and

(2) a description of incentives and programs that the United States could provide, in concert with other private and public sector partners and international organizations, to stabilize health institutions by encouraging critical personnel to remain in their home countries.

TITLE II—PUBLIC-PRIVATE PARTNERSHIPSSEC. 201. SENSE OF CONGRESS ON PUBLIC-PRIVATE PARTNERSHIPS.

(a) FINDINGS.—Congress makes the following findings:

(1) Innovative partnerships between governments and organizations in the private sector (including foundations, universities, corporations, faith-based and community-based organizations, and other nongovernmental organizations) have proliferated in recent years, particularly in the area of health.

(2) Public-private sector partnerships multiply local and international capacities to strengthen the delivery of health services in developing countries and to accelerate research for vaccines and other pharmaceutical products that are essential to combat infectious diseases decimating the populations of these countries.

(3) These partnerships maximize the unique capabilities of each sector while combining financial and other resources, scientific knowledge, and expertise toward common goals which neither the public nor the private sector can achieve alone.

(4) Sustaining existing public-private partnerships and building new ones are critical to the success of the international community's efforts to combat HIV/AIDS and other infectious diseases around the globe.

(b) SENSE OF CONGRESS.—It is the sense of Congress that—

(1) the sustainment and promotion of public-private partnerships should be a priority element of the strategy pursued by the United States to combat the HIV/AIDS pandemic and other global health crises; and

(2) the United States should systematically track the evolution of these partnerships and work with others in the public and private sector to profile and build upon those models that are most effective.

SEC. 202. PARTICIPATION IN THE GLOBAL FUND TO FIGHT AIDS, TUBERCULOSIS, AND MALARIA.

(a) AUTHORITY FOR UNITED STATES PARTICIPATION.—

(1) UNITED STATES PARTICIPATION.—The United States is hereby authorized to participate in the Global Fund to Fight AIDS, Tuberculosis and Malaria.

(2) PRIVILEGES AND IMMUNITIES.—The Global Fund shall be considered a public international organization for purposes of section 1 of the International Organizations Immunities Act (22 U.S.C. 288).

(b) REPORTS TO CONGRESS.—Not later than one year after the date of the enactment of this Act, and annually thereafter for the duration of the Global Fund, the President shall submit to the appropriate congressional committees a report on the Global Fund, including contributions pledged, contributions received (including donations from the private sector), projects funded, and the mechanisms established for transparency and accountability in the grant making process.

(c) UNITED STATES FINANCIAL PARTICIPATION.—

(1) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—In addition to funds otherwise available for such purpose, there are authorized to be appropriated to the President $1,000,000,000 for the fiscal year 2003 and $1,200,000,000 for the fiscal year 2004 for contributions to the Global Fund.

(2) AVAILABILITY OF FUNDS.—Amounts appropriated pursuant to paragraph (1) are authorized to remain available until expended.

(3) REPROGRAMMING OF FISCAL YEAR 2001 FUNDS.—Funds made available for fiscal year 2001 under section 141 of the Global AIDS and Tuberculosis Relief Act of 2000—

(A) are authorized to remain available until expended; and

(B) shall be transferred to, merged with, and made available for the same purposes as, funds made available for fiscal year 2002 under paragraph (1).

(4) STATUTORY CONSTRUCTION.—Nothing in this Act may be construed to substitute for, or reduce resources provided under any other law for bilateral and multilateral HIV/AIDS, tuberculosis, and malaria programs.

SEC. 203. VOLUNTARY CONTRIBUTIONS TO INTERNATIONAL VACCINE FUNDS.

(a) VACCINE FUND.—Section 302(k) of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961 (22 U.S.C. 2222(k)) is amended—

(1) by striking “$50,000,000” and all that follows through “2002” and inserting “$60,000,000 for the fiscal year 2003 and $70,000,000 for the fiscal year 2004”; and

(2) by striking “Global Alliance for Vaccines and Immunizations” and inserting “Vaccine Fund”.

(b) INTERNATIONAL AIDS VACCINE INITIATIVE.—Section 302(l) of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961 (22 U.S.C. 2222(l)) is amended by striking “$10,000,000” and all that follows through “2002” and inserting “$12,000,000 for the fiscal year 2003 and $15,000,000 for the fiscal year 2004”.

(c) MALARIA VACCINE INITIATIVE OF THE PROGRAM FOR APPROPRIATE TECHNOLOGIES IN HEALTH (PATH).—Section 302 of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961 (22 U.S.C. 2222) is amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

“(m) In addition to amounts otherwise available under this section, there are authorized to be appropriated to the President $5,000,000 for the fiscal year 2003 and $6,000,000 for the fiscal year 2004 to be available only for United States contributions to the Malaria Vaccine Initiative of the Program for Appropriate Technologies in Health (PATH).”

(d) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall take effect October 1, 2002.

TITLE III—MULTILATERAL EFFORTSSEC. 301. IMPROVEMENT OF THE ENHANCED HIPC INITIATIVE.

(a) AMENDMENT OF THE INTERNATIONAL FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS ACT.—Title XVI of the International Financial Institutions Act (22 U.S.C. 262p–262p–5) is amended by adding at the end the following new section:

“SEC. 1625. IMPROVEMENT OF THE ENHANCED HIPC INITIATIVE.

“(a) AUTHORITY.—In order to ensure that the Enhanced HIPC Initiative achieves the objective of substantially increasing resources available for human development and poverty reduction in heavily indebted poor countries, the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and requested to conclude as soon as possible an agreement within the Paris Club of Official Creditors, as well as the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development (World Bank), the International Monetary Fund, and other appropriate multilateral development institutions to accomplish the modifications in the Enhanced HIPC Initiative described in subsection (b).

“(b) AGREEMENT.—The agreement referred to in subsection (a) is an agreement that provides the following:

“(1) LEVEL OF EXPORTS AND REVENUES.—

“(A) IN GENERAL.—The amount of debt stock reduction approved for a country eligible for debt relief under the Enhanced HIPC Initiative shall be sufficient to reduce, for at least each of the first 3 years after date of enactment of this section or the Decision Point, whichever is later—

“(i) the net present value of the outstanding public and publicly guaranteed debt of the country to not more than 150 percent of the annual value of exports of the country for the year preceding the Decision Point; and “(ii) the annual payments due on such public and publicly guaranteed debt to not more than 10 percent or, in the case of a country suffering a public health crisis (as defined in subsection (c)), not more than 5 percent, of the amount of the annual current revenues received by the country from internal sources.

“(B) LIMITATION.—In financing the objectives of the Enhanced HIPC Initiative, an international financial institution shall give priority to using its own resources.

“(2) RELATION TO POVERTY AND THE ENVIRONMENT.—The debt cancellation under the Enhanced HIPC Initiative shall not be conditioned on any agreement by an impoverished country to implement or comply with policies that deepen poverty or degrade the environment, including any policy that—

“(A) implements or extends user fees on primary education or primary health care, including prevention and treatment efforts for HIV/AIDS, tuberculosis, malaria, and infant, child, and maternal well-being;

“(B) provides for increased cost recovery from poor people to finance basic public services such as education, health care, clean water, or sanitation;

“(C) reduces the country's minimum wage to a level of less than $2 per day or undermines workers' ability to exercise effectively their internationally recognized worker rights, as defined under section 526(e) of the Foreign Operations, Export Financing and Related Programs Appropriations Act, 1995 (22 U.S.C. 262p-4p); or “(D) promotes unsustainable extraction of resources or results in reduced budget support for environmental programs.

“(3) FOREIGN GOVERNMENT POLICIES.—A country shall not be eligible for cancellation of debt under the Enhanced HIPC Initiative if the government of the country—

“(A) has repeatedly provided support for acts of international terrorism, as determined by the Secretary of State under section 6(j)(1) of the Export Administration Act of 1979 (50 U.S.C. App. 2405(j)(1)) or section 620A(a) of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961 (22 U.S.C. 2371(a)); and “(B) engages in a consistent pattern of gross violations of internationally recognized human rights (including its military or other security forces).

“(4) PROGRAMS TO COMBAT HIV/AIDS, TUBERCULOSIS, AND MALARIA.—A country that is otherwise eligible to receive cancellation of debt under the Enhanced HIPC Initiative may receive such cancellation only if the country has agreed—

“(A) in the case of a country suffering a public health crisis (as defined in subsection (c)), to ensure that, where practicable, 10 to 20 percent of the financial benefits of debt cancellation are applied to programs to combat HIV/AIDS, tuberculosis, and malaria in that country;

“(B) to ensure that the financial benefits of debt cancellation are applied to programs to combat poverty (in particular through concrete measures to improve basic services in education, nutrition, and health), and to redress environmental degradation;

“(C) to ensure that the financial benefits of debt cancellation are in addition to the government's total spending on programs to combat HIV/AIDS and poverty reduction for the previous year or the average total of such expenditures for the previous 3 years, whichever is greater;

“(D) to implement transparent and participatory policymaking and budget procedures, good governance, and effective anticorruption measures; and “(E) to broaden public participation and popular understanding of the principles and goals of poverty reduction.

“(c) DEFINITIONS.—In this section:

“(1) COUNTRY SUFFERING A PUBLIC HEALTH CRISIS.—The term ‘country suffering a public health crisis’ means—

“(A) a country in which HIV/AIDS, tuberculosis, or malaria is causing significant family, community, or societal disruption; and “(B) a country that has rapidly rising rates of incidence of at least one of such diseases that is likely to lead to conditions described in subparagraph (A).

“(2) DECISION POINT.—The term ‘Decision Point’ means the date on which the executive boards of the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund review the debt sustainability analysis for a country and determine that the country is eligible for debt relief under the Enhanced HIPC Initiative.

“(3) ENHANCED HIPC INITIATIVE.—The term ‘Enhanced HIPC Initiative’ means the multilateral debt initiative for heavily indebted poor countries presented in the Report of G-7 Finance Ministers on the Cologne Debt Initiative to the Cologne Economic Summit, Cologne, June 18-20, 1999.”

(b) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—There are authorized to be appropriated to the President such sums as may be necessary for the fiscal year 2003 and each fiscal year thereafter to carry out section 1625 of the International Financial Institutions Act, as added by subsection (a).

(2) AVAILABILITY OF FUNDS.—Amounts appropriated pursuant to paragraph (1) are authorized to remain available until expended.

SEC. 302. REPORTS ON IMPLEMENTATION OF IMPROVEMENTS TO THE ENHANCED HIPC INITIATIVE.

(a) INITIAL REPORT.—Not later than 180 days after the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary of the Treasury shall submit to the appropriate congressional committees a report describing the progress made in concluding an agreement under section 1625(b) of the International Financial Institutions Act (as added by section 301 of this Act) to modify the Enhanced HIPC Initiative.

(b) SUBSEQUENT REPORT.—Not later than one year after the date of submission of the initial report under subsection (a), the Secretary of the Treasury shall submit to the appropriate congressional committees a report describing the actions taken by countries to satisfy the conditions set forth in the agreement referred to in subsection (a).

TITLE IV—BILATERAL EFFORTS

Subtitle A—General Assistance and Programs

SEC. 401. ASSISTANCE TO COMBAT HIV/AIDS.

(a) AMENDMENT OF THE FOREIGN ASSISTANCE ACT OF 1961.—Chapter 1 of part I of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961 (22 U.S.C. 2151 et seq.) is amended—

(1) in section 104(c) (22 U.S.C. 2151b(c)), by striking paragraphs (4) through (7); and

(2) by inserting after section 104 the following new section:

“SEC. 104A. ASSISTANCE TO COMBAT HIV/AIDS.

“(a) FINDING.—Congress recognizes that the alarming spread of HIV/AIDS in countries in sub-Saharan Africa and other developing countries is a major global health, national security, and humanitarian crisis.

“(b) POLICY.—It is a major objective of the foreign assistance program of the United States to provide assistance for the prevention, treatment, and control of HIV/AIDS. The United States and other developed countries should provide assistance to countries in sub-Saharan Africa and other countries and areas to control this crisis through HIV/AIDS prevention, treatment, monitoring, and related activities, particularly activities focused on women and youth, including strategies to prevent mother-to-child transmission of the HIV infection.

“(c) AUTHORIZATION.—

“(1) IN GENERAL.—Consistent with section 104(c), the President is authorized to furnish assistance, on such terms and conditions as the President may determine, to prevent, treat, and monitor HIV/AIDS, and carry out related activities, in countries in sub-Saharan Africa and other countries and areas.

“(2) ROLE OF NGOS.—It is the sense of Congress that the President should provide an appropriate level of assistance under paragraph (1) through nongovernmental organizations in countries in sub-Saharan Africa and other countries and areas affected by the HIV/AIDS pandemic.

“(3) COORDINATION OF ASSISTANCE EFFORTS.—The President shall coordinate the provision of assistance under paragraph (1) with the provision of related assistance by the Joint United Nations Programme on HIV/AIDS (UNAIDS), the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF), the World Health Organization (WHO), the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), the Global Fund to Fight AIDS, Tuberculosis and Malaria and other appropriate international organizations (such as the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development), relevant regional multilateral development institutions, national, state, and local governments of foreign countries, appropriate governmental and nongovernmental organizations, and relevant Executive branch agencies.

“(d) ACTIVITIES SUPPORTED.—Assistance provided under subsection (c) shall, to the maximum extent practicable, be used to carry out the following activities:

“(1) PREVENTION.—Prevention of HIV/AIDS through activities including—

“(A) education, voluntary testing, and counseling (including the incorporation of confidentiality protections with respect to such testing and counseling), including integration of such programs into health programs and the inclusion in counseling programs of information on methods of preventing transmission of the HIV infection, including delaying sexual debut, abstinence, reduction of casual sexual partnering, and, where appropriate, the use of condoms;

“(B) assistance for the purpose of preventing mother-to-child transmission of the HIV infection, including medications to prevent such transmission and access to infant formula and other alternatives for infant feeding;

“(C) assistance to ensure a safe blood supply, to provide—

“(i) post-exposure prophylaxis to victims of rape and sexual assault and in cases of occupational exposure of health care workers; and

“(ii) necessary commodities, including test kits, pharmaceuticals, and condoms;

“(D) assistance through nongovernmental organizations, including faith-based organizations, particularly those organizations that utilize both professionals and volunteers with appropriate skills and experience, to establish and implement culturally appropriate HIV/AIDS education and prevention programs;

“(E) research on microbicides which prevent the spread of HIV/AIDS; and “(F) bulk purchases of available prevention technologies for women and for appropriate program support for the introduction and distribution of these technologies, as well as education and training on the use of the technologies.

“(2) TREATMENT.—The treatment and care of individuals with HIV/AIDS, including—

“(A) assistance to establish and implement programs to strengthen and broaden indigenous health care delivery systems and the capacity of such systems to deliver HIV/AIDS pharmaceuticals and otherwise provide for the treatment of individuals with HIV/AIDS, including clinical training for indigenous organizations and health care providers;

“(B) assistance to strengthen and expand hospice and palliative care programs to assist patients debilitated by HIV/AIDS, their families, and the primary caregivers of such patients, including programs that utilize faith-based and community-based organizations; and

“(C) assistance for the purpose of the care and treatment of individuals with HIV/AIDS through the provision of pharmaceuticals, including antiretrovirals and other pharmaceuticals and therapies for the treatment of opportunistic infections, nutritional support, and other treatment modalities.

“(3) MONITORING.—The monitoring of programs, projects, and activities carried out pursuant to paragraphs (1) and (2), including—

“(A) monitoring to ensure that adequate controls are established and implemented to provide HIV/AIDS pharmaceuticals and other appropriate medicines to poor individuals with HIV/AIDS; and “(B) appropriate evaluation and surveillance activities.

“(4) PHARMACEUTICALS.—

“(A) PROCUREMENT.—The procurement of HIV/AIDS pharmaceuticals, antiviral therapies, and other appropriate medicines, including medicines to treat opportunistic infections.

“(B) MECHANISMS FOR QUALITY CONTROL AND SUSTAINABLE SUPPLY.—Mechanisms to ensure that such HIV/AIDS pharmaceuticals, antiretroviral therapies, and other appropriate medicines are quality-controlled and sustainably supplied.

“(C) DISTRIBUTION.—The distribution of such HIV/AIDS pharmaceuticals, antiviral therapies, and other appropriate medicines (including medicines to treat opportunistic infections) to qualified national, regional, or local organizations for the treatment of individuals with HIV/AIDS in accordance with appropriate HIV/AIDS testing and monitoring requirements and treatment protocols and for the prevention of mother-to-child transmission of the HIV infection.

“(5) RELATED ACTIVITIES.—The conduct of related activities, including—

“(A) the care and support of children who are orphaned by the HIV/AIDS pandemic, including services designed to care for orphaned children in a family environment which rely on extended family members;

“(B) improved infrastructure and institutional capacity to develop and manage education, prevention, and treatment programs, including training and the resources to collect and maintain accurate HIV surveillance data to target programs and measure the effectiveness of interventions;

“(C) vaccine research and development partnership programs with specific plans of action to develop a safe, effective, accessible, preventive HIV vaccine for use throughout the world; and

“(D) the development and expansion of financially sustainable microfinance institutions and other income generation programs that strengthen the economic and social viability of communities afflicted by the HIV/AIDS pandemic, including support for the savings and productive capacity of affected poor households caring for orphans.

“(e) ANNUAL REPORT.—

“(1) IN GENERAL.—Not later than January 31 of each year, the President shall submit to the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate and the Committee on International Relations of the House of Representatives a report on the implementation of this section for the prior fiscal year.

“(2) REPORT ELEMENTS.—Each report shall include—

“(A) a description of efforts made to implement the policies set forth in this section;

“(B) a description of the programs established pursuant to this section; and

“(C) a detailed assessment of the impact of programs established pursuant to this section, including—

“(i) the effectiveness of such programs in reducing the spread of the HIV infection, particularly in women and girls, in reducing mother-to-child transmission of the HIV infection, and in reducing mortality rates from HIV/AIDS; and “(ii) the progress made toward improving health care delivery systems (including the training of adequate numbers of staff) and infrastructure to ensure increased access to care and treatment.

“(f) FUNDING LIMITATION.—Of the funds made available to carry out this section in any fiscal year, not more than 7 percent may be used for the administrative expenses of the United States Agency for International Development in support of activities described in this section. Such amount shall be in addition to other amounts otherwise available for such purposes.

“(g) DEFINITIONS.—In this section:

“(1) AIDS.—The term ‘AIDS’ means acquired immune deficiency syndrome.

“(2) HIV.—The term ‘HIV’ means the human immunodeficiency virus, the pathogen that causes AIDS.

“(3) HIV/AIDS.—The term ‘HIV/AIDS’ means, with respect to an individual, an individual who is infected with HIV or living with AIDS.”

(b) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—In addition to funds available under section 104(c) of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961 (22 U.S.C. 2151b(c)) for such purpose or under any other provision of that Act, there are authorized to be appropriated to the President $800,000,000 for the fiscal year 2003 and $900,000,000 for the fiscal year 2004 to carry out section 104A of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961, as added by subsection (a).

(2) AVAILABILITY OF FUNDS.—Amounts appropriated pursuant to paragraph (1) are authorized to remain available until expended.

(3) ALLOCATION OF FUNDS.—

(A) RESEARCH ON MICROBICIDES.—Of the amounts authorized to be appropriated by paragraph (1) for the fiscal years 2003 and 2004, $20,000,000 for the fiscal year 2003 and $24,000,000 for the fiscal year 2004 are authorized to be available to carry out section 104A(d)(1)(D) of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961 (as added by subsection (a)), relating to research on microbicides which prevent the spread of HIV/AIDS.

(B) PHARMACEUTICALS.—Of the amounts authorized to be appropriated by paragraph (1) for the fiscal years 2003 and 2004, $100,000,000 for the fiscal year 2003 and $120,000,000 for the fiscal year 2004 are authorized to be available to carry out section 104A(d)(4) of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961 (as added by subsection (a)), relating to the procurement and distribution of HIV/AIDS pharmaceuticals.

(4) TRANSFER OF PRIOR YEAR FUNDS.—Unobligated balances of funds made available for the fiscal year 2001 or the fiscal year 2002 under section 104(c)(6) of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961 (22 U.S.C. 2151b(c)(6)) (as in effect immediately before the date of enactment of this Act) shall be transferred to, merged with, and made available for the same purposes as funds made available for fiscal year 2003 under paragraph (1).

SEC. 402. ASSISTANCE TO COMBAT TUBERCULOSIS.

(a) AMENDMENT OF THE FOREIGN ASSISTANCE ACT OF 1961.—Chapter 1 of part I of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961 (22 U.S.C. 2151 et seq.), as amended by section 401 of this Act, is further amended by inserting after section 104A the following new section:

“SEC. 104B. ASSISTANCE TO COMBAT TUBERCULOSIS.

“(a) FINDINGS.—Congress makes the following findings:

“(1) Congress recognizes the growing international problem of tuberculosis and the impact its continued existence has on those countries that had previously largely controlled the disease.

“(2) Congress further recognizes that the means exist to control and treat tuberculosis through expanded use of the DOTS (Directly Observed Treatment Short-course) treatment strategy and adequate investment in newly created mechanisms to increase access to treatment, including the Global Tuberculosis Drug Facility established in 2001 pursuant to the Amsterdam Declaration to Stop TB.

“(b) POLICY.—It is a major objective of the foreign assistance program of the United States to control tuberculosis, including the detection of at least 70 percent of the cases of infectious tuberculosis, and the cure of at least 85 percent of the cases detected, not later than December 31, 2005, in those countries classified by the World Health Organization as among the highest tuberculosis burden, and not later than December 31, 2010, in all countries in which the United States Agency for International Development has established development programs.

“(c) AUTHORIZATION.—To carry out this section and consistent with section 104(c), the President is authorized to furnish assistance, on such terms and conditions as the President may determine, for the prevention, treatment, control, and elimination of tuberculosis.

“(d) COORDINATION.—In carrying out this section, the President shall coordinate with the World Health Organization, the Global Fund to Fight AIDS, Tuberculosis, and Malaria, the Department of Health and Human Services (including the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention and the National Institutes of Health), and other organizations with respect to the development and implementation of a comprehensive tuberculosis control program.

“(e) ANNUAL REPORT.—Not later than January 31 of each year, the President shall submit a report to the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate and the Committee on International Relations of the House of Representatives specifying the increases in the number of people treated and the increases in number of tuberculosis patients cured through each program, project, or activity receiving United States foreign assistance for tuberculosis control purposes.

“(f) PRIORITY TO DOTS COVERAGE.—In furnishing assistance under subsection (c), the President shall give priority to activities that increase directly observed treatment shortcourse (DOTS) coverage, including funding for the Global Tuberculosis Drug Facility and the Stop Tuberculosis Partnership.

“(g) DEFINITIONS.—In this section:

“(1) DOTS.—The term ‘DOTS’ or ‘Directly Observed Treatment Short-course’ means the World Health Organization-recommended strategy for treating tuberculosis.

“(2) GLOBAL TUBERCULOSIS DRUG FACILITY.—The term ‘Global Tuberculosis Drug Facility (GDF)’ means the new initiative of the Stop Tuberculosis Partnership to increase access to high-quality tuberculosis drugs to facilitate DOTS expansion.

“(3) STOP TUBERCULOSIS PARTNERSHIP.—The term ‘Stop Tuberculosis Partnership’ means the partnership of the World Health Organization, donors including the United States, high tuberculosis burden countries, multilateral agencies, and nongovernmental and technical agencies committed to short- and long-term measures required to control and eventually eliminate tuberculosis as a public health problem in the world.”.

(b) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—In addition to funds available under section 104(c) of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961 (22 U.S.C. 2151b(c)) for such purpose or under any other provision of that Act, there are authorized to be appropriated to the President $150,000,000 for the fiscal year 2003 and $200,000,000 for the fiscal year 2004 to carry out section 104B of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961, as added by subsection (a).

(2) AVAILABILITY OF FUNDS.—Amounts appropriated pursuant to paragraph (1) are authorized to remain available until expended.

(3) TRANSFER OF PRIOR YEAR FUNDS.—Unobligated balances of funds made available for the fiscal year 2001 or the fiscal year 2002 under section 104(c)(7) of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961 (22 U.S.C. 2151b(c)(7)) (as in effect immediately before the date of enactment of this Act) shall be transferred to, merged with, and made available for the same purposes as funds made available for fiscal year 2003 under paragraph (1).

SEC. 403. ASSISTANCE TO COMBAT MALARIA.

(a) AMENDMENT OF THE FOREIGN ASSISTANCE ACT OF 1961.—Chapter 1 of part I of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961 (22 U.S.C. 2151 et seq.), as amended by sections 401 and 402 of this Act, is further amended by inserting after section 104B the following new section: “SEC. 104C. ASSISTANCE TO COMBAT MALARIA.

“(a) FINDING.—Congress finds that malaria kills more people annually than any other communicable disease except tuberculosis, that more than 90 percent of all malaria cases are in sub-Saharan Africa, and that children and women are particularly at risk. Congress recognizes that there are cost-effective tools to decrease the spread of malaria and that malaria is a curable disease if promptly diagnosed and adequately treated.

“(b) POLICY.—It is a major objective of the foreign assistance program of the United States to provide assistance for the prevention, control, and cure of malaria.

“(c) AUTHORIZATION.—To carry out this section and consistent with section 104(c), the President is authorized to furnish assistance, on such terms and conditions as the President may determine, for the prevention, treatment, control, and elimination of malaria.

“(d) COORDINATION.—In carrying out this section, the President shall coordinate with the World Health Organization, the Global Fund to Fight AIDS, Tuberculosis, and Malaria, the Department of Health and Human Services (the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention and the National Institutes of Health), and other organizations with respect to the development and implementation of a comprehensive malaria control program.

“(e) ANNUAL REPORT.—Not later than January 31 of each year, the President shall submit a report to the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate and the Committee on International Relations of the House of Representatives specifying the increases in the number of people treated and the increases in number of malaria patients cured through each program, project, or activity receiving United States foreign assistance for malaria control purposes.”.

(b) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—In addition to funds available under section 104(c) of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961 (22 U.S.C. 2151b(c)) for such purpose or under any other provision of that Act, there are authorized to be appropriated to the President $70,000,000 for the fiscal year 2003 and $80,000,000 for the fiscal year 2004 to carry out section 104C of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961, as added by subsection (a).

(2) AVAILABILITY OF FUNDS.—Amounts appropriated pursuant to paragraph (1) are authorized to remain available until expended.

(3) TRANSFER OF PRIOR YEAR FUNDS.—Unobligated balances of funds made available for the fiscal year 2001 or the fiscal year 2002 under section 104(c) of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961 (22 U.S.C. 2151b(c)) (as in effect immediately before the date of enactment of this Act) and made available for the control of malaria shall be transferred to, merged with, and made available for the same purposes as funds made available for fiscal year 2003 under paragraph (1).

(c) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—Section 104(c) of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961 (22 U.S.C. 2151b(c)), as amended by section 401 of this Act, is further amended by adding after paragraph (3) the following:

“(4) RELATIONSHIP TO OTHER LAWS.—Assistance made available under this subsection and sections 104A, 104B, and 104C, and assistance made available under chapter 4 of part II to carry out the purposes of this subsection and such other sections of this Act, may be made available in accordance with this subsection and such other provisions of this Act notwithstanding any other provision of law.”.

SEC. 404. PILOT PROGRAM FOR THE PLACEMENT OF HEALTH CARE PROFESSIONALS IN OVERSEAS AREAS SEVERELY AFFECTED BY HIV/AIDS, TUBERCULOSIS, AND MALARIA.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The President shall establish a program to demonstrate the feasibility of facilitating the service of American health care professionals in sub-Saharan Africa and other parts of the world severely affected by HIV/AIDS, tuberculosis, and malaria.

(b) REQUIREMENTS.—Participants in the program shall—

(1) provide basic health care services for those infected and affected by HIV/AIDS, tuberculosis, and malaria in the area in which they are serving;

(2) provide on-the-job training to medical and other personnel in the area in which they are serving to strengthen the basic health care system of the affected countries;

(3) provide health care educational training for residents of the area in which they are serving;

(4) serve for a period of up to two years; and

(5) meet the eligibility requirements in subsection (d).

(c) ELIGIBILITY REQUIREMENTS.—To be eligible to participate in the program, a candidate shall—

(1) be a national of the United States who is a trained health care professional and who meets the educational and licensure requirements necessary to be such a professional such as a physician, nurse, nurse practitioner, pharmacist, or other individual determined to be appropriate by the President; or

(2) a retired commissioned officer of the Public Health Service Corps.

(d) RECRUITMENT.—The President shall ensure that information on the program is widely distributed, including the distribution of information to schools for health professionals, hospitals, clinics, and nongovernmental organizations working in the areas of international health and aid.

(e) PLACEMENT OF PARTICIPANTS.—To the maximum extent practicable, participants in the program shall serve in the poorest areas of the affected countries, where health care needs are likely to be the greatest. The decision on the placement of a participant should be made in consultation with relevant officials of the affected country at both the national and local level as well as with local community leaders and organizations.

(f) EXTENDED PERIOD OF SERVICE.—The President may extend the period of service of a participant by an additional period of 6 to 12 months.

(g) INCENTIVES.—The President may offer such incentives as the President determines to be necessary to encourage individuals to participate in the program, such as partial payment of principal, interest, and related expenses on government and commercial loans for educational expenses relating to professional health training and, where possible, deferment of repayments on such loans, the provision of retirement benefits that would otherwise be jeopardized by participation in the program, and other incentives.

(h) REPORT.—Not later than 18 months after the date of enactment of this Act, the President shall submit a report to the designated congressional committees on steps taken to establish the program, including—

(1) the process of recruitment, including the venues for recruitment, the number of candidates recruited, the incentives offered, if any, and the cost of those incentives;

(2) the process, including the criteria used, for the selection of participants;

(3) the number of participants placed, the countries in which they were placed, and why those countries were selected; and

(4) the potential for expansion of the program.

(i) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—In addition to amounts otherwise available for such purpose, there is authorized to be appropriated to the President $10,000,000 for the fiscal year 2003 and $20,000,000 for the fiscal year 2004 to carry out the program.

(2) AVAILABILITY OF FUNDS.—Amounts appropriated pursuant to paragraph (1) are authorized to remain available until expended.

SEC. 405. DEPARTMENT OF DEFENSE HIV/AIDS PREVENTION ASSISTANCE PROGRAM.

(a) EXPANSION OF PROGRAM.—The Secretary of Defense is authorized to expand, in accordance with this section, the Department of Defense program of HIV/AIDS prevention educational activities undertaken in connection with the conduct of United States military training, exercises, and humanitarian assistance in sub-Saharan African countries.

(b) ELIGIBLE COUNTRIES.—The Secretary of Defense may carry out the program in all eligible countries. A country shall be eligible for activities under the program if the country—

(1) is a country suffering a public health crisis (as defined in subsection (e)); and

(2) participates in the military-to-military contacts program of the Department of Defense.

(c) PROGRAM ACTIVITIES.—The Secretary of Defense shall provide for the activities under the program—

(1) to focus, to the extent possible, on military units that participate in peace keeping operations; and

(2) to include HIV/AIDS-related voluntary counseling and testing and HIV/AIDS-related surveillance.

(d) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Of the amount authorized to be appropriated to the Department of Defense for operation and maintenance of the Defense Health Program for the fiscal year 2003, $30,000,000 may be available for carrying out the program described in subsection (a) as expanded pursuant to this section.

(2) AVAILABILITY OF FUNDS.—Amounts appropriated pursuant to paragraph (1) are authorized to remain available until expended.

(e) COUNTRY SUFFERING A PUBLIC HEALTH CRISIS DEFINED.—In this section, the term “country suffering a public health crisis” means a country that has rapidly rising rates of incidence of HIV/AIDS or in which HIV/AIDS is causing significant family, community, or societal disruption.

SEC. 406. REPORT ON TREATMENT ACTIVITIES BY RELEVANT EXECUTIVE BRANCH AGENCIES.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Not later than 15 months after the date of enactment of this Act, the President shall submit to designated congressional committees a report on the programs and activities of the United States Agency for International Development, the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, and other relevant Executive branch agencies that are directed to the treatment of individuals in foreign countries infected with HIV or living with AIDS.

(b) REPORT ELEMENTS.—The report shall include—

(1) a description of the activities of relevant Executive branch agencies with respect to—

(A) the treatment of opportunistic infections;

(B) the use of antiretrovirals;

(C) the status of research into successful treatment protocols for individuals in the developing world; and

(D) technical assistance and training of local health care workers (in countries affected by the pandemic) to administer antiretrovirals, manage side effects, and monitor patients' viral loads and immune status;

(2) information on existing pilot projects, including a discussion of why a given population was selected, the number of people treated, the cost of treatment, the mechanisms established to ensure that treatment is being administered effectively and safely, and plans for scaling up pilot projects (including projected timelines and required resources); and

(3) an explanation of how those activities relate to efforts to prevent the transmission of the HIV infection.

Subtitle B—Assistance for Children and Families

SEC. 411. FINDINGS.

Congress makes the following findings:

(1) Approximately 2,000 children around the world are infected each day with HIV through mother-to-child transmission. Transmission can occur during pregnancy, labor, and delivery or through breast feeding. Over ninety percent of these cases are in developing nations with little or no access to public health facilities.

(2) Mother-to-child transmission is largely preventable with the proper application of pharmaceuticals, therapies, and other public health interventions.

(3) The drug nevirapine, reduces mother-to-child transmission by nearly 50 percent. Universal availability of this drug could prevent up to 400,000 infections per year and dramatically reduce the number of AIDS-related deaths.

(4) At the United Nations Special Session on HIV/AIDS in June 2001, the United States committed to the specific goals with respect to the prevention of mother-to-child transmission, including the goals of reducing the proportion of infants infected with HIV by 20 percent by the year 2005 and by 50 percent by the year 2010, as specified in the Declaration of Commitment on HIV/AIDS adopted by the United Nations General Assembly at the Special Session.

(5) Several United States Government agencies including the United States Agency for International Development and the Centers for Disease Control are already supporting programs to prevent mother-to-child transmission in resource-poor nations and have the capacity to expand these programs rapidly by working closely with foreign governments and nongovernmental organizations.

(6) Efforts to prevent mother-to-child transmission can provide the basis for a broader response that includes care and treatment of mothers, fathers, and other family members that are infected with HIV or living with AIDS.

(7) HIV/AIDS has devastated the lives of countless children and families across the globe. Since the epidemic began, an estimated 13,200,000 children under the age of 15 have been orphaned by AIDS, that is they have lost their mother or both parents to the disease. The Joint United Nations Program on HIV/AIDS (UNAIDS) estimates that this number will double by the year 2010.

(8) HIV/AIDS also targets young people between the ages of 15 to 24, many of whom carry the burden of caring for family members living with HIV/AIDS. An estimated 10,300,000 young people are now living with HIV/AIDS. One-half of all new infections are occurring among this age group.

SEC. 412. POLICY AND REQUIREMENTS.

(a) POLICY.—The United States Government's response to the global HIV/AIDS pandemic should place high priority on the prevention of mother-to-child transmission, the care and treatment of family members and caregivers, and the care of children orphaned by AIDS. To the maximum extent possible, the United States Government should seek to leverage its funds by seeking matching contributions from the private sector, other national governments, and international organizations.

(b) REQUIREMENTS.—The 5-year United States Government strategy required by section 101 of this Act shall—

(1) provide for meeting or exceeding the goal set by the United Nations General Assembly Declaration of Commitment on HIV/

AIDS to reduce the rate of mother-to-child transmission of HIV by 20 percent by 2005 and by 50 percent by 2010;

(2) include programs to make available testing and treatment to HIV-positive women and their family members, including drug treatment and therapies to prevent mother-to-child transmission; and

(3) expand programs designed to care for children orphaned by AIDS.

SEC. 413. ANNUAL REPORTS ON PREVENTION OF MOTHER-TO-CHILD TRANSMISSION OF THE HIV INFECTION.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Beginning 270 days after the date of enactment of this Act, and annually thereafter for the ensuing eight years, the President shall submit to designated congressional committees a report on the activities of relevant Executive branch agencies during the reporting period to assist in the prevention of mother-to-child transmission of the HIV infection.

(b) REPORT ELEMENTS.—Each report shall include—

(1) a statement of whether or not all relevant Executive branch agencies have adopted the targets set by the United Nations General Assembly at the Special Session for HIV/AIDS, held June 25 to 27, 2001, with respect to mother-to-child transmission of the HIV infection;

(2) a description of efforts made by the United States Agency for International Development and the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention to expand those activities, including—

(A) information on the number of sites supported for the prevention of mother-to-child transmission of the HIV infection;

(B) the specific activities supported;

(C) the number of women tested and counseled; and

(D) the number of women receiving preventative drug therapies;

(3) a statement of the percentage of funds expended out of the budget of each relevant Executive branch agency for activities to prevent mother-to-child transmission of the HIV infection and, in the case of United States Agency for International Development, whether or not its expenditures on bilateral assistance have met the 8.3 percent target in section 104(c)(6)(D) of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961 (22 U.S.C. 2151b(c)(6)(D)), as in effect immediately before the date of enactment of this Act, with respect to strategies to prevent mother-to-child transmission of the HIV infection;

(4) a discussion of the extent to which the programs of the relevant Executive branch agencies are meeting targets set by the United Nations General Assembly; and

(5) a description of efforts made by the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention and the United States Agency for International Development to expand care and treatment services for families at established sites for the prevention of mother-to-child transmission of HIV infection.

(c) REPORTING PERIOD DEFINED.—In this section, the term “reporting period” means, in the case of the initial report, the period since the date of enactment of this Act and, in the case of any subsequent report, the period since the date of submission of the most recent report.

SEC. 414. PILOT PROGRAM OF ASSISTANCE FOR CHILDREN AND FAMILIES AFFECTED BY HIV/AIDS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The President, acting through the United States Agency for International Development, shall establish a program of assistance that would demonstrate the feasibility of the provision of care and treatment to orphans and other children and young people affected by HIV/AIDS in foreign countries.

(b) PROGRAM REQUIREMENTS.—The program shall—

(1) build upon and be integrated into programs administered as of the date of enactment of this Act by the United States Agency for International Development for children affected by HIV/AIDS;

(2) work in conjunction with indigenous community-based programs and activities, particularly those that offer proven services for children;

(3) reduce the stigma of HIV/AIDS to encourage vulnerable children infected with HIV or living with AIDS and their family members and caregivers to avail themselves of voluntary counseling and testing, and related programs, including treatments;

(4) provide, in conjunction with other relevant Executive branch agencies, the range of services for the care and treatment, including the provision of antiretrovirals and other necessary pharmaceuticals, of children, parents, and caregivers infected with HIV or living with AIDS;

(5) provide nutritional support and food security, and the improvement of overall family health;

(6) work with parents, caregivers, and community-based organizations to provide children with educational opportunities; and

(7) provide appropriate counseling and legal assistance for the appointment of guardians and the handling of other issues relating to the protection of children.

(c) REPORT.—Not later than 18 months after the date of enactment of this Act, the President, acting through the United States Agency for International Development, shall submit a report on the implementation of this section to the appropriate congressional committees. The report shall include a plan for scaling up the program over the following year.

(d) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—In addition to amounts otherwise available for such purpose, there is authorized to be appropriated to the President $15,000,000 for the fiscal year 2003 and $30,000,000 for the fiscal year 2004 to carry out the program.

(2) AVAILABILITY OF FUNDS.—Amounts appropriated pursuant to paragraph (1) are authorized to remain available until expended.

TITLE V—BUSINESS PRINCIPLES

SEC. 501. PRINCIPLES FOR UNITED STATES FIRMS OPERATING IN COUNTRIES AFFECTED BY THE HIV/AIDS PANDEMIC.

(a) FINDINGS.—Congress finds that the global spread of HIV/AIDS presents not only a health crisis but also a crisis in the workplace that affects—

(1) the productivity, earning power, and longevity of individual workers;

(2) the productivity, competitiveness, and financial solvency of individual businesses; and

(3) the economic productivity and development of individual communities and the United States as a whole.

(b) SENSE OF CONGRESS.—It is the sense of Congress that United States firms operating in countries affected by the HIV/AIDS pandemic can make significant contributions to the United States effort to respond to this pandemic through the voluntary adoption of the principles and practices described in subsection (c).

(c) PRINCIPLES AND PRACTICES.—The principles and practices referred to in subsection (b) are the following:

(1) With respect to employment and health policies and practices, the treatment of HIV/AIDS in the same manner as any other illness.

(2) The promotion of policies and practices that eliminate discrimination and stigmatization against employees on the basis of real or perceived HIV/AIDS status, including—

(A) assessing employees on merit and ability to perform;

(B) not subjecting employees to personal discrimination or abuse; and

(C) imposing disciplinary measures where discrimination occurs.

(3) A prohibition on compulsory HIV/AIDS testing for recruitment, promotion, or career development.

(4) An assurance of the confidentiality of an employee's HIV/AIDS status.

(5) Permission for employees with HIV/AIDS-related illnesses to work as long as they are medically fit and, when they are no longer able to work and sick leave has been exhausted, an assurance that the employment relationship will be terminated in accordance with antidiscrimination and labor laws and respect for general procedures and full benefits.

(6) An assurance that employment practices will comply, at a minimum, with national and international employment and labor laws and codes.

(7) The involvement of employees and individuals infected with HIV or living with AIDS, drawn from the workplace or the community, in the development and assessment of HIV/AIDS policies and programs for the workplace.

(8) An offer to all employees of access to culturally appropriate preventive education programs and services to support those programs.

(9) An assurance that programs offered in the workplace will support and be integrated into larger community-based responses to the problems posed by HIV/AIDS.

(10) Work with community leaders to expand the availability of treatment for those employees and others infected with HIV or living with AIDS.

TITLE VI—ADDITIONAL AUTHORITIES

SEC. 601. AUTHORITY OF THE DEPARTMENT OF HEALTH AND HUMAN SERVICES.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Title III of the Public Health Service Act (42 U.S.C. 241 et seq.) is amended by adding at the end the following:

“PART R—HIV/AIDS, TUBERCULOSIS, AND MALARIA PREVENTION, CARE AND TREATMENT IN DEVELOPING COUNTRIES

“SEC. 399AA. GENERAL AUTHORITY OF THE CENTERS FOR DISEASE CONTROL AND PREVENTION.

“(a) PURPOSE.—It is the purpose of this section to provide the Secretary, acting through the Director of the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, with the authority to act internationally to carry out prevention, care, treatment, support, capacity development, and other activities (determined appropriate by the Secretary) for HIV/AIDS, tuberculosis, and malaria in countries determined by the Secretary to have or be at risk for severe HIV epidemic with particular attention to resource constrained countries.

“(b) ACTIVITIES AND ASSISTANCE.—In carrying out the purpose described in subsection (a), the Secretary, acting through the Director of the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, in coordination with the Administrator of the United States Agency for International Development and the Administrator of the Health Resources and Services

Administration, may provide support and assistance under this section relating to—

“(1) HIV prevention services provided through—

“(A) education and voluntary counseling and testing activities, including rapid testing, the development and application of confidentiality protections with respect to such counseling and testing, and the integration of such activities into programs serving women and children;

“(B) programs to reduce the mother-to-child transmission of HIV, including the treatment and care of HIV-infected women, their children, and families, and including the involvement of fathers in such programs;

“(C) activities involving behavioral interventions for youth, women, and other vulnerable populations;

“(D) programs to prevent the transmission of HIV and other pathogens at health care facilities (including the use of universal precautions, equipment sterilization, post-exposure prophylaxis for health care workers and other individuals determined to be appropriate, and other interventions appropriate to the resources available), and to support the use of post exposure prophylaxis, when indicated, for patients;

“(E) activities to ensure a safe blood supply;

“(F) programs to provide prevention, care, treatment, and patient management services for sexually transmitted infections to infected individuals and individuals at risk of infection; and

“(G) activities, including laboratory support, to collect and maintain accurate HIV/AIDS surveillance and epidemiologic data, to target and monitor programs, and to measure the effectiveness of interventions;

“(2) HIV/AIDS care and treatment services provided through—

“(A) programs to provide care and treatment, integrated with prevention services to further reduce the transmission of HIV, for individuals living with HIV/AIDS, including the treatment of opportunistic infections (including tuberculosis) and the provision of antiretroviral therapies and nutritional services;

“(B) programs to provide support services that are needed to enhance the effectiveness of health services and to promote family stability, including services for family members affected by, but not infected with, HIV such as children orphaned by AIDS; and

“(C) programs that link care and treatment services to proven prevention programs, including linkages with voluntary counseling and testing efforts (including rapid testing);

“(3) infrastructure and training through—

“(A) activities to improve the health infrastructure and institutional capacity within participating countries, including the training of appropriate personnel, and to assist such countries in expanding and improving the availability of health care facilities, to enable such countries to develop and manage HIV/AIDS education, prevention, care and treatment programs and to conduct evaluations of such programs; and

“(B) activities to provide laboratory support as well as technical assistance and training to increase the capacity for the diagnosis, care, and treatment of HIV/AIDS and related health conditions (including rapid testing);

“(4) HIV/AIDS treatment protocols through—

“(A) the provision of support and assistance to countries determined by the Secretary to have or be at risk for severe HIV epidemic with particular attention to resource constrained countries for the development of treatment protocols for the delivery of HIV/AIDS treatment and prevention services; and

“(B) the provision of assistance to countries determined by the Secretary to have or be at risk for severe HIV epidemic with particular attention to resource constrained countries, and to be ready to implement the protocols described in subparagraph (A); and

“(5) other activities determined appropriated by the Secretary.

“(c) UTILIZATION OF EXISTING CAPACITIES.—In carrying out activities under subsection (b), the Secretary, acting through the Director of the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention and in coordination with the Administrator of the United States Agency for International Development and the Administrator of the Health Resources and Services Administration, shall, to the maximum extent practicable, utilize existing indigenous capacity in developing countries, including coordinating with relevant government ministries and carrying out activities in partnership with non-governmental organizations and affected communities.

“(d) HEALTH RESOURCES AND SERVICES ADMINISTRATION.—In carrying out activities under paragraphs (2) and (3) of subsection (b), the Secretary, acting through the Director of the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, shall enter into interagency agreements, monetary transfers, and contracts with the Administrator of the Health Resources and Services Administration to ensure that such activities benefit from the specialized expertise of such Administration related to the assessment of needs as well as the development and implementation of community-based systems of care and appropriate infrastructure, including the training of health care providers and community workers.

“(e) BLOOD SUPPLY.—In carrying out activities under subsection (b)(1)(E), the Secretary, acting through the Director of the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, shall assist participating countries in developing national, regional, or local systems to—

“(1) monitor, manage, and test the blood supply to ensure that such supply is screened for HIV;

“(2) increase recruitment and retention of appropriate blood donors; and

“(3) provide for technology transfer and capacity building in proven best blood safety practices appropriate to local conditions, including anemia prevention efforts.

“(f) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—There are authorized to be appropriated to carry out this section, $400,000,000 for fiscal year 2003, and such sums as may be necessary for fiscal year 2004. Of the amount appropriated under the preceding sentence for each fiscal year, the Secretary shall make available $45,000,000 in fiscal year 2003 and $30,000,000 in fiscal year 2004 to carry out section 399DD. Amounts appropriated under this subsection shall remain available until expended.

“SEC. 399BB. GENERAL AUTHORITY OF THE HEALTH RESOURCES AND SERVICES ADMINISTRATION.

“(a) PURPOSE.—It is the purpose of this section to provide the Secretary, acting through the Administrator of the Health Resources and Services Administration, with the authority to act internationally to carry out prevention, care, treatment, support, capacity development, and other activities (determined appropriate by the Secretary) for HIV/AIDS, tuberculosis, and malaria in countries determined by the Secretary to have or be at risk for severe HIV epidemic with particular attention to resource constrained countries.

“(b) ACTIVITIES AND ASSISTANCE.—In carrying out the purpose described in subsection (a), the Secretary, acting through the Administrator of the Health Resources and Services Administration, in coordination with the Director of the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention and the Administrator of the United States Agency for International Development, may provide assistance under this section relating to—

“(1) activities to assist communities in assessing the strengths and capabilities of the existing system of care and treatment relating to HIV/AIDS and other opportunistic infections, including critical unmet needs;

“(2) activities to assist communities in the development and implementation of appropriate systems of care that provide for a continuum of HIV/AIDS-related services for prevention, treatment, palliative care, and hospice services based on an assessment under paragraph (1);

“(3) activities to improve the health-related infrastructure and institutional capacity of participating countries, including the training of health care providers and community workers, to enable such countries to develop and manage HIV/AIDS education, prevention, care and treatment programs and to conduct evaluations of such programs;

“(4) activities to assist in the development of training modules and curricula on HIV/AIDS and associated conditions as part of the professional training programs for physicians, nurses, dentists, pharmacists, and other health care providers;

“(5) activities to improve the coordination between American medical centers and hospitals and indigenous hospitals and clinics in participating countries; and

“(6) other activities determined appropriated by the Secretary.

“(c) UTILIZATION OF EXISTING CAPACITIES.—In carrying out activities under subsection (b), the Secretary, acting through the Administrator of the Health Resources and Services Administration and in consultation with the Director of the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention and the Administrator of the United States Agency for International Development, shall, to the maximum extent practicable, utilize existing indigenous capacity in countries determined by the Secretary to have or be at risk for severe HIV epidemic with particular attention to resource constrained countries, including coordinating with relevant government ministries and carrying out activities in partnership with non-governmental organizations and affected communities.

“(d) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—There are authorized to be appropriated to carry out this section, $40,000,000 for fiscal year 2003, and such sums as may be necessary for fiscal year 2004. Amounts appropriated under this subsection shall remain available until expended.

“SEC. 399CC. HIV/AIDS TRAINING PARTNERSHIP.

“(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary, acting through the Director of the National Institutes of Health and in coordination with the Administrator of the Health Resources and Services Administration, shall award supplemental grants to eligible entities to enable such entities to provide support for clinical education and training in the delivery of HIV/AIDS care and treatment services.

“(b) ELIGIBLE ENTITIES.—To be eligible to receive a supplemental grant under subsection (a), an entity shall—

“(1) be a recipient of an international HIV/AIDS clinical research, education, or training grant awarded by the National Institutes of Health or the Health Resources and Services Administration;

“(2) provide assurances to the Secretary that the entity has developed a partnership with a hospital-based or community-based health care entity in the host country for the purpose of providing services under each grant; and

“(3) prepare and submit to the Secretary an application at such time, in such manner, and containing such information as the Secretary may require, including a description of the activities to be carried out with amounts received under the grant.

“(c) USE OF FUNDS.—An entity shall use amounts received under a supplemental grant under subsection (a) to provide clinical education and training in the delivery of HIV/AIDS care and treatment services. Such education and training shall be designed to develop health care provider capacity to deliver HIV/AIDS care and treatment services in a variety of institutional and community-based settings.

“(d) PRIORITY.—In awarding grants under subsection (a), the Secretary shall give priority to applicants that will carry out activities that assess existing provider capacity and address the training needs of a range of health care providers (from physicians to nurses to other health care providers).

“(e) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—There are authorized to be appropriated to carry out this section, $50,000,000 for fiscal year 2003, and such sums as may be necessary for fiscal year 2004. Amounts appropriated under this subsection shall remain available until expended.

“SEC. 399DD. FAMILY SURVIVAL PARTNERSHIPS.

“(a) PURPOSE.—The purpose of this section is to provide support, through a public-private partnership, for the provision of medical care and support services to HIV positive parents and their children identified through existing programs to prevent mother-to-child transmission of HIV in countries with or at risk for severe HIV epidemic with particular attention to resource constrained countries, as determined by the Secretary.

“(b) GRANTS.—

“(1) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary, acting through the Director of the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, is authorized to award a grant to an eligible administrative organization to enable the organization to award subgrants to eligible entities to expand activities to prevent the mother-to-child transmission of HIV by providing medical care and support services to HIV infected parents and their children.

“(2) ADMINISTRATIVE ORGANIZATION.—To be eligible to receive a grant under paragraph (1), an administrative organization shall—

“(A) have a demonstrable record in managing large scale maternal and child health programs in countries with or at risk for severe HIV epidemic with particular attention to resource constrained countries, as determined by the Secretary, and sufficient HIV/AIDS expertise;

“(B) have established relationships with major international organizations and multi-lateral institutions;

“(C) provide an assurance to the Secretary that the organization will contribute (either directly or through private sector financial support) non-Federal funds to the costs of the activities to be carried out under this section in an amount that is not less than the amount of funds provided to the organization under a grant this section; and “(D) prepare and submit an application to the Secretary at such time, in such manner, and accompanied by such information as the Secretary may require.

“(3) USE OF FUNDS.—Amounts provided under a grant awarded under paragraph (1) shall be used—

“(A) to award subgrants to eligible entities to enable such entities to carry out activities described in subsection (c);

“(B) for administrative support and subgrant management;

“(C) for administrative data collection and reporting concerning grant activities;

“(D) for the monitoring and evaluation of grant activities;

“(E) for training and technical assistance for subgrantees; and “(F) to promote sustainability.

“(c) SUBGRANTS.—

“(1) IN GENERAL.—An organization awarded a grant under subsection (b) shall use amounts received under the grant to award subgrants to eligible entities.

“(2) ELIGIBILITY.—To be eligible to receive a subgrant under paragraph (1), an entity shall—

“(A) be a local health organization, an international organization, or a partnership of such organizations;

“(B) demonstrate to the awarding organization that such entity—

“(i) is currently administering a proven intervention to prevent mother-to-child transmission of HIV in countries with or at risk for severe HIV epidemic with particular attention to resource constrained countries, as determined by the Secretary;

“(ii) serves a catchment area with a minimum HIV seroprevalence of 3 percent in pregnant women;

“(iii) has demonstrated support for the proposed program from relevant government entities;

“(iv) is able to provide HIV care, including antiretroviral treatment when medically indicated, to HIV positive women, men, and children with the support of the project funding; and

“(v) has the ability to enroll a minimum of 250 HIV infected women per service site, based on the current uptake rate, into existing HIV mother-to-child transmission programs; and

“(C) prepare and submit to the awarding organization an application at such time, in such manner, and containing such information as the organization may require.

“(3) LOCAL HEALTH AND INTERNATIONAL ORGANIZATIONS.—For purposes of paragraph (2)(A)—

“(A) the term ‘local health organization’ means a public sector health system, non-governmental organization, institution of higher education, community-based organization, or non-profit health system that provides directly, or has a clear link with a provider for the indirect provision of, primary health care services; and

“(B) the term ‘international organization’ means—

“(i) a non-profit international entity;

“(ii) an international charitable institution;

“(iii) a private voluntary international entity; or

“(iv) a multilateral institution.

“(4) SELECTION OF SUBGRANT RECIPIENTS.—In awarding subgrants under this subsection, the organization shall—

“(A) consider applicants from a range of health care settings, program approaches, and geographic locations; and

“(B) if appropriate, award not less than 1 grant to an applicant to fund a national system of health care delivery to HIV positive families.

“(5) USE OF SUBGRANT FUNDS.—An eligible entity awarded a subgrant under this subsection shall use subgrant funds to expand activities to prevent mother-to-child transmission of HIV by providing medical treatment and care and support services to parents and their children, including—

“(A) providing treatment and therapy, when medically indicated, to HIV-infected women, their children, and families;

“(B) the hiring and training of local personnel, including physicians, nurses, other health care providers, counselors, social workers, outreach personnel, laboratory technicians, data managers, and administrative support personnel;

“(C) paying laboratory costs, including costs related to necessary equipment and diagnostic testing and monitoring (including rapid testing), complete blood counts, standard chemistries, and liver function testing for infants, children, and parents, and costs related to the purchase of necessary laboratory equipment;

“(D) purchasing pharmaceuticals for HIV-related conditions, including antiretroviral therapies;

“(E) funding support services including adherence and psychosocial support services;

“(F) operational support activities; and

“(G) conducting community outreach and capacity building activities, including activities to raise the awareness of individuals of the program carried out by the subgrantee, other communications activities in support of the program, local advisory board functions, and transportation necessary to ensure program participation.

“(d) REPORTS.—Not later than 6 months after the date of enactment of this section, and annually thereafter, an administrative organization awarded a grant under subsection (b)(1) shall submit to the Secretary and the appropriate committees of Congress, a report that includes—

“(1) the progress of programs funded under this section;

“(2) the benchmarks of success of programs funded under this section; and

“(3) recommendations of how best to proceed with the programs funded under this section upon the expiration of funding under subsection (e).

“(e) FUNDING.—In making amounts available under section 399AA(f) to carry out this section, the Secretary shall ensure that not less than—

“(1) $45,000,000 is made available to carry out this section for fiscal year 2003; and

“(2) $30,000,000 is made available to carry out this section for fiscal year 2004.

“(f) LIMITATION ON ADMINISTRATIVE EXPENSES.—An administrative organization shall ensure that not more than 12 percent of the amount of a grant received under this section by the organization is used for the administrative activities described in subparagraphs (B), (C), (D), and (E) of subsection (b)(3) and subsection (b)(5)(E).

“SEC. 399EE. INTRA-AGENCY COORDINATION OF GLOBAL HIV/AIDS INITIATIVES.

“(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary, acting through the Director of the Office of Global Health Affairs (referred to in this section as the ‘Director’) of the Department of Health and Human Services (referred to in this section as the ‘Department’), shall ensure—

“(1) the coordination of all Department programs related to the prevention, treatment, and monitoring of HIV/AIDS, tuberculosis, and malaria in countries with or at risk for severe HIV epidemic with particular attention to resource constrained countries, as determined by the Secretary (referred to in this section as ‘Department programs’); and

“(2) that global HIV/AIDS, tuberculosis, and malaria activities are conducted in a coordinated, strategic fashion, utilizing the expertise from the various agencies within the Department, to the maximum extent practicable.

“(b) DUTIES.—In carrying out this section, the Secretary shall—

“(1) review all Departmental programs to ensure proper coordination and compatibility of the activities, strategies, and policies of such programs; and

“(2) ensure that the Departmental programs utilize the best possible practices for HIV/AIDS prevention, treatment, and monitoring to improve the effectiveness of Department programs in countries in which the Department operates.

“(c) REPORT.—

“(1) IN GENERAL.—The Director shall prepare an annual report that—

“(A) describes the actions that are being taken to coordinate the multiple roles and policies of, and foster collaboration among, the offices and agencies of the Department that contribute to global HIV/AIDS activities;

“(B) describes the respective roles and activities of each of the offices and agencies of the Department;

“(C) contains any recommendations for legislative and funding actions that are needed to create a coherent, effective departmental approach to global HIV/AIDS that achieves the goals for Department programs; and “(D) describes the progress made towards meeting the HIV/AIDS goals and outcomes as identified by the Director.

“(2) SUBMISSION TO CONGRESS.—Not later than 1 year after the date of enactment of this part, and annually thereafter, the Secretary shall submit the report described in paragraph (1) to the appropriate committees of Congress.”.

(b) EXTENSION OF TUBERCULOSIS PREVENTION PROGRAM.—Section 317E(g) of the Public Health Service Act (42 U.S.C. 247b-6(g)) is amended—

(1) in paragraph (1)(A), by striking “2002” and inserting “2004”;

(2) in paragraph (2), by striking “2002” and inserting “2004”; and

(3) by adding at the end the following:

“(3) COORDINATION.—Activities under this section shall, to the extent practicable, be coordinated with related activities carried out under title VI of the United States Leadership Against HIV/AIDS, Tuberculosis, and Malaria Act of 2002 (and the amendments made by that title).”.

SEC. 602. MICROBICIDE RESEARCH AT THE NATIONAL INSTITUTES OF HEALTH.

Subpart I of part D of title XXIII of the Public Health Service Act (42 U.S.C. 300cc-40 et seq.) is amended by inserting after section 2351 the following:

“SEC. 2351A. MICROBICIDES FOR PREVENTING TRANSMISSION OF HIV AND OTHER SEXUALLY TRANSMITTED INFECTIONS.

“(a) EXPANSION AND COORDINATION OF ACTIVITIES.—The Secretary, acting through the Director of the Office of AIDS Research and in coordination with other relevant institutes and offices, shall expand, intensify, and coordinate the activities of all appropriate institutes and components of the National Institutes of Health with respect to research on the development of microbicides to prevent the transmission of HIV and other sexually transmitted infections (in this section referred to as 'microbicide research').

"(b) RESEARCH PLAN.—The Secretary, acting through the Director of the Office of AIDS Research and in consultation with the Director of the Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases, shall expedite the implementation of the strategic plan for the conduct and support of microbicide research, and shall annually review and as appropriate revise the plan. In developing, implementing, and reviewing the plan, the Director of the Office of AIDS Research shall coordinate with the heads of other Federal agencies, including the Director of the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention and the Administrator of the United States Agency for International Development, involved in microbicide research, with the microbicide research community, and with health advocates.

"(c) MICROBICIDE RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT TEAMS.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary, acting through the Director of the National Institutes of Health, shall award grants or contracts to public and private entities for the development and operation of multidisciplinary teams to conduct research on innovative microbicide concepts, including combination microbicides.

"(2) PEER REVIEW REQUIREMENT.—The Director shall award a grant or contract to an entity under paragraph (1) only if the grant or contract has been recommended after technical and scientific peer review in accordance with regulations under section 492.

"(d) REPORT.—Not later than 1 year after the date of the initial submission of the research plan under subsection (b), and annually thereafter, the Secretary, acting through the Director of the Office of AIDS Research and in consultation with the Director of the Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases, shall submit to the Committee on Energy and Commerce and the Committee on Appropriations of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Health, Education, Labor, and Pensions and the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate a report that describes the activities of the National Institutes of Health regarding microbicide research. Each such report shall include—

"(1) an updated research plan;

"(2) a description and evaluation of the progress made, during the period for which such report is prepared, in research on microbicides;

"(3) a summary and analysis of expenditures made, during the period for which the report is made, for activities with respect to microbicides research conducted and supported by the National Institutes of Health, including the number of full-time equivalent employees; and

"(4) recommendations as the Director of the Office of AIDS Research considers appropriate.

"(f) DEFINITION.—In this section, the term 'HIV' means the human immunodeficiency virus. Such term includes acquired immune deficiency syndrome."

SEC. 603. AUTHORITY OF THE DEPARTMENT OF LABOR.

(a) PURPOSE.—It is the purpose of this section to provide the Secretary of Labor with the authority to carry out workplace-based HIV/AIDS programs in countries with or at risk for severe HIV epidemic with particular attention to resource constrained countries, as determined by the Secretary.

(b) ACTIVITIES AND ASSISTANCE.—In carrying out the purpose described in subsection (a), the Secretary of Labor, in coordination with the Secretary of Health and Human Services and the Administrator of the United States Agency for International Development, may provide assistance under this section relating to—

(1) the establishment and implementation of workplace HIV/AIDS prevention and education programs in countries with or at risk for severe HIV epidemic with particular attention to resource constrained countries, as determined by the Secretary, including programs that emphasize protections against discrimination and the creation of supportive environments for individuals living with HIV/AIDS;

(2) the development and implementation of on-site care and wellness programs that enhance the health and productivity of the workforce in countries with or at risk for severe HIV epidemic with particular attention to resource constrained countries, as determined by the Secretary;

(3) activities to strengthen collaboration among governments, business, and labor leaders to respond to the HIV/AIDS pandemic; and

(4) other activities determined appropriated by the Secretary.

(c) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—There are authorized to be appropriated to carry out this section, $10,000,000 for fiscal year 2003, and such sums as may be necessary for fiscal year 2004. Amounts appropriated under this subsection shall remain available until expended.

SEC. 604. AUTHORITY FOR INTERNATIONAL PROGRAMS.

Section 307 of the Public Health Service Act (42 U.S.C. 2421) is amended—

(1) in subsection (b)—

(A) in paragraph (6), by adding "and" at the end;

(B) in paragraph (7), by striking "and" and inserting a period;

(C) in the flush sentence after paragraph (7), by inserting "new" before "facility in any foreign country"; and

(D) by striking paragraph (8); and

(2) by adding at the end the following:

"(d)(1) The Secretary is authorized to utilize the authority contained in section 2 of the State Department Basic Authorities Act of 1956 (22 U.S.C. 2669), subject to the limitations set forth in subsection (e).

"(2) The Secretary is authorized to use the authority contained in section 1 of the Act of April 18, 1930 (46 Stat. 177; 22 U.S.C. 291) and section 1 of the Foreign Service Buildings Act (22 U.S.C. 292) directly or through contract, grant, or cooperative agreement to lease, alter, or renovate facilities in foreign countries as necessary to conduct programs of assistance for international health activities, including activities relating to HIV/AIDS and other infectious diseases, chronic and environmental diseases, and other health activities abroad.

"(e) In exercising the authority set forth in paragraphs (1) and (2) of subsection (d), the Secretary shall consult with the Secretary of State to ensure that planned activities are within the legal strictures of the State Department Basic Authorities Act of 1956 and other applicable laws."

SA 4298. Mr. REID (for Mr. KERRY (for himself, Mr. FRIST, Mr. KENNEDY, Mr. BIDEN, and Mr. HELMS)) proposed an amendment to the bill H.R. 2069, To amend the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961 and the Global AIDS and Tuberculosis Relief Act of 2000 to authorize assistance to prevent, treat, and monitor HIV/AIDS in sub-Saharan African and other developing countries; as follows:

Amend the title to read as follows: "An Act to amend the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961 to increase assistance for foreign countries seriously affected by HIV/AIDS, tuberculosis, and malaria; to amend the Public Health Service Act with respect to the authority of the Department of Health and Human Services to act internationally with respect to HIV/AIDS, tuberculosis, and malaria; and for other purposes."

NOTICES OF HEARINGS/MEETINGS

COMMITTEE ON AGRICULTURE, NUTRITION, AND FORESTRY

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, I would like to announce that the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry will conduct a hearing on July 16, 2002 in SD-562 at 10 a.m. The purpose of this hearing will be to discuss the proposed ban on packer ownership and also the enforcement of the packers and stockyards act.

COMMITTEE ON AGRICULTURE, NUTRITION, AND FORESTRY

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, I would like to announce that the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry will conduct a hearing on July 17, 2002 in SH-216 at 2 p.m. The purpose of this hearing will be to discuss homeland security.

COMMITTEE ON AGRICULTURE, NUTRITION, AND FORESTRY

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, I would like to announce that the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry Subcommittee on Production and Price Competitiveness will conduct a hearing on July 18, 2002 in SR-328A at 2 p.m. The purpose of this hearing will be to discuss S. 532, the Pesticide Harmonization Act.

HONORING THE 19 UNITED STATES SERVICEMEN WHO DIED IN THE TERRORIST BOMBING OF THE KHOBAR TOWERS MILITARY HOUSING COMPOUND IN DHAHRAN, SAUDI ARABIA

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Armed Services Committee be discharged from further consideration of H. Con. Res. 161 and the Senate now proceed to its consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The clerk will report the concurrent resolution by title.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A concurrent resolution (H. Con Res. 161) honoring the 19 United States servicemen who died in the terrorist bombing of the Khobar Towers military housing compound in Dhahran, Saudi Arabia, on June 25, 1996.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to the consideration of the concurrent resolution.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the concurrent resolution and preamble be agreed to, en bloc, the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table, and any statements relating thereto be printed in the RECORD, without further intervening action or debate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 161) was agreed to.

The preamble was agreed to.

COMMENDING THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA NATIONAL GUARD, THE NATIONAL GUARD BUREAU, AND THE ENTIRE DEPARTMENT OF DEFENSE

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Armed Services Committee be discharged from further consideration of H. Con. Res. 378 and that the Senate proceed to its consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The clerk will report the concurrent resolution by title.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 378) commending the District of Columbia National Guard, the National Guard Bureau, and the entire Department of Defense for the assistance provided to the United States Capitol Police and the entire Congressional community in response to the terrorist and anthrax attacks of September and October 2001.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to the consideration of the concurrent resolution.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the concurrent resolution and preamble be agreed to, en bloc, the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table, and that any statements relating thereto be printed in the RECORD, without further intervening action or debate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDERS FOR MONDAY, JULY 15, 2002

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate completes its business today, it stand in adjournment until 12 noon, Monday, July 15; that following the prayer and the pledge, the morning hour be deemed expired, the Journal of proceedings be approved to date, the time for the two leaders be reserved for their use later in the day, and there be a period of morning business until 1 p.m., with Senators permitted to speak for up to 10 minutes each, with the first half of the time under the control of the minority, that is, Senator LOTT or his designee, and the second half under the control of Senator DASCHLE or his designee; that at 1 p.m., the Senate resume consideration of the accounting reform bill under the previous order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDER FOR ADJOURNMENT

Mr. REID. Mr. President, following the remarks of the Senator from West Virginia, Mr. BYRD, I ask unanimous consent the Senate stand in adjournment under the previous order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. REID. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair, in his capacity as a Senator from the State of Montana, asks unanimous consent that further proceedings under the quorum call be dispensed with.

Without objection, it is so ordered.

APPOINTMENT OF CONFEREES—H.R. 3009

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Pursuant to the previous order, the Chair will appoint the following conferees.

The Presiding Officer appointed Senators BAUCUS, ROCKEFELLER, BREAU, GRASSLEY, and HATCH conferees on the part of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair, in his capacity as a Senator from Montana, suggests the absence of a quorum.

The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ADJOURNMENT UNTIL MONDAY, JULY 15, 2002

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senate stands adjourned until Monday, July 15, at 12 noon.

There being no objection, the Senate, at 12:53 p.m. Adjourned until Monday, July 15, 2002, at 12 noon.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES—Friday, July 12, 2002

The House met at 9 a.m. and was called to order by the Speaker pro tempore (Mr. SIMPSON).

DESIGNATION OF THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following communication from the Speaker:

WASHINGTON, DC,
July 12, 2002.

I here appoint the Honorable MICHAEL K. SIMPSON to act as Speaker pro tempore on this day.

J. DENNIS HASTERT,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

PRAYER

The Chaplain, the Reverend Daniel P. Coughlin, offered the following prayer:

Lord God, guardian of this Nation throughout its history, be with Your people today as in the past. Through the power of Your spirit, keep the Members of the United States House of Representatives constant in their service to Your people. Help each to play his or her part in shaping the life and well-being of this Nation. May thoughts be guided by truth and integrity and all determinations conform to Your commands so as to build the public trust while assuring peace.

To You be glory and honor forever and ever. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has examined the Journal of the last day's proceedings and announces to the House his approval thereof.

Pursuant to clause 1, rule I, the Journal stands approved.

PLEDGE OF ALLEGIANCE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Will the gentlewoman from California (Ms. SOLIS) come forward and lead the House in the Pledge of Allegiance.

Ms. SOLIS led the Pledge of Allegiance as follows:

I pledge allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America, and to the Republic for which it stands, one nation under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will entertain 1-minute at the end of the legislative day.

NATIONAL CONSTRUCTION SAFETY TEAM ACT

Ms. PRYCE of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up House Resolution 475 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

H. RES. 475

Resolved, That at any time after the adoption of this resolution the Speaker may, pursuant to clause 2(b) of rule XVIII, declare the House resolved into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for consideration of the bill (H.R. 4687) to provide for the establishment of investigative teams to assess building performance and emergency response and evacuation procedures in the wake of any building failure that has resulted in substantial loss of life or that posed significant potential of substantial loss of life. The first reading of the bill shall be dispensed with. General debate shall be confined to the bill and shall not exceed one hour equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Science. After general debate the bill shall be considered for amendment under the five-minute rule. It shall be in order to consider as an original bill for the purpose of amendment under the five-minute rule the amendment in the nature of a substitute recommended by the Committee on Science now printed in the bill. Each section of the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute shall be considered as read. All points of order against the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute are waived. During consideration of the bill for amendment, the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole may accord priority in recognition on the basis of whether the Member offering an amendment has caused it to be printed in the portion of the Congressional Record designated for that purpose in clause 8 of rule XVIII. Amendments so printed shall be considered as read. At the conclusion of consideration of the bill for amendment the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted. Any Member may demand a separate vote in the House on any amendment adopted in the Committee of the Whole to the bill or to the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute. The previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit with or without instructions.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentlewoman from Ohio (Ms. PRYCE) is recognized for 1 hour.

Ms. PRYCE of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, for the purpose of debate only, I yield the customary 30 minutes to the gentlewoman from New York (Ms. SLAUGHTER), pending which I yield myself such time as I may consume. During consideration of this resolution, all time yielded is for the purpose of debate only.

Mr. Speaker, House Resolution 475 is an open rule which provides for 1 hour of general debate, equally divided between the chairman and ranking member of the Committee on Science, on H.R. 4687, the National Construction Safety Team Act. The rule provides that it shall be in order to consider for the purpose of amendment the amendment in the nature of a substitute now printed in the bill.

The rule waives all points of order against the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute and provides that it shall be open for amendment by section.

Mr. Speaker, this is yet another open rule which affords any Member the opportunity to offer an amendment as long as it complies with the regular rules of the House. However, the rule allows the chairman of the Committee of the Whole to accord priority in recognition to those Members who have preprinted their amendments in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Finally, the rule permits the minority to offer a motion to recommit, with or without instructions.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to commend the gentleman from New York (Mr. BOEHLERT), chairman of the Committee on Science, and the lead Democrat sponsor, the gentleman from New York (Mr. WEINER), along with the gentleman from Texas (Mr. HALL), the ranking member, and all the members of the committee for their hard work and bipartisan efforts to further the use of science in our public policy decisions.

Mr. Speaker, after every plane crash, whether a small, single-engine plane or a large, commercial airliner, a team of investigators arrives on the scene and begins to try and determine how did this happen. These teams of experts are brought together by the National Transportation Safety Board, simply known as the NTSB. These NTSB teams try and determine whether pilot error, mechanical failure, or forces of nature were to blame.

In the end, the main goal of this group of experts is to try and prevent such an incident from happening again. After the horrible collapse of the World Trade Center on September 11, it was realized that the United States needs to develop similar teams of experts that could investigate the structural failure of buildings.

H.R. 4687, the National Construction Safety Team Act, authorizes the development of teams of experts in building construction and engineering.

This legislation establishes a clear procedure for the creation of construction safety teams to investigate building or structural collapses that result in large numbers of deaths. Under H.R. 4687, this task will be given to the National Institute of Standards and Technology.

The national construction safety teams will have several important roles. First, these teams of experts will conduct investigations to determine the likely technical causes for the failure of the building. By finding out why it collapsed, specific recommendations can be made to improve building standards, codes, and construction practices to possibly prevent it from happening again.

These safety teams also will be tasked with determining the technical aspects of evacuation and emergency response procedures. They will be looking at questions such as whether sprinkler systems are adequate or if there are enough stairways to handle a large exodus of people in a real emergency situation.

Finally, upon completion of an investigation, these experts will then recommend research and other appropriate actions needed to improve the structural safety of buildings and improve evacuation and emergency response procedures based on these findings.

Mr. Speaker, this is a good bill and it deserves our support. As many of my colleagues know, this legislation is the product of a number of high-profile hearings, discussions with the administration, the American Society of Civil Engineers, families of the victims of the World Trade Center collapse, as well as many other interested parties.

I urge all of my colleagues to support this straightforward and noncontroversial rule, as well as this bipartisan legislation which will allow us to apply a clear scientific process to prevent the future catastrophic loss of life and property.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Ms. SLAUGHTER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleague from Ohio for yielding me the customary 30 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of this open rule. The underlying bill is noncontroversial and was passed by voice vote out of the House Committee on Science.

Mr. Speaker, on September 11 we learned many hard lessons about our Nation's vulnerability to attack, and the underlying bill before us today sets out to improve our ability to respond to an attack, especially our ability to investigate building failures that cause a substantial loss of life.

The aftermath of the collapse of the World Trade Center towers revealed serious flaws in how the Federal Government moves forward with these investigations. For instance, first FEMA responded to the Trade Center disaster by sending search and rescue teams to the site. FEMA also employed a team tasked with analyzing information about the sequence of events and failures that resulted in the progressive collapse of the World Trade Center towers. Its goal was to analyze how the structures performed and determine whether changing building codes and design practices might prevent future disasters.

Eventually, FEMA recognized that it did not have the resources or the authority to conduct a comprehensive and thorough investigation; and in January, FEMA asked the National Institute of Standards and Technology to take over the investigation. Before all was said and done, the National Science Foundation was involved as well.

Eventually, despite the extraordinary commitment of the agents and workers investigating the site, confusion became the order of the day. None of these agencies were prepared to conduct a comprehensive and thorough investigation immediately following the collapse of the buildings.

In addition, the Federal efforts that were undertaken to study the building failures were hindered by many impediments: no Federal agency was clearly charged with investigating building failures; nothing ensured that an investigation would begin quickly enough to preserve evidence; no Federal agency had the investigative authority to ensure access to all the needed information; and nothing ensured that the public was kept informed of the progress of the investigation; and inadequate funding limited the efforts that were undertaken.

The measure before us today is modeled on the legislation that created the National Transportation Safety Board and will go a long way toward addressing these problems. First, the act establishes NIST as the lead agency to investigate building failures that have caused a substantial loss of life or that posed significant potential for substantial loss of life. The legislation also requires NIST to deploy a team within 48 hours of a disaster so that the investigation is not hindered by delay.

Additionally, the legislation gives NIST authority to enter the site of the building failure, inspect and move records and materials, issue subpoenas and impound evidence; and moreover, a provision of critical importance to the families of victims would require teams to hold regular public briefings on the status of the investigation in order to ensure that the public is informed.

Finally, to prevent funding limitations from inhibiting future investigation, the legislation authorizes appropriations of $25 million.

Mr. Speaker, we owe it to the families of the victims to ensure timely and orderly investigation of this tragedy, and I urge favorable consideration of this bill; and, again, Mr. Speaker, I know of no controversy surrounding this measure.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Ms. PRYCE of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Again, this is an open rule and noncontroversial, but a necessary piece of legislation. It sets up a clear process for building investigation and will allow use, upgrade of the safety of existing buildings and future structures. I urge all my colleagues to support this rule and this very, very important piece of legislation.

I want once again to commend the committee and the gentleman from New York (Mr. BOEHLERT), the chairman, and all who have participated in drafting this important piece of legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time, and I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

□ 0915

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Ms. PRYCE of Ohio). Pursuant to House Resolution 475 and rule XVIII, the Chair declares the House in the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill, H.R. 4687.

□ 0915

IN THE COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Accordingly, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 4687) to provide for the establishment of investigative teams to assess building performance and emergency response and evacuation procedures in the wake of any building failure that has resulted in substantial loss of life or that posed significant potential of substantial loss of life, with Mr. SIMPSON in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Pursuant to the rule, the bill is considered as having been read the first time.

Under the rule, the gentleman from New York (Mr. BOEHLERT) and the gentleman from Texas (Mr. HALL) each will control 30 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York (Mr. BOEHLERT).

Mr. BOEHLERT. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, I approach the task of bringing this bill to the floor with great solemnity. H.R. 4687 is, in many ways, a memorial to those who lost their lives on September 11 and a tribute to their families, who have joined together to advocate for this measure in the Campaign for Skyscraper Safety.

It is fitting, therefore, that we are discussing this bill as Congress pulls together a Department of Homeland Security, another reaction to last fall's attack. Both H.R. 4687 and the Department are intelligent, targeted efforts to discern and apply the lessons of September 11.

While the National Construction Safety Team Act will not do anything as dramatic as help us foil terrorist attacks, it will save lives in a more workaday manner than anti-terrorism legislation.

The idea behind this bill is simple: we cannot make our buildings safer unless we understand what goes wrong when they fail. That has been a basic principle of engineering from its inception, and the Federal Government has been long involved in efforts to learn from building failures. But we learned from our Committee on Science hearings into the investigation that followed the World Trade Center collapse that our investigation system has its own failures. This bill is a carefully crafted attempt to address each and every failure that hampered the investigation into the World Trade Center collapse.

The first problem was that no Federal agency was clearly charged with investigating building failures. The bill solves that problem by giving the National Institute of Standards and Technology clear responsibility to handle the investigations.

Second, nothing ensured that investigations would begin quickly enough to preserve valuable evidence. The bill solves that problem by requiring NIST to act within 48 hours of a building failure.

Third, no Federal agency had the investigative authority it needed to ensure access to all needed information. The bill solves that problem by giving NIST clear authority to enter sites, access documents, test materials, and move evidence, as well as clear authority to issue subpoenas.

Fourth, nothing ensured that the public was kept informed of the progress of the investigation. The bill solves that problem by requiring NIST to provide regular public briefings and to make public its findings and the material that led to those findings.

We have listened to expert witnesses, including the American Society of Civil Engineers, and the Nation owes a great debt of gratitude to the American Society of Civil Engineers, which conducted the Trade Center investigation under the aegis of the Federal Emergency Management Agency. We have responded with a measure targeted precisely to remedy the issues that came to our attention. And we base the bill on a highly successful model: the National Transportation Safety Board, the Federal agency that investigates airline crashes.

I should emphasize this bill is not just about responding to terrorist attacks. It will come into play anytime a building failure has lessons to teach, whether the building failed from a natural disaster or human action, regardless of whether that action was intentional.

So I urge my colleagues to support this measure. It is a simple lifesaving measure. It has the support of the groups who worked to put together our Nation's life safety codes, like the Civil Engineers and the National Fire Protection Association; and it is fully supported by the administration.

There are a lot of thanks due to a lot of people for helping to assemble this important measure. I want to thank the professional staff on both sides of the aisle on this Committee on Science. I want to thank all of my colleagues who invested so much of their time and energy and talent into producing this document, particularly the gentleman from New York (Mr. WEINER), who was a real leader, and my colleagues on the committee, the gentleman from Connecticut (Mr. SHAYS) and the gentleman from New York (Mr. GRUCCI), who have been key right from the beginning in working with us every step of the way. And Sally Regenhard, a wonderful woman, who has been there every step of the way representing the families, guiding us and inspiring us. And Dr. Gene Corley of the American Society of Civil Engineers. What a magnificent job they did under some very difficult circumstances. There are a lot of people who deserve credit for where we are today.

But the basic point is this: we are taking action that, hopefully, will prevent something like this from ever happening again.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. HALL of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

I want to join the chairman, the gentleman from New York (Mr. BOEHLERT), in strong support of H.R. 4687. Of course, he has well laid out the provisions of it, the need for it, and the action that was taken.

We all look back to September 11, 2001, when our country was subjected to a cowardly attack on the World Trade Center and the Pentagon. These attacks, of course, will rank with any of the great tragedies of American history. As with any tragedy, we need to look for lessons that can help us against possible future tragedies.

I know that we also need to carefully examine our emergency preparedness, our evacuation procedures and emergency responses as well as the structural integrity of our tall buildings. That is a tall order. And H.R. 4687 is the result of careful evaluation of how the various governmental agencies, State, local and Federal, investigated the collapse of the World Trade towers, and also emergency response and evacuation proceedings.

During the course of the hearings and in consultations with professional societies and citizen groups, the Committee on Science discovered the Federal Government's inability to quickly deploy a building investigative team to the World Trade Center site. The committee found valuable data was lost because we had no one with the authority to sequester or to set aside for future observation. In haste, and amidst tragedy and disbelief, trails to analyze were lost.

Citizen groups were angry and suspicious because the government in charge did not really provide public briefings on its building investigative team's activities. Our President reported to us as he could, as he visited the site and did everything he could to cooperate with the officials of the City of New York, as did the entire Nation.

We also discovered, though, that there is not a good system in place to translate the findings of an investigation into a major building collapse and to improve building standards and codes. And, finally, Federal investigative efforts were woefully underfunded to do a thorough and comprehensive job.

So, Mr. Chairman, H.R. 4687 is the Committee on Science's attempt to address these shortcomings. I will not go through the specific provisions of the bill. Chairman BOEHLERT has done a good job of that. However, this bill provides solutions to each of the problems that we uncovered, and we have placed them in the bill.

The National Construction Safety Team Act is going to enable, I think, the Federal Government to respond more quickly and comprehensively in the event of a major building failure. It is only by studying building disasters that we can improve building design and evacuation and emergency response procedures that ultimately make buildings safer.

I am convinced that some of the actions that this country has taken are working, because we have not had another tragedy to date. And though we are warned repeatedly that one is on its way, I think a lot of what we have done at the local government level, the State government, and the Federal government, all acting in cooperation, may be working.

I want to command Chairman BOEHLERT, well, I do not want to command Chairman BOEHLERT to do anything because he does such a good job of leading this committee, but I do want to commend him, and I want to certainly commend my colleagues, the gentleman from New York (Mr. WEINER) and the gentleman from New York (Mr.

ISRAEL), for their hard work on this legislation. As New Yorkers, they felt the hurt, they know the tragedy, and they were a lot of the life and breath of this bill as we labored through it and listened to the testimony. I also want to thank Chairman BOEHLERT for working with us in his usual bipartisan fashion.

As I said at the beginning, this is a bill about lessons learned. If we are serious about making our buildings safer against future terrorist attacks, then we ought to pass this legislation.

I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York (Mr. WEINER).

Mr. WEINER. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from Texas (Mr. HALL) for his leadership on our side of the aisle, and I want to join in the words he had to say about the gentleman from New York (Mr. BOEHLERT). The chairman has led this committee with great dignity and pursued this issue with thoroughness and with a great compassion and respect for the families of the victims who came to this committee and came to this Congress with a very reasonable request, and that is that we try to do what we can to make buildings safer in the future.

I also want to thank Mike Quear, and Geoff Hockert of my staff, who helped draft this bill.

Mr. Chairman, no one would dispute that the attack on the World Trade Center could not have been anticipated. In many respects, one can only marvel at the skill of the designers of the Twin Towers and the workmanship of thousands of nameless steelworkers and laborers. Thousands of families will enjoy dinner together tonight because, even under the most unimaginable circumstances, these proud buildings stood tall for more than an hour.

But for the families of those lost, this testament offers little consolation and leaves many questions about the causes of the collapse unanswered. And, sadly, because of the early missteps in the investigation, some of the most vexing questions may never be unraveled.

Thousands of tons of steel were carted away from Ground Zero and were recycled before any expert could examine what could have been telltale clues. Support trusses, fireproofing fragments, and even burnt-out electrical switches that might have given scientists and engineers insight were lost forever, even before an investigation was underway.

These failures mean that we are, even to this day, short on conclusions about design decisions that may have contributed to the deaths of so many firefighters and workers on the top floors.

Should future building avoid the concentration of stairwells that was used in the Twin Towers? Was enough attention given to the communications infrastructure that failed in the 1993 bombing, and tragically left hundreds of emergency workers climbing stairs up while officials on the ground knew that the buildings were about to come down? Did the fireproofing separate from the steel beams because of the intense heat, or did the design of the post-asbestos treatment that is in place in thousands of buildings in this country fail for other reasons?

We cannot bring back those that were lost on September 11, and today there are more than 25,000 mothers, fathers, aunts, uncles, husbands, wives, and loved ones that we thank God escaped that day. But if we want to ensure that the legacy of this tragedy is that future building collapses are avoided or mitigated, we need to do a better job investigating the causes.

We pray that no other plane ever crashes into a tall building. And we hope that an earthquake never rattles our Nation's high-rises. We remain vigilant against threats of a bomb in our city centers.

But just as we are not satisfied to hope that another plane does not crash, we need to create an investigative team like the NTSB, like the National Transportation Safety Board, to jump into action to investigate building collapses, protect and preserve evidence, issue regular briefings and reach conclusions that formalize standards of building design, egress and emergency escape.

The gentleman from New York (Mr. BOEHLERT), whose leadership on this issue has provided comfort to so many victims, and I have worked closely to craft legislation to create this authority. I call particular attention to two reforms contained in this bill.

First, just as the NTSB immediately sequesters evidence involved in a plane crash, our bill creates immediate on-site authority for investigators of building collapses to have access and preservation of important materials. And if necessary, the new panel may subpoena materials. Never again will we see the destruction of material and the legal jousting that marked the scene of the September 11 attack, where even the blueprints of the building were kept from investigators and took weeks to secure.

Secondly, the bill encourages the national construction safety teams to make recommendations to improve the design of buildings, evacuation and emergency plans, and I hope give localities guidance to avoid the tragic pitfalls in communication that befell so many in the World Trade Center.

We cannot mitigate the tragedy that befell so many of my neighbors. Families of the victims, particularly Sally Regenhard and the others of the Skyscraper Safety Campaign, have asked that we do what we can to give meaning to their loss. Today, we pay tribute to those who perished at Ground Zero by taking another step to ensure that we learn the lessons of our past. One thing is certain, we will not stop reaching for the heavens in our lives or in our buildings.

Mr. HALL of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York (Mr. ISRAEL).

Mr. ISRAEL. Mr. Chairman, I commend the gentleman from Texas (Mr. HALL) and the gentleman from New York (Chairman BOEHLERT) for their work on this important legislation. It was bipartisan from the beginning; and on such an important issue, that is the way it should be.

Mr. Chairman, I lost over 100 constituents in the rubble of the World Trade Center. In the days after September 11, their families wanted to know why our national intelligence and our airport security were not strong enough to withstand the attack. Now their families are asking whether our building, fire and safety codes were strong enough to withstand the attack. They want to know if we learned anything from the collapse of the Federal building in Oklahoma, or did bureaucracy simply file a report on some shelf, only to be opened in the scrutiny of September 11. They want to make sure that the lessons lost on September 11 will never be lost again.

Since September 11, we have responded to the assault on the World Trade Center and the Pentagon in many ways. Militarily, we have eviscerated al Qaeda. We have replaced the Taliban theocracy with a secular interim government that will lead Afghanistan to democracy, we have started to revamp our airport security systems, we have passed the Comprehensive Bioterrorism Act and the PATRIOT Act.

On Capitol Hill, we have erected steel barricades and shatterproof glass to protect Members of Congress; but we are still asking our police, our fire, and our emergency workers around the country to risk their lives running into buildings without really knowing what they need to know about the technical conditions of those buildings.

We need to know what can be done to make our buildings more structurally sound and control the intense fires caused by airplanes or bombs, and what precautions should be taken to minimize the weakening of steel, even under the most catastrophic conditions.

Mr. Chairman, I went to the wreckage of the World Trade Center with President Bush a few days after the attack. We have an obligation to those lost in that rubble and to everyone who enters a skyscraper in this new age of terrorist warnings to shine some light, to get some answers, and to act on what we have learned. Protecting our skyscrapers and economic security is just as important an issue as flying F-

16s over the Capitol Building in Washington.

That is why the gentleman from New York (Mr. BOEHLERT), the gentleman from New York (Mr. WEINER), and I have asked the Office of Management and Budget to allocate the $40 million needed to complete a comprehensive study. When the Committee on Science held a hearing to study the progress of the investigation of the collapse, there was unanimity among the witnesses on the need for a comprehensive assessment and research agenda to address evacuation procedures, emergency response, and structural analysis of the World Trade Center.

We need to give scientists the resources that they need to make and conclude this full, comprehensive study.

Mr. Chairman as the gentleman from New York said, we were not ready for a building disaster like the one at the World Trade Center. This legislation will help us find the answers that our families are looking for and prepare us for a more secure future. We will always look at the site of the World Trade Center and ask why. Now it is our obligation to know how, and this bill gives us the tools.

Mr. BOEHLERT. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, I cannot emphasize enough the sensitivity with which the committee handled this very important assignment and the leadership provided by the gentleman from New York (Mr. WEINER), the gentleman from New York (Mr. ISRAEL), the gentleman from Texas (Mr. HALL), and the gentleman from Connecticut (Mr. SHAYS), whom I am about to yield time to. They were very sensitive and compassionate in dealing with the families and helped to craft a bill that we can all be proud of.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Connecticut (Mr. SHAYS).

Mr. SHAYS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 4687, the National Construction Safety Team Act. The reason why I think this bill is so well drafted and so well thought out is because of the work of both the chairman and the ranking member, along with the extraordinary Science Committee staff.

When we first began these hearings, I thought, "Wait a second, we had two gigantic, wide-body planes filled with fuel imploding in these buildings? What would Members expect?"

But as we began this investigation, we realized there were a lot of things we could learn from the collapse of these buildings. It is sad and unfortunate that no one was in charge of this investigation. Because no one was empowered to be in charge, we could not gain access to some of this material right away to understand how this building, for instance, imploded. It was fascinating for me to review the fire escape options. Had they not all been concentrated in one place, maybe more people could have gotten out.

We learned that materials and building construction made a difference. Studying building No. 7, a building over 40 stories tall, while it burned indefinitely and then basically collapsed was an incredible opportunity for us to discover a number of things about building materials.

The collapse of the World Trade Center forever changed the landscape in New York City. In Connecticut's fourth district alone, over 60 constituents perished in the attacks, and the lives of their families, friends and colleagues will never be the same again.

When both buildings imploded, I was unfortunately brought to remember what had happened in Bridgeport, Connecticut, shortly before I was elected in 1987. The L'Ambiance building in Bridgeport, a 16-story apartment building, collapsed when 16 concrete slabs crashed to the ground. We lost 28 construction workers.

The collapse of L'Ambiance was due in large measure to poor construction practices. The tragedy made clear the need to improve the inspection and reporting requirements for building construction—which we did.

I think what we are doing here does so much more to guarantee in the future we will build better buildings. In the future when there is a building collapse, we will have procedures to govern the investigation and understand what caused the collapse. And just like when an airplane crash takes place, we will understand why it happened and how we can prevent it from happening again.

I have tremendous respect for what the Committee on Science has done. There has not been a lot of press on this issue, not a lot of attention to the extent I think it deserves, but from this horrible experience we have learned so much and will have the ability in the future to take command of a site and understand what needs to be done. I thank the chairman and the ranking member for their extraordinary work, and for the work of the staff, and I urge my colleagues to support this important legislation.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 4687, the National Construction Safety Team Act.

The collapse of the World Trade Center forever changed the landscape in New York City. In Connecticut's Fourth district alone, over 60 constituents perished in the attacks on the Twin Towers; and the lives of their families, friends and colleagues will never be the same again.

As I watched in horror as the towers collapsed, I was reminded of the 1987 collapse of L'Ambiance in Bridgeport, Connecticut. L'Ambiance was a 16-story apartment building which collapsed when 16 concrete slabs crashed to the ground, killing 28 construction workers.

The collapse of L'Ambiance was due in large measure to poor construction practices.

The tragedy made clear the need to improve the inspection and reporting requirements for building construction—when we did.

As we continue to fight the war on terrorism and strive to prevent future conventional biological, chemical and nuclear attacks, we must also find more effective ways to respond to disasters.

The study of the World Trade Center collapse made clear that we must improve procedures for investigating building collapses. H.R. 4687 will clarify who is in charge and their respective responsibilities in case of future disasters.

This legislation grants the National Institute of Standards and Technology (NIST) authorities similar to those of the National Transportation Safety Board, and establishes a procedure to govern all future building disasters. It grants NIST access and control of the disaster site, subpoena power and the ability to move and preserve key evidence.

I commend Chairman BOEHLERT for his leadership on this issue, and I urge my colleagues to support this important legislation.

Mr. HALL of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. BOEHLERT. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from New York (Mr. GRUCCI), someone who has been with us every step of the way, a very valuable member of the Committee on Science.

Mr. GRUCCI. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from New York (Mr. BOEHLERT) for his steadfast leadership on this important issue; and I thank the ranking member, the gentleman from Texas (Mr. HALL), for his leadership as well.

Mr. Chairman, my congressional district lies just 45 miles from Ground Zero. My constituents were the first responders, opening up their emergency rooms, volunteering their rescue services to help mothers and fathers, brothers and sisters, friends, and even strangers, all that were trapped in the rubble of the World Trade Center on that morning of September 11.

America sat with fear and awe, our eyes captivated by the sight of these once-great towers reduced to a pile of smoking debris. But as the hallowed ground of Lower Manhattan is cleared of the rubble and America attempts to heal from the horror of September 11, we continue to work together to find what answers can be mustered from this tragedy and ask the critically important questions to find out how these towers failed.

This key legislation, the National Construction Safety Team Act, will give the National Institute of Standards and Technology clear authority and responsibility, as well as the necessary legal tools, to investigate building failures. These tools allow for a complete understanding and study into why a building fails and how to ensure that it never happens again.

Mr. Chairman, the crash of TWA Flight 800 was yet another tragic event that resulted in substantial loss of life. In order to learn what happened, the National Transportation Safety Board was sent to the scene to begin a full investigation. As a local leader at that time, I saw firsthand the vital importance of this effort. But in the collapse at Ground Zero, there was no clear mandate to what Federal agents would lead an investigation into the buildings' failure. This confusion cannot happen again.

H.R. 4687 clarifies this process and makes certain that NIST has the authority to study building collapse. I am proud to be an original cosponsor of this legislation and place my full support behind the bill. I urge Members to join me in supporting this legislation. The tragedy that took place at the World Trade Center was one of unimaginable magnitude. Now 10 months after the tragedy of September 11, we continue to work together to see that a tragedy like this never happens again.

Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from New York (Mr. BOEHLERT) for his leadership, and thank him for his commitment to New York.

Mr. BOEHLERT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New York (Mr. CROWLEY).

Mr. CROWLEY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 4687, the National Construction Safety Team Act, and I thank the gentleman from New York (Mr. WEINER) as well as the gentleman from New York (Mr. ISRAEL) for their work on this important legislation.

September 11 changed New York and changed our world. Since September 11, volunteers and scientific experts have traveled to Ground Zero in the name of recovery and understanding. These workers, volunteers and experts have all pushed themselves and their skills to the ultimate limit to deal with an unusually grave situation.

In particular, the National Institute of Standards and Technology had to deftly work with a myriad of concerns and concerned New Yorkers. People like Arthur Taub and Sally Regenhart of Co-op City, who had concerns about the NIST investigation. Mr. Taub and Ms. Regenhart were among thousands of family members, both grieving and seeking answers.

NIST has worked with constituents who wanted answers and who had information. Even seasoned NIST employees admitted they were covering new ground as no one could ever have imagined such an event as September 11.

In the immediate aftermath of 9-11, NIST had to try to do its job amidst emergency responders, police officers, and incomprehensible losses. In this extraordinarily challenging situation, critical evidence like beams, steel work and cables, were being carted off before the NIST team had a time to catalog or identify them. Given the fact that the scope of this tragedy had never been seen before, it is understandable that this investigation would be less than ideal. However, it is important that we learn from this tragedy.

There are several lessons to be learned from September 11. One lesson is the importance of a swift and thorough investigation of a building failure. NIST must have access to building debris as soon as it is safe to enter a site, and they must be able to move and preserve critical evidence. This bill gives NIST that authority.

Looking toward the future, it is important to do all we can to prevent a building failure of any kind from ever happening again. This bill will allow us to obtain information to help prevent building failures in the future.

□ 0945

It is important for us to swiftly and thoroughly respond to the community when buildings fail. God forbid if they fail like this again. This bill does that, and more. I urge my colleagues to support H.R. 4687.

Mr. Chairman, I thank the ranking member as well as the chairman for this fine piece of work.

Mr. LARSON of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, I rise today in support of a measure that will end up saving many lives by allowing America's foremost experts in the area of structural collapses to conduct inquiries with adequate investigative authorities, and thereby allowing the American people to learn lessons that can be applied to future building construction and emergency procedures. I speak of the bill before us today, the National Construction Safety Team Act, H.R. 4687, of which I am a proud original sponsor and on which I have been working with my colleagues on the Science Committee for the past few months. This issue was first brought to my attention by Ms. Monica Gabrielle from my home State of Connecticut, who lost her husband, Richard, as a result of the collapse of 2 World Trade Center. As part of the Skyscraper Safety Campaign, Ms. Gabrielle's efforts to bring this issue to the attention of me and to other Members of Congress were invaluable in getting the Science Committee and now the House to act on this important legislation. Her efforts, and those of the Skyscraper Safety Campaign, to ensure that we know all we need to know about the structural collapse of the World Trade Center, the subsequent investigation, and to make sure that any recommendations are followed through and implemented so that we can avoid preventable deaths in the future are the principle reason we are voting today on this bill. And for that they should be mentioned here and praised. Thank you Ms. Gabrielle.

I also want to specifically commend the efforts of two of my colleagues on the Science Committee, Chairman BOEHLERT and Mr. WEINER of New York. Their tireless efforts on behalf of the families of the victims who died on that terrible day last September is awe-inspiring.

One of the unexpected and tragic lessons we learned from the attacks on the World Trade Center is that the Federal government is ill-equipped to respond quickly to disasters and discover the lessons that building failures can teach—lessons that could save many lives in the future.

In the case of the World Trade Center, the Federal Emergency Management Agency (FEMA) was the Federal agency primarily responsible for responding to the disaster. A key component of that response was the deployment of a team of experts in engineering, design, construction, and building codes to investigate the causes of the collapse of the buildings and determine what lessons could be learned from the disaster.

Unfortunately, FEMA's investigative team encountered roadblocks from the beginning. It was not deployed as rapidly as it should have been. It was unable to stop the recycling of many of the steel beams that had fallen from the towers and that could have provided valuable clues as the sequence of events that led to the collapse of the Trade Center towers. It was unable to obtain the blueprints for the buildings until almost 4 months after the collapse, and it was never given access to other important documents that could have been useful for the investigation.

As a result, FEMA requested that the National Institute of Standards and Technology (NIST) conduct a second, more extensive investigation. NIST has the only Federal laboratory dedicated to research on building design and fire and has existing statutory authority for conducting investigations into the structural failures.

However, NIST does not currently have those authorities, and this bill provides that authority. It would require new authorities to conduct an effective investigation, so that lives can be saved in the future. Such authorities would be akin to those of the National Transportation Safety Board (NTSB) which is authorized by statute to enter the site of airplane crashes, preserve evidence, and issue subpoenas to witnesses or for documents to facilitate its investigation.

I am very proud to have worked on this bill with my colleagues for the Science Committee and as we prepare to vote on it, I urge my colleagues to consider the impact this legislation will have in saving lives in the future, and therefore I urge them to support it. We owe this to the victims of the events of September 11, their families, and the American people.

Mrs. MORELLA. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of HR 4687. As an original cosponsor of this legislation, I want to thank the leadership Chairman BOEHLERT and Ranking Member HALL for bringing this issue forward and I strongly urge my colleagues to pass this important piece of legislation. On September 11th, there were no Republicans or Democrats in the rubble, only Americans and I am proud to stand here with my colleagues from both parties to honor their memory and support this bill.

Over the past few months, the Science Committee has heard disturbing testimony about the investigation into the reasons for the catastrophic building failure at the World Trade Center. We have learned that there was no federal agency clearly in charge of the investigation nor anything to assure it began in a timely fashion. Worse still, when FEMA was given authority to investigate, they lacked critical access to information, documents and materials and no legal authority to compel cooperation. Finally, the public was frequently kept out of the loop leading to confusion and resentment among victim's friends and families.

We listened closely to these concerns and have responded with a precise and targeted remedy. Using the National Transportation Safety Board as a model, we have proposed the creation of a National Construction Safety Team to investigate catastrophic collapse complete with subpoena power, investigatory authority, and a clear chain-of-command under the direction of the National Institute of Standards and Technology. We are firmly establishing who's in charge of future investigations with clear mandates for action, without impeding search and rescue operations.

In addition, we are supporting additional research by the NIST into the technical causes of the World Trade Center collapse and other fire safety issues in an attempt to provide the necessary research for future building safety codes. NIST is the premier federal laboratory for research in building design and safety and is uniquely positioned to conduct the extensive study required to fully understand the World Trade Center disaster and thereby prevent future collapses.

Finally, while I applaud the efforts and support of my colleagues, I caution them that it may not be enough. As this work goes forward, we will likely come up with more questions than answers and as NIST uncovers deficiencies in our building designs, they may also discover gaps in our knowledge. New studies and new facilities may be needed to fill these voids and those investigations may require a new commitment. Today we take an important first step, and I hope I can count on my colleagues to be there when we take the next one.

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Chairman, I rise today in strong support of H.R. 4687, the National Construction Safety Act. I urge my colleagues to support this important measure.

This legislation authorizes the National Institute of Standards and Technology (NIST) within the Department of Commerce to establish national construction safety teams to investigate the structural causes of building failures that cause substantial loss of life. This measure authorizes the appropriation of $75 million over 3 years for this purpose. The NIST also will be allowed to accept and spend monetary gifts to support the teams.

Mr. Chairman, this measure was drafted in response to the difficulties encountered by those who sought to investigate the collapse of the World Trade Center buildings last September 11th. It has been designed to address every problem encountered by those investigators, including bureaucratic confusion, a lack of investigative tools and excessive restrictions on the flow of information.

We know why the World Trade Center Towers collapsed. This bill seeks to ensure that such an event is never repeated. By providing NIST with the authority it needs to swiftly carry out future investigations, H.R. 4687 will help that organization develop an institutional knowledge base to improve its response to future tragedies, and hopefully to head off that alternative altogether. Moreover, the legislation will also help both NIST and the greater architectural and engineering communities improve their existing designs with the goal of developing better buildings in the future.

Accordingly, I urge my colleagues to give this measure their strong support.

Mr. BOEHLERT. Mr. Chairman, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. All time for general debate has expired.

Pursuant to the rule, the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute printed in the bill shall be considered by sections as an original bill for the purpose of amendment, and each section is considered read.

During consideration of the bill for amendment, the Chair may accord priority in recognition to a Member offering an amendment that he has printed in the designated place in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. Those amendments will be considered read.

The Clerk will designate section 1.

The text of section 1 is as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "National Construction Safety Team Act".

Mr. BOEHLERT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the remainder of the bill be printed in the RECORD and open to amendment at any point.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The text of the remainder of the bill is as follows:

SEC. 2. NATIONAL CONSTRUCTION SAFETY TEAMS.

(a) ESTABLISHMENT.—The Director of the National Institute of Standards and Technology (in this Act referred to as the "Director") is authorized to establish National Construction Safety Teams for deployment after events causing the failure of a building or buildings that has resulted in substantial loss of life or that posed significant potential for substantial loss of life. To the maximum extent practicable, the Director shall establish and deploy a Team within 48 hours after such an event. The Director shall promptly publish in the Federal Register notice of the establishment of each National Construction Safety Team.

(b) PROCEDURES.—

(1) DEVELOPMENT.—Not later than 3 months after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Director, in consultation with the United States Fire Administration and other appropriate Federal agencies, shall develop procedures for the establishment and deployment of National Construction Safety Teams. The Director shall update such procedures as appropriate. Such procedures shall include provisions—

(A) regarding conflicts of interest related to service on the Team;

(B) defining the circumstances under which the Director will establish and deploy a National Construction Safety Team;

(C) prescribing the appropriate size of National Construction Safety Teams;

(D) guiding the disclosure of information under section 8;

(E) guiding the conduct of investigations under this Act;

(F) identifying and prescribing appropriate conditions for the provision by the Director of additional resources and services National Construction Safety Teams may need;

(G) to ensure that investigations under this Act do not impede and are coordinated with any search and rescue efforts being undertaken at the site of the building failure;

(H) for regular briefings of the public on the status of the investigative proceedings and findings;

(I) guiding the National Construction Safety Teams in moving and preserving evidence as described in section 5(a)(4), (b)(2), and (d)(4);

(J) providing for coordination with Federal, State, and local entities that may sponsor research or investigations of building failures, including research conducted under the Earthquake Hazards Reduction Act of 1977; and

(K) regarding such other issues as the Director considers appropriate.

(2) PUBLICATION.—The Director shall publish promptly in the Federal Register final procedures, and subsequent updates thereof, developed under paragraph (1).

SEC. 3. COMPOSITION OF TEAMS.

National Construction Safety Teams shall be led by an individual named by the Director. National Construction Safety Team members shall include at least 1 employee of the National Institute of Standards and Technology and shall include other experts who are not employees of the National Institute of Standards and Technology, who may include private sector experts, university experts, representatives of professional organizations with appropriate expertise, and appropriate Federal, State, or local officials.

SEC. 4. FUNCTIONS OF TEAMS.

National Construction Safety Teams shall—

(1) conduct investigations to establish the likely technical cause or causes of the building failure;

(2) evaluate the technical aspects of evacuation and emergency response procedures;

(3) recommend specific improvements to building standards, codes, and practices based on the findings made pursuant to paragraphs (1) and (2); and

(4) recommend research and other appropriate actions needed to improve the structural safety of buildings, and improve evacuation and emergency response procedures, based on the findings of the investigation.

SEC. 5. AUTHORITIES.

(a) ENTRY AND INSPECTION.—In investigating a building failure under this Act, members of a National Construction Safety Team, and any other person authorized by the Director to support a National Construction Safety Team, on display of appropriate credentials provided by the Director, may—

(1) enter property where a building failure being investigated has occurred, or where building components, materials, and artifacts with respect to the building failure are located, and do anything necessary to conduct the investigation;

(2) inspect any record (including any design, construction, or maintenance record), process, or facility related to the investigation;

(3) inspect and test any building components, materials, and artifacts related to the building failure; and

(4) move such records, components, materials, and artifacts as provided by the procedures developed under section 2(b)(1).

(b) AVOIDING UNNECESSARY INTERFERENCE AND PRESERVING EVIDENCE.—An inspection, test, or other action taken by a National Construction Safety Team under this section shall be conducted in a way that—

(1) does not interfere unnecessarily with services provided by the owner or operator of the building components, materials, or artifacts, property, records, process, or facility; and

(2) to the maximum extent feasible, preserves evidence related to the building failure, consistent with the ongoing needs of the investigation.

(c) COORDINATION.—

(1) WITH SEARCH AND RESCUE EFFORTS.—A National Construction Safety Team shall not impede, and shall coordinate its investigation with, any search and rescue efforts being undertaken at the site of the building failure.

(2) WITH OTHER RESEARCH.—A National Construction Safety Team shall coordinate its investigation, to the extent practicable, with qualified researchers who are conducting engineering or scientific (including social science) research relating to the building failure.

(3) MEMORANDA OF UNDERSTANDING.—The National Institute of Standards and Technology shall enter into a memorandum of understanding with each Federal agency that may conduct or sponsor a related investigation, providing for coordination of investigations.

(d) INTERAGENCY PRIORITIES.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in paragraph (2) or (3), a National Construction Safety Team investigation shall have priority over any other investigation of any other Federal agency.

(2) NATIONAL TRANSPORTATION SAFETY BOARD.—If the National Transportation Safety Board is conducting an investigation related to an investigation of a National Construction Safety Team, the National Transportation Safety Board investigation shall have priority over the National Construction Safety Team investigation. Such priority shall not otherwise affect the authority of the Team to continue its investigation under this Act.

(3) CRIMINAL ACTS.—If the Attorney General, in consultation with the Director, determines, and notifies the Director, that circumstances reasonably indicate that the building failure being investigated by a National Construction Safety Team may have been caused by a criminal act with intent to cause the building failure, the National Construction Safety Team shall relinquish investigative priority to the appropriate Federal law enforcement agency. The relinquishment of investigative priority by the National Construction Safety Team shall not otherwise affect the authority of the Team to continue its investigation under this Act.

(4) PRESERVATION OF EVIDENCE.—If a Federal law enforcement agency suspects and notifies the Director that a building failure being investigated by a National Construction Safety Team under this Act may have been caused by a criminal act with intent to cause the building failure, the National Construction Safety Team, in consultation with the Federal law enforcement agency, shall take necessary actions to ensure that evidence of the criminal act is preserved.

SEC. 6. BRIEFINGS, HEARINGS, WITNESSES, AND SUBPOENAS.

(a) GENERAL AUTHORITY.—The Director, on behalf of a National Construction Safety Team, may conduct hearings, administer oaths, and require, by subpoena and otherwise, necessary witnesses and evidence as necessary to carry out this Act.

(b) BRIEFINGS.—National Construction Safety Teams shall hold regular public briefings on the status of investigative proceedings and findings.

(c) PUBLIC HEARINGS.—During the course of an investigation by a National Construction Safety Team, the National Institute of Standards and Technology may, if the Director considers it to be in the public interest, hold a public hearing for the purposes of—

(1) gathering testimony from witnesses; and

(2) informing the public on the progress of the investigation.

(d) PRODUCTION OF WITNESSES.—A witness or evidence in an investigation under this Act may be summoned or required to be produced from any place in the United States. A witness summoned under this subsection is entitled to the same fee and mileage the witness would have been paid in a court of the United States.

(e) ISSUANCE OF SUBPOENAS.—A subpoena shall be issued under the signature of the Director but may be served by any person designated by the Director.

(f) FAILURE TO OBEY SUBPOENA.—If a person disobeys a subpoena issued by the Director or a National Construction Safety Team under this Act, the Director may bring a civil action in a district court of the United States to enforce the subpoena. An action under this subsection may be brought in the judicial district in which the person against whom the action is brought resides, is found, or does business. The court may punish a failure to obey an order of the court to comply with the subpoena as a contempt of court.

SEC. 7. ADDITIONAL POWERS.

In order to support National Construction Safety Teams in carrying out this Act, the Director may—

(1) procure the temporary or intermittent services of experts or consultants under section 3109 of title 5, United States Code;

(2) request the use, when appropriate, of available services, equipment, personnel, and facilities of a department, agency, or instrumentality of the United States Government on a reimbursable or other basis;

(3) confer with employees and request the use of services, records, and facilities of State and local governmental authorities;

(4) accept voluntary and uncompensated services;

(5) accept and use gifts of money and other property;

(6) make contracts with nonprofit entities to carry out studies related to purpose, functions, and authorities of the National Construction Safety Teams; and

(7) provide nongovernmental members of the National Construction Safety Team reasonable compensation for time spent carrying out activities under this Act.

SEC. 8. DISCLOSURE OF INFORMATION.

(a) GENERAL RULE.—Except as otherwise provided in this section, a copy of a record, information, or investigation submitted or received by a National Construction Safety Team shall be made available to the public on request and at reasonable cost.

(b) EXCEPTION.—Subsection (a) does not require the release of information described by section 552(b) of title 5, United States Code, or protected from disclosure by any other law of the United States.

(c) PROTECTION OF VOLUNTARY SUBMISSION OF INFORMATION.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, a National Construction Safety Team, the National Institute of Standards and Technology, and any agency receiving information from a National Construction Safety Team or the National Institute of Standards and Technology, shall not disclose voluntarily provided safety-related information if that information is not directly related to the building failure being investigated and the Director finds that the disclosure of the information would inhibit the voluntary provision of that type of information.

(d) PUBLIC SAFETY INFORMATION.—A National Construction Safety Team and the National Institute of Standards and Technology shall not publicly release any information it receives in the course of an investigation under this Act if the Director finds that the disclosure of that information might jeopardize public safety.

SEC. 9. NATIONAL CONSTRUCTION SAFETY TEAM REPORT.

Not later than 90 days after completing an investigation, a National Construction Safety Team shall issue a public report which includes—

(1) an analysis of the likely technical cause or causes of the building failure investigated;

(2) technical recommendations for changes to or the establishment of evacuation and emergency response procedures;

(3) recommended specific improvements to building standards, codes, and practices; and

(4) recommendations for research and other appropriate actions needed to help prevent future building failures.

SEC. 10. NATIONAL INSTITUTE OF STANDARDS AND TECHNOLOGY ACTIONS.

After the issuance of a public report under section 9, the National Institute of Standards and Technology shall comprehensively review the report and, working with the United States Fire Administration and other appropriate Federal and non-Federal agencies and organizations—

(1) conduct, or enable or encourage the conducting of, appropriate research recommended by the National Construction Safety Team; and

(2) promote the appropriate adoption by the Federal Government, and encourage the appropriate adoption by other agencies and organizations, of the recommendations of the National Construction Safety Team with respect to—

(A) technical aspects of evacuation and emergency response procedures;

(B) specific improvements to building standards, codes, and practices; and

(C) other actions needed to help prevent future building failures.

SEC. 11. NATIONAL INSTITUTE OF STANDARDS AND TECHNOLOGY ANNUAL REPORT.

Not later than February 15 of each year, the Director shall transmit to the Committee on Science of the House of Representatives and to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation of the Senate a report that includes—

(1) a summary of the investigations conducted by National Construction Safety Teams during the prior fiscal year;

(2) a summary of recommendations made by the National Construction Safety Teams in reports issued under section 9 during the prior fiscal year; and

(3) a description of the actions taken by the National Institute of Standards and Technology during the prior fiscal year in response to reports issued under section 9.

SEC. 12. ADVISORY COMMITTEE.

(a) ESTABLISHMENT AND FUNCTIONS.—The Director, in consultation with the United States Fire Administration and other appropriate Federal agencies, shall establish an advisory committee to advise the Director on carrying out this Act and to review the procedures developed under section 2(b)(1) and the reports issued under section 9.

(b) ANNUAL REPORT.—On January 1 of each year, the advisory committee shall transmit to the Committee on Science of the House of Representatives and to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation of the Senate a report that includes—

(1) an evaluation of National Construction Safety Team activities, along with recommendations to improve the operation and effectiveness of National Construction Safety Teams; and

(2) an assessment of the implementation of the recommendations of National Construction Safety Teams and of the advisory committee.

(c) DURATION OF ADVISORY COMMITTEE.—Section 14 of the Federal Advisory Committee Act shall not apply to the advisory committee established under this section.

SEC. 13. ADDITIONAL APPLICABILITY.

The authorities and restrictions applicable under this Act to the Director and to National Construction Safety Teams shall apply to the activities of the National Institute of Standards and Technology in response to the attacks of September 11, 2001.

SEC. 14. AMENDMENT.

Section 7 of the National Bureau of Standards Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1986 (15

U.S.C. 281a) is amended by inserting “, or from an investigation under the National Construction Safety Team Act,” after “from such investigation”.

SEC. 15. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

There are authorized to be appropriated to the National Institute of Standards and Technology for carrying out this Act $25,000,000 for each of the fiscal years 2003 through 2005, to remain available until expended.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. BOEHLERT

Mr. BOEHLERT. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BOEHLERT:

Page 4, line 24, insert: “Team members who are not Federal employees shall be considered Federal Government contractors.” after “or local officials.”.

Page 8, lines 9 and 10, strike “with intent to cause the building failure”.

Page 8, lines 21 and 22, strike “with intent to cause the building failure”.

Page 10, line 8, strike “the Director” and insert “the Attorney General, acting on behalf of the Director,”.

Page 11, line 7, insert “, to the extent provided in advance in appropriations Acts” after “and other property”.

Page 13, line 19, insert “(consistent with existing procedures for the establishment of building standards, codes, and practices)” after “promote”.

SEC. 15. CONSTRUCTION.

Nothing in this Act shall be construed to confer any authority on the National Institute of Standards and Technology to require the adoption of building standards, codes, or practices.

Page 16, line 7, redesignate section 15 as section 16.

Page 16, line 10, strike “$25,000,000” and insert “such sums as may be necessary”.

Mr. BOEHLERT (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. BOEHLERT. Mr. Chairman, this is a manager's amendment that clarifies a number of issues in the bill. It reflects the discussions between the committee and the administration, especially the White House and the Department of Commerce. It also includes language worked out with the Committee on Appropriations. So I appreciate the willingness of both the White House and the gentleman from Florida (Chairman YOUNG) of the Committee on Appropriations to work with us to bring this bill to the floor with their support.

This is an en bloc amendment that clarifies or alters several different sections of the bill.

First, the amendment clarifies that members of investigative teams should be treated as contract employees, thereby shielding them from liability.

Second, it clarifies that team members not recommend code changes or further research in the unlikely event that they do not believe any code changes or further research is necessary.

Third, it expands the types of criminal investigations that would require NIST to stop serving as the lead agency at the site of the building collapse.

Fourth, the amendment clarifies how certain decisions of the Director of NIST can be enforced.

Fifth, it clarifies that all expenditures in the bill are subject to appropriations.

Sixth, it clarifies in two separate places that the bill gives NIST no regulatory authority over the adoption of building standards, codes and practices.

Finally, it changes the authorization to “such sums,” which is fitting, given that it is impossible to predict how many investigations will be conducted in any given year. We hope there will not be any. There are no ongoing expenses associated with the bill.

Mr. Chairman, this is a straightforward and carefully negotiated amendment, agreed to in a bipartisan fashion, and I urge its adoption.

Mr. HALL of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, Chairman BOEHLERT has succinctly laid out the amendment and has worked with us on it. We support it, and I urge its adoption.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York (Mr. BOEHLERT).

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute, as amended.

The committee amendment in the nature of a substitute, as amended, was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the Committee rises.

Accordingly, the Committee rose; and the Speaker pro tempore (Mr. GIBBONS) having assumed the chair, Mr. SIMPSON, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H.R. 4687) to provide for the establishment of investigative teams to assess building performance and emergency response and evacuation procedures in the wake of any building failure that has resulted in substantial loss of life or that posed significant potential of substantial loss of life, pursuant to House Resolution 475, he reported the bill back to the House with an amendment adopted by the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the rule, the previous question is ordered.

Is a separate vote demanded on the amendment to the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute adopted by the Committee of the Whole? If not, the question is on the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute.

The committee amendment in the nature of a substitute was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. BOEHLERT. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 338, nays 23, not voting 73, as follows:

Messrs. PENCE, AKIN, RYUN of Kansas, ISAKSON, and GOODLATTE changed their vote from “yea” to “nay.”

Messrs. BLUNT, ARMEY, BARR, and WAMP, and Ms. KILPATRICK changed their vote from “nay” to “yea.”

So the bill was passed.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Stated for:

Mr. CLAY. Mr. Speaker, on rollcall No. 295, H.R. 4687, National Construction Safety Team Act, had I been present, I would have voted “yea.”

Ms. MCCARTHY of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, on rollcall No. 295, I was unavoidably detained. Had I been present, I would have voted “yea.”

Mrs. CUBIN. Mr. Speaker, on roll call 295 I was detained by the construction on the Capitol Hill complex. Had I been present, I would have voted “yea.”

Mr. McDERMOTT. Mr. Speaker, I was unable to be in Washington, DC today. As a result, I was unable to vote on the National Construction Safety Team Act (H.R. 4687). Had I been capable of voting, I would have voted “yea.”

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. BOEHLERT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks and include extraneous material in the RECORD on H.R. 4687.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SIMPSON). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM

Ms. PELOSI. Mr. Speaker, I rise for the purpose of inquiring about the schedule for next week.

Mr. ARMEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentlewoman yield?

Ms. PELOSI. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. ARMEY. Mr. Speaker, I am so pleased to announce that the House has completed its legislative business for the week.

The House will next meet for legislative business on Monday, July 15, at 12:30 p.m. for morning hour and at 2 o'clock p.m. for legislative business.

I will schedule a number of measures under suspension of the rules, a list of which will be distributed to Members' offices later today. Recorded votes on Monday will be postponed until 6:30 p.m.

On Tuesday and the balance of the week, I have scheduled the following measures for consideration in the House:

On Tuesday, H.R. 5093, the Department of Interior Appropriations Act for Fiscal Year 2003;

On Wednesday, the Treasury and Postal Operations Appropriations Act for Fiscal Year 2003;

On Thursday, the Legislative Branch Appropriations Act for Fiscal Year 2003;

And again on Thursday and on Friday, the Department of Agriculture Appropriations Act for Fiscal Year 2003.

Mr. Speaker, the conferees are meeting this morning to complete work on the President's emergency defense and homeland security supplemental appropriation request, and I intend to schedule that conference report as soon as it is available next week.

Obviously, Mr. Speaker, we have a busy and productive week ahead of us, so I would advise Members to expect long days and nights as we work to complete our work on five appropriations bills next week.

Ms. PELOSI. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for that presentation. I would just like to know how late he expects these long days and nights to go. Are we talking 3 a.m. in the morning? Can Members make plans with their families in the evening?

Mr. ARMEY. I thank the gentlewoman for the inquiry. As the gentlewoman may have noticed, other than Monday, we have appropriations bills on each of these days. Appropriations bills come to the floor under the 5-minute rule. This provides ample opportunity for maximum participation by the Members.

One can never say for certain. We will try to work as late as is necessary to maintain the schedule for the completion of the bills, with an eye toward a reasonable time to catch our planes for our weekend work recesses at home on Friday. So while I would anticipate no extraordinarily late evenings, we must be prepared, I think, to work into the evenings each night to sustain that schedule.

Ms. PELOSI. I appreciate that.

I would like to further inquire, Mr. Speaker, if there is any other legislative business besides appropriations bills that the gentleman expects to come up next week.

Mr. ARMEY. I thank the gentlewoman for that question. We do not see anything. Obviously, we have several things out in conference, and insofar as any of those conferences, and most hopefully the emergency supplemental conference should report, we would want to bring those conference reports to the floor as quickly as possible.

Ms. PELOSI. Mr. Speaker, I would say to the leader that I had a couple of issues in that regard.

As Members know, the Senate will finish a very tough corporate accountability measure early next week that the President and the Speaker have expressed support for.

Given deep concern about the corporate scandals and impact on pensions and retirement savings of Americans, we in this House need to act as quickly as possible. Would it not make sense simply to adopt the Senate bill and send it right to the President before we leave for the August recess? Is that possible?

Mr. ARMEY. I thank the gentlewoman for her inquiry. I, too, like the gentlewoman, am so pleased that the other body has finally understood how necessary this is and has finally tried to catch up with the House, which passed a bill on April 24 with a vote of 334 to 90, and 119 Members of the gentlewoman's own party voted for that excellent product from the House.

While the other body is finally getting aware of the urgency of moving on this, and we do, indeed, hope they might complete work on a bill that relates to our work next week, we would be quite anxious to get to conference with them as quickly as possible and work out the most reasonable and effective compromise between the two bodies to get sent to the President as soon as possible.

So I would join the gentlewoman from California in wishing Godspeed and good work to the other body so that we could get to that conference and complete the work so ably begun in this body almost 3 months ago with that marvelous vote of 334 to 90 on our own bill on this matter.

Ms. PELOSI. Mr. Speaker, if the subject were not so serious about the pensions of America's families, the hopes and aspirations for their children and their children's education that has been greatly diminished by the collapse of the stock market, I would think that the distinguished majority leader was jesting in the comments that he just made.

Mr. ARMEY. No, no, Mr. Speaker.

Ms. PELOSI. The Senate has acted very responsibly and in a manner that I hope this body will follow suit on in the bill that they have passed. The difference between the House bill and the Senate bill is drastic. That is why I asked that we take up the Senate bill tout suite and send it to the President. I had a couple of other questions, however.

Mr. ARMEY. Mr. Speaker, if the gentlewoman will continue to yield, if, indeed, the subject were not so grave before the American people, we might find this body willing to pick up the work product of another body that had taken 3 months to even see how serious the problem is.

But since this body so quickly perceived the problem, so effectively worked on the problem, we must insist on the opportunity for this body's earlier prompt, timely, and most professionally well done work to be honored in the process.

There is no way that this body could consider its duty to America to take the tardy, less well-understood and generally-feared-to-be-less-effective legislation from the other body, when we have the most perfect opportunity to go to conference and get it right.

Ms. PELOSI. Methinks the gentleman doth protest too much. The fact is that the events that have followed the passage of the bill in this body have demonstrated its weakness so very clearly.

So again, I reiterate my request of the gentleman to take up the Senate bill ASAP so we can send it to the President.

Mr. ARMEY. Mr. Speaker, if the gentlewoman will continue to yield, this body demonstrated on April 24 that there is nothing to be learned from the second kick of a mule. Unfortunately, it took 3 months and several more kicks for the other body to wake up, and there is no way that we will set our good work aside, take up their work, and deny America the opportunity to have a well-conferenced work where the work of this body can be presented in this process.

Ms. PELOSI. Mr. Speaker, I reiterate, methinks the gentleman doth protest too much.

Mr. Speaker, another bill that I am wondering will come up is the bill on the Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence, on which I serve as ranking member. We finished our work a long time ago, and have been hoping to move that very important piece of legislation.

Mr. ROEMER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentlewoman yield?

Ms. PELOSI. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. ROEMER) to pursue that question with the very distinguished majority leader.

Mr. ROEMER. Mr. Speaker, I thank my good friend, the gentlewoman from California, for yielding to me, and am pleased to have the opportunity to engage the distinguished majority leader in a question or two.

It seems to me when the majority leader points the finger at the so-called other body for not doing its work, it comes on the tail of a workweek, so-called workweek, that we have had here of a half an hour on the floor Monday, we were out of session Wednesday by 4:30, yesterday by 1:30, and today at the late hour of 10:29 we have concluded legislative business.

It seems to me that there are a lot of important things for the country and the Congress to engage in. One of them is the business of the Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence. The saberrattling of the al Qaeda is out there saying they are going to attack America again, yet we have had an intelligence bill languishing in the Committee on Rules for 1½ months.

I would be very interested in knowing and inquiring of the majority leader why that intelligence bill is not on the floor and why that platform for supporting some changes and reforms in the intelligence community is not leading the way here at a very, very important time in the Nation's history.

Mr. ARMEY. If the gentlewoman will continue to yield, Mr. Speaker, I do appreciate that the fact of the matter is before we left for our July 4 work recess we did advise the body to prepare to come back for this week just past and spend their time in the committee room, where, indeed, 12 of our committees worked, the last of which finishing at 1:30 in the morning last night on this very important business of homeland security.

We also had the Committee on Appropriations mark up four bills this week. We did in fact have the committee work week that we asked and anticipated for the week. I am sorry the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. ROEMER) missed out on all the fun, but the committee members that worked so late in the evening will tell the gentleman that their work was comprehensive and exhaustively attended to during the course of this week.

The bill under consideration about which you ask has not been filed by the Committee on Rules; therefore, it is not prepared to bring to the floor. The committee chairman has himself been steeped in work on homeland security and I would guess that the gentleman from Florida (Mr. GOSS) will be very anxious to get together with his ranking member and work out any final details they need to in order to file a bill, at which time, obviously, we would move the bill to the floor as quickly as possible and maintain the excellent work record of this body that has indeed done a level of work for the past 2 years that would be commensurate with two legislative sessions in order to keep pace with all that is before us and stay so far ahead of the other body that just does not seem to be able to catch up with the enormous amounts of work we produce.

Mr. ROEMER. I would just engage the majority leader a little bit further on this particular bill in saying that the committee reported this unanimously out of the committee a month and a half ago in a bipartisan fashion after we worked very hard on it. The reason it is not filed, my understanding from staff is because the leadership has not asked that it be filed, that as soon as they ask that it be filed that the bill will come immediately to the floor. Why is the leadership not supportive of the intelligence authorization bill coming to the floor, especially in light of the defense appropriations bill having already gone through this body?

Mr. ARMEY. I thank the gentleman. Let me say to the gentleman as clearly as I can, this leadership has an unqualified respect and admiration for the gentleman from Florida (Mr. GOSS). And when it comes to the business of filing the chairman's bill, this leadership is at the chairman's disposal, with all due respect and admiration for an outstanding Member of this body. And I promise the gentleman from Indiana that as soon as the chairman decides that he would like to file this bill, it will be attended to by the leadership and by the Committee on Rules.

Mr. ROEMER. I would just say to the distinguished majority leader, as a member of the Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence nobody has higher respect for the bipartisan way that the gentleman from Florida (Mr. Goss) handles that committee. We respect him. We work with him, and we look forward to that very important bill coming to the floor, especially before something else happens in this country or abroad and so it does not get so far behind the defense appropriations that has already gone through.

If the distinguished gentleman would further respond to a comment, we had plenty of time this past week to do another bipartisan piece of legislation, which was the reauthorization of the AmeriCorps National Service Bill. Thousands of Americans have lined up to volunteer in this country in light of September 11. The President of the United States has put a high priority on this bill. Yet, again, this is a bill that has not made its way to the House floor.

Would the majority leader care to comment with all the time we have had on the floor this past week, why that priority of the President has not come to the floor?

Mr. ARMEY. I appreciate the gentleman's inquiry. The fact of the matter is we have attended to a great many matters, and when and if that bill is appropriate to be brought to the floor in the judgment of the majority leader, the bill will then be brought to the floor. That time has not yet come.

Ms. PELOSI. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. ROEMER. I thank the majority leader, and I thank the gentlewoman from California. I hope this bipartisan bill will get to the floor. I think it would pass with over 300 votes.

Ms. PELOSI. Mr. Speaker, I would encourage once again the leaders of the majority to bring the Senate bill to the floor expeditiously.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY, JULY 15, 2002

Mr. ARMEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today, it adjourn to meet at 12:30 p.m. on Monday next for morning hour debates.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SIMPSON). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

DISPENSING WITH CALENDAR WEDNESDAY BUSINESS ON WEDNESDAY NEXT

Mr. ARMEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the business in order under the Calendar Wednesday rule be dispensed with on Wednesday next.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will remind Members of both sides to please refrain from improper references to the Senate.

FINDING A CURE FOR ALS

(Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN. Mr. Speaker, upon retiring from baseball due to a debilitating disease known as ALS, Lou Gehrig said, "I consider myself the luckiest man on the face of the Earth . . . I might have had a tough break, but I have an awful lot to live for."

Today this attitude is personified in Matthias Radits, the corporate chef of The Breakers resort, who was diagnosed with ALS last year. With The Breakers' kitchen serving as the classroom, Mr. Radits has established an apprenticeship for high school graduates interested in culinary arts.

ALS is a fatal, neurodegenerative disease that attacks nerve cells of the brain and spinal cord. When cells die, voluntary muscle control and movement ceases, yet a patient's mind remains intact.

The average life expectancy is 2 to 5 years. But with recent advancements, ALS patients are living longer and having more productive lives.

I urge my colleagues to work hard towards additional funding for ALS so that more aggressive and productive research can be done and we can imagine a day when this disease disappears for all of the Matthias Raditses of the world.

RESTORE INVESTOR CONFIDENCE

(Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Speaker, last Saturday in Houston, Texas, my constituents, many of them laid off ex-Enron employees, joined me to announce the need for immediate action for corporate accountability. Large speeches were made this week by the administration joining in that voice, but the only action that will be respectful of the pain that so many have experienced is immediate action.

So I call upon my colleagues to immediately address an outstanding legislative initiative that deals with separating accounting functions from consulting functions offered by the gentleman from New York (Mr. LAFALCE). I believe we can immediately begin to answer the concerns of the American people. We can address the concerns of a WorldCom stock that 3 weeks ago sold for $64 and is now 7 cents.

So to answer the needs and the pain of my constituents, I will file today the Omnibus Corporate Reform and Restoration Act of 2002, an omnibus bill that has sweeping measures to change the face of corporate America. I hope we have heard the voices and the cries of the American people. We must do it now to restore investor confidence.

STRONG LEADERSHIP OF THE PRESIDENT

(Mr. DREIER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DREIER. Mr. Speaker, I rise to congratulate President Bush on the very bold speech that he made on Wall Street the other day demonstrating his outrage over the kind of business that we have seen within a number of corporations. I know many people are talking about these scandals; my colleague from Texas just mentioned it. I think that if we look at the way President Bush has responded, there are a number of issues on which he states his very strong feelings.

There is nothing about which he feels more strongly than the fact in a capitalist system which is one of the greatest aspects of the United States of America, honesty and ethics are a priority and they are to be expected. And that is why I believe that the legislation which we have moved from this House and we hope we will be able to see legislation emerge from the Senate so that we can bring about a bipartisan compromise to deal with accounting reform that will not in any way jeopardize the free market system which is so important to us will succeed. I congratulate President Bush for the very strong leadership he has shown on this issue.

STEEL REVITALIZATION ACT

(Mr. BROWN of Ohio asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, almost every day we hear about another major U.S. corporation sell out its stockholders, lay off workers, destroy pension funds for those workers. Almost every day we see my Republican friends do the bidding of another corporate interest and fail the American public.

I call on this body to pass H.R. 808, the Steel Revitalization Act. In my district, RTI Technologies, a steel producer, has seen, its workers have seen their pension and their health benefits in jeopardy.

This body which every day acts on behalf of corporate interests on behalf of Republican leadership has failed workers in this country, has failed pensioners in this country, has failed to correct health care abuses by corporate America in this country. It is time that this body pass H.R. 808, the Steel Revitalization Act.

ACTING AGAINST CORPORATE ABUSES

(Mr. FOLEY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. FOLEY. Mr. Speaker, I am often admonished for urging the other body to take up action on a bill, and yet I just heard a dialogue between the minority whip and the majority leader on urging us to take up a Senate bill.

I was on the floor yesterday when that bill was under consideration. Ironically, Senator JOHN MCCAIN from Arizona had a very, very important provision in that bill that would have accounted for stock options, which is one of the biggest problems in the accounting of corporate income and expenses. He was blocked by the majority, the Democratic majority, from accepting his amendment that would have brought to light how these stock options are treated.

Now, in fairness, we are willing to consider a bill urgently to clean up corporate abuse, accounting abuse; but they cannot have it both ways. They cannot say it is a perfect bill that has been produced by Senator SARBANES without acknowledging that they failed to address a very important option test, accounting for options, which has been the fundamental root of the problems. WorldCom, Enron, all of these options that were allowed by the corporations had faulty accounting techniques applied.

So I commend Senator MCCAIN for introducing that, and I urge those on the other side to consider it as well.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would remind the Member to refrain from improper references to the Senate.

UNNECESSARY DEPARTMENT OF HOMELAND SECURITY

(Mr. DUNCAN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DUNCAN. Mr. Speaker, I realize that almost everyone in the Congress is going to vote to create the new Department of Homeland Security, but I am afraid all this new Department is going to do is make the government bigger, more bureaucratic and more expensive and the country will not be any safer.

In yesterday's "Congress Daily," we read that the Congressional Budget Office has estimated it will cost $43 billion just to implement the new Department.

The New York Times on June 23 had a column which said the proposed Department contains "elements so big that even a fee-hungry Wall Street investment banker might have hesitated to propose it."

William Schneider, in the "National Journal," said it will "simply add another layer of bureaucracy. Will adding another layer of government at the top make a great deal of difference? Not if the problem is at the bottom."

Tony Blankley, in Wednesday's Washington Times said, "Congress should slow down, be more deliberative . . . Perhaps some bill can be cobbled together at such breakneck speed, but not the bill that this country needs."

Mr. Speaker, we should not have to create a new cabinet-level Department just to get Federal agencies to cooperate with each other.

SPECIAL ORDERS

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. KIRK). Under the Speaker's announced policy of January 3, 2001, and under a previous order of the House, the following Members will be recognized for 5 minutes each.

MEDICAL MALPRACTICE INSURANCE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Florida (Mr. FOLEY) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. FOLEY. Mr. Speaker, we spend a lot of time in Congress talking about health care, and reasonably so, we should. Health care is probably the one thing none of us as citizens can totally control on our own. We can exercise, diet. We can work out. We can do all the right things, but we may be stricken at sometime in our life with Lupus, leukemia, Alzheimer's, AIDS, cancer, any number of maladies that face us. It is important to talk about these subjects because it is important for Congress to grapple with these issues.

□ 1045

There is also a looming issue that needs to be discussed, vetted and a solution found for, and that is medical malpractice insurance rates. Florida particularly has been inundated with liability crises and looming coverage where we may see our physicians unable to afford any coverage at all, and if they can find it, the cost prohibitive for them to continue to practice their vital roles that they play in society.

Malpractice rates have been rising 20 to 40 percent per year, 20 to 40 percent per year, while inflation has remained virtually stagnant. The hardest-hit doctors in Florida are over 50,000 obstetricians, radiologists, orthopedic surgeons, lung specialists, oncologists, among the list of people.

Average damage awards, which is part of the root problem, ordered by courts have doubled over the past 3 years, meaning jury awards for courts have increased damage awards substantially and significantly. Hospitals, one insurer increased a local hospital rate to $1.5 million this year from $500,000 a year ago. That is a tripling of premium, which any person can routinely understand that if we add an expense like that to a category, it has to come out of somewhere; and ultimately we pay more for health care, pay more for all the services provided for indigents and others in our community.

Some doctors are paying up to 80 percent of their annual income in premiums. Many people snicker and say physicians make a lot of money. I beg to differ. Some do, but most have been working tirelessly to provide the important roles they do for society and are often compromised because they are not only having to pay extraordinary liability insurance, but with all the regulations and all the attendant things that they are expected to do, including continuing medical education and the like, they are consequently under the great glare of looming bankruptcy or finding themselves wanting to leave the practice of medicine that they have loved doing for all their life.

We need to do something about this issue. It needs to revolve around getting the parties together, and this is not a shot at the trial lawyers, but they have to be intimately involved in some of these discussions where there would be another system like a loser pay something where at least the onus is on those bringing charges, to be certain they have valuable and vital suits to bring to the courts. Oftentimes litigation ends with a letter to the plaintiff defendant, ultimately trying to shake down a few dollars, and hopefully the insurance company will settle because they will tell us it is more expensive to go to court than to settle out of court; and consequently, doctors are hemorrhaging incomes because of these consequences.

I do not stand aside or take any notion that we should excuse wrongful and wilful malpractice. Somebody cuts off the wrong limb, absolutely the person who has been aggrieved demands full compensation for damages rendered. That is not what we are talking about. We are talking about a system that has run amuck; that does not recognize dangerous procedures that were done to people, devastating their lives and frivolous lawsuits.

This Congress nationally, as well as legislators in 50 States, needs to grapple with this issue because I can tell my colleagues today that if this does not get resolved soon, we will have a mass exodus of professionals leaving health care, a mass exodus because they can simply no longer afford the premiums that this malpractice insurance costs. It is affecting hospitals. It is affecting nursing homes. It is affecting practitioners. It is affecting every American, because as these rates rise, they must be passed on to others, and that is the patient. The patient pays more; health insurance becomes less available. Cost of treatment and facilities increases; cost of health care premiums skyrocket. Costs to the consumers in every product, good or service produced, sold or distributed in this country is exponentially increased because of the underlying costs of these looming crises.

So we can stand here and do nothing, afraid to tackle a tough issue; or we should include it in at least the act of debate.

CORPORATE GREED

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. BROWN) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, on Tuesday of this week President Bush gave a major speech on his administration's plans to curb executive greed and corporate misgovernance in America. Why, one should ask, was the President's speech so poorly received? Why did the market drop several hundred points in the 3 days since the President gave his speech, including a couple of hundred points actually the same day that he delivered the speech on Wall Street? Why did so many Wall Street workers who attended the speech ask afterwards how much of this speech was just politics and how much of it is about real change?

Despite the President's calls for corporate America to clean up its act, President Bush, at the behest of his corporate sponsors, continues to oppose real reform on Capitol Hill. He has refused to support meaningful pension and accounting reforms, even though a bipartisan bill just passed the other House. He will not support other legislation to halt offshore tax avoidance. His budget severely underfunds the SEC; and to make matters worse, the President has pushed to turn Medicare over to the health insurance industry, which brought us HMOs and has brought us disaster in many, particularly rural, communities around the country.

Why is all this happening? Why would all this be? It is pretty simple.

The President and Republican leadership have invited corporate interests into the inner sanctum of government to help them run this country. Insurance companies write the legislation that Republicans and the President try to get through this Congress to privatize the Medicare system.

The chemical industry has written legislation that the Republican President and the Republican leaders in Congress have tried to push through on environmental policies. The oil industry has written legislation for the President and written legislation that the President and Republican leadership have tried to push through on energy policy. At Wall Street, bankers have written the legislation on behalf of Republican leadership and the President to privatize Social Security, but worst of all is what Republican leaders in the House have pushed through on behalf of the prescription drug industry.

Let me relate a story of an event. About 3 weeks ago, as the senior Democrat on the Subcommittee on Health, I have worked extensively with my colleagues on legislation to provide a Medicare prescription drug benefit and do something about the outrageous prices that the drug industry, the most profitable industry in America, with the lowest tax rate in America, has inflicted upon the public.

During the markup of the Republican plan, because they are in the majority in committee, at five o'clock in the afternoon, while we still had 15 to 20 hours of work to do, as it turned out, Republican leaders adjourned the committee so the Republican Members could go off to join President Bush and Vice President CHENEY at a big fundraiser underwritten by the drug industry to the tune of at least $2 million, maybe $3 million, and sponsored by the drug industry and chaired by the CEO of a British drug company who, he and his firm, contributed $250,000 to the Republicans. Other drug companies, the drug industry trade association and others contributed hundreds of thousands of additional dollars.

When we returned the next day to our committee to continue the work on the prescription drug bill, on every single major amendment consumers and seniors lost, and the drug industry won issue after issue after issue. Amendments such as saying that Medicare beneficiaries should have a prescription drug plan as good as a Member of Congress, voted down on a party-line vote, Republicans opposing because the drug industry wanted them to.

On issues such as dealing with bringing the price down, perhaps Medicare, the 40 million Medicare beneficiaries, the government could negotiate prices on behalf of all of them and bring the price down like they do in Canada. Republican party-line voted no because the prescription drug industry wanted it that way.

Issue after issue after issue, the Republicans sided with the prescription drug industry against reform, against seniors, against American consumers.

This government, the Republican leadership in this House of Representatives is too close to corporate America. It is too close to the oil industry when writing energy policy. It is too close to the chemical industry when writing chemical policy. It is too close to the drug industry when writing Medicare prescription drug policy. It is too close to the insurance industry when they try to privatize Medicare, and it is too close to Wall Street when they try to privatize the Social Security system.

Mr. Speaker, the Democratic plan does something about Medicare by providing a benefit and doing something about the outrageous pricing.

THE NATIONAL DEBT

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Mississippi (Mr. TAYLOR) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. TAYLOR of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I know I am not supposed to address folks up there in the balcony, but they have got to find it a little strange that it is about 10:30 here in Washington and Congress is not here. In fact, in the whole of this week, Speaker HASTERT scheduled 13 votes, flew 435 Members of Congress back from across the country, majority of them coming from California where there are 52 Congressmen, for 13 votes. Today is the 1,281 day that he has been Speaker, and for not one of those days has he found the time to schedule a vote on what I think is the most important thing facing those young people in the balcony, those young people, my kids, everybody else's kids in America, and that is the national debt.

At least one of those people up there is 23 years old like my daughter Sarah; and if a person is 23 years old, on the day they were born, our Nation was less than $1 trillion in debt. It means they have gone all the way from when George Washington became the President until just before Ronald Reagan assumed office, through the Civil War, let us walk through it, the Revolutionary War, the War of 1812, Mexican-American War, the Civil War, Spanish American War, World War I, World War II, Korea, Vietnam, all the things that have happened along the way, the building of the interstate highway system, the building of the great barge canals in our country, all the great things that have been done for our Nation, the Nation borrowed less than $1 trillion. In the past 23 years, the Nation has borrowed over $5 trillion.

Just 2 weeks ago in a straight party-line vote, every single Republican voted to raise the debt limit by an additional $400 billion. When folks stop me at the K-Mart or the Wal-Mart or the local hardware store, they say where does the money go, where does all that money go? They are absolutely dumbfounded when I tell them the biggest expense of their Nation is not defense, not health care, not taking care of our veterans. It is paying interest on this enormous national debt.

Our Speaker in the 1,281 days that he has been Speaker has not even allowed us a vote on a simple constitutional amendment that says Congress cannot spend more than it collects in taxes. About half the States have that requirement. That is why most of the States have very low indebtedness. That is why they squander very little of our money on interest on the debt.

President Bush introduced the very first $2 trillion budget this year. He increased spending by about 8 percent over last year because of his tax breaks. Revenues are down 16 percent; and the net result of that is in the past 12 months, the national debt has increased by $399,653,925,113.31.

Why is that so horrible? How many of us as parents would go out and buy a car, go down to the car lot and buy the most expensive car on the lot and say I do not care what it costs, I do not care what kind of frills are put on it, and by the way, send the bill to my 6-year-old son when he turns 30, plus interest? How many would dream of going to the local Realtor and saying I want the most expensive house in this country, and I do not care what it costs and bill my 7-year-old grandson?

That is precisely what our Nation has been doing, and yet the Speaker will not give us in the 1,200-plus days that he has been Speaker even one vote on a balanced budget amendment.

It came up in the House about 6 years ago. It passed. We got the two-thirds votes necessary. It went to the other body. It failed by only one vote. So instead of forcing the other body to vote on this again and again and again until we do the right thing for the American people, our Speaker has chosen to run up the debt.

Mr. Speaker, since you have become Speaker, our Nation has increased the national debt by $511,040,208,939. That is more debt than was incurred in this country from the day George Washington became President to halfway through World War II, on your watch. You are the man. You schedule the floor debate. You decide what we vote on and when we vote on it and you keep deciding we cannot have a vote on a balanced budget amendment.

Mr. Speaker, my name is GENE TAYLOR. I represent the citizens of South Mississippi. For every day of the rest of this session, I am going to come to this House floor and tell the American people the truth, that you will not give us a vote on a balanced budget amendment and that you are the guy who is responsible for this debt, and I am personally going to make them aware of it, and I am going to let them decide in November if you have managed this House very well.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will remind Members to refrain from references to occupants of the gallery.

REVISIONS TO THE 302(a) ALLOCATIONS AND BUDGETARY AGGREGATES ESTABLISHED BY THE CONCURRENT RESOLUTIONS ON THE BUDGET FOR FISCAL YEARS 2002 AND 2003

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Iowa (Mr. NUSSLE) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. NUSSLE. Mr. Speaker, Pursuant to Section 314 of the Congressional Budget Act, Section 221 of H. Con. Res. 83, and Section 231 of H. Con. Res. 353, I submit for printing in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD revisions to the 302(a) allocations and budgetary aggregates established by the Concurrent Resolutions on the Budget for Fiscal Years 2002 and 2003.

As reported to the House, H.R. 5093, the Interior and Related Agencies Appropriations bill, includes emergency-designated appropriations for wildland firefighting. Those appropriations total $700,000,000 in new budget authority for fiscal year 2002. There are no outlays from those appropriations in fiscal year 2002. Outlays flowing from fiscal year 2002 emergency appropriations increase the 302(a) allocation for fiscal year 2003 outlays. Under the procedures set forth in section 314 of the Budget Act, adjustments may be made for emergency-designated budget authority through fiscal year 2002 and for the outlays flowing from such budget authority in all fiscal years. Outlays from those appropriations total $400,000,000 in fiscal year 2003.

After making the required adjustments, the 302(a) allocation for fiscal year 2002 for the House Committee on Appropriations becomes $736,127,000,000 in new budget authority and $736,420,000,000 in outlays. The 302(a) allocation for fiscal year 2003 for the House Committee on Appropriations becomes $748,096,000,000 in new budget authority and $785,590,000,000 in outlays. The budgetary aggregates for fiscal year 2002 become $1,709,299,000,000 in new budget authority and $1,653,073,000,000 in outlays. The budgetary aggregates for fiscal year 2003 become $1,784,073,000,000 in new budget authority and $1,767,547,000,000 in outlays.

IN OPPOSITION TO INCLUDING TURKEY IN THE QUALIFIED INDUSTRIAL ZONE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. PALLONE) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. PALLONE. Mr. Speaker, I come to the House floor today to express my strong opposition to H.R. 5002, a bill to include Turkey in the Qualified Industrial Zone, allowing duty-free goods from Turkey to enter U.S. markets. This bill is not only an inappropriate and fiscally irresponsible back-door approach to establishing a free trade agreement with Turkey, but also rewards a country that has been illegally blockading Armenia, also a U.S. ally in the war against terror, for the past 9 years. This bill would send the wrong message to countries that are seeking access to our trade markets. It sends the presumably unintended message that violating the Humanitarian Trade Corridor Act will not be punished but instead rewarded for conducting internationally recognized illegal activity.

Since 1993, Armenia has suffered from the coordinated, dual blockades by its neighbors to the west and east. Turkey and Azerbaijan have largely choked off the transportation of goods from Armenia, eliminating a major east-west shipping route in the Caucasus and contributing to the destabilization of the regime.

These illegal blockades are in direct violation of the Humanitarian Corridors Act, passed by both the House and the Senate in 1995. The act states that, and I quote, "recipients of U.S. assistance should not hinder or delay the transport or delivery of United States humanitarian assistance to other countries." Unfortunately there is also language in this bill that gives the President the authority to waive sanctions if the country that is guilty of prohibiting U.S. assistance to reaching a third country is deemed vital to the United States' national security. Turkey has flagrantly disregarded international trade norms because of this waiver that effectively gives them a free pass to act without fear of consequences. This proposed bill represents seriously flawed trade policy and sends the message that some countries do not have to honor international norms in U.S. law as long as such countries fill a national security need. This bill would not only reflect poorly on the United States' moral authority in trade policy, Mr. Speaker, but also represents dangerous fiscal policy; in effect subsidizing a politically unstable and economically irresponsible regime.

Last week 34 members of Prime Minister Ecevit's ruling party resigned in protest of the Prime Minister's refusal to step down as ruler of Turkey. Just yesterday two of the highest-level ministers resigned, economic Minister Kemal Dervis and Foreign Minister Ismail Cem, triggering calls within Turkey for new elections as early as September. Minister Dervis is widely recognized as the architect of the colossal International Monetary Fund bailouts of Turkey, which saved Turkey from immediate financial disaster but has put Turkey in debt to the IMF for a staggering $31 billion.

The $9 billion that were made available for release this year have not made any impact on the rapidly shrinking economy and massive unemployment in Turkey. We should not reward Turkey and put our own economy in further jeopardy without radical reform of Turkey's economic and trade policy. Mr. Speaker, the U.S. and international community may pour as much money into Turkey directly through fiscally careless legislation or indirectly through massive unprecedented IMF loans, but there will be minimal net benefits to the citizens of Turkey, and there are fundamental changes that are necessary.

Mr. Speaker, it is time to stop making special concessions for Turkey. Their blatant disregard for international norms, whether it is trade policy or their abysmal human and minority rights records, no longer can be ignored. I do not dispute that Turkey has been one of our closest allies in the war on terrorism, but that fact alone should not give them carte blanche to operate outside the boundaries of the American and European ideals that Turkish officials profess to honor.

CORPORATE CRIME

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from California (Mr. SHERMAN) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, this has been a week of disappointment. In the effort to combat corporate crime, we heard from the President something that was more of a pep talk than a policy pronouncement. He called upon us to reenact all the laws and regulations we already have and to say this time we really mean it.

Let us face it. The biggest reason for crime is that under certain circumstances crime pays, and the biggest reason why circumstances arise in which people conclude that crime pays is inadequate law enforcement. That is true with grand theft auto. It is true with corporate grand theft. And unfortunately the other party for the last 6 years has been working to undermine the enforcement at the SEC. As David Ruder, a former Republican head of the SEC, said in 1995, the Republican Congress is dealing with the SEC as though it were the enemy instead of the policeman on the beat.

Earlier this year, the President put forward a budget to this Congress which cut the SEC budget in real terms, allowed no increase for inflation, and cut the enforcement budget. This spring, I proposed to the Committee on Financial Services an increase in the authorization of the SEC of $120 million to focus enforcement on the financial statements filed by the thousand largest companies in America. Every Republican on our committee voted no, every Democrat voted yes, the amendment went down.

It is time for us, if we are serious about dealing with securities crime, to fund the SEC. But it is time for us to do more as well. The bill passed by the Senate, the other body, is a good first step, but I hope in conference, or perhaps in a second bill, that we go beyond that.

There are a whole host of ideas that we ought to include. We ought to explore the idea of having our thousand largest companies audited every 6 months instead of every year. We have been auditing every 12 months since the 1933 act. Certainly the speed by which decisions are made, the speed at which stocks are bought and sold, is far more than twice as fast as it was in 1933. And if WorldCom is going to try to misstate its income for five quarters, it is better that they are caught after two quarters than after four quarters, assuming the audit is competent. And I will get to that in a second.

In addition, the Federal Government ought to certify some stock analysts as being genuinely independent. And to be independent, under this standard, it is not enough that the particular analyst does not get direct cash from the issuer, but rather that the employer of the analyst do no underwriting, consulting or in any other way receive money from the very companies that are being analyzed.

Now, some may accept a lower standard, and they are welcome to, but to be certified as independent, I would expect an analyst to be loyal to his or her employer. And, therefore, it would be good to have analysts who are employed by those who are not getting money from the very companies that are being analyzed.

Mr. Speaker, the Chair of the Committee on Energy and Commerce, the gentleman from Louisiana (Mr. TAUZIN), was on the morning shows this past Sunday indicating that Arthur Andersen had a peculiar problem that has led to a great overrepresentation of Arthur Andersen among the problem audits. He indicated that the structure of that firm was such so that the engagement partner, the salesman partner, had total power, and the technical review partners were not necessarily even consulted before the audit was concluded.

I had put forward to our committee back in April a requirement that accounting firms dealing with publicly traded companies avoid that Arthur Andersen structure and use a structure that almost all of them have always used, and that is that the technical review partners who are insulated from the client make the final determination. Unfortunately, even while the Republican Chair of the Committee on Energy and Commerce is saying this is the problem, the Republicans on our committee are voting against a solution.

It is time that we go beyond rhetoric and adopt legislation. We have a long way to go in restoring confidence to our capital markets.

H.R. 5110, OMNIBUS CORPORATE REFORM AND RESTORATION ACT OF 2002

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. KIRK). Under a previous order of the House, the gentlewoman from Texas (Ms. JACKSON-LEE) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I believe that there are a number of issues that deserve the attention of this body, and I asked to address this House at this time because I have completed the assignment that was given to me, or the initial part of the assignment given to me by the pain of my constituents. Just a few moments ago I announced that I would file, and now I have filed, the Omnibus Corporate Reform and Restoration Act of 2002, H.R. 5110, an omnibus bill that lays clearly on this Congress an opportunity to make sweeping corporate changes now.

I said before that there is no pride of authorship. There should not be. We should work together on behalf of the American people. And if by chance this bill gets dissected and pieces of it pass, it may not be the whole but it will be the part. Right now, this bill encompasses a number of provisions that, if passed, could immediately address some of the concerns that we have.

We will never get to the point of restoring investor confidence until we stabilize and allow the American people to have a sense that we are inside the board room peering in to oversee the proper activity of those who govern the corporations of America. We will never restore confidence until we again see corporate executives as leaders of United Way and Civic Citizens, that many of us have come to know and appreciate. We will never restore corporate confidence and investor confidence until we determine that those who have been broken and lost such large amounts of money, like the grandmother in my constituency that lost $150,000 as a new investor. That is a lot for someone who is just exposing themselves to the market.

This bill will, in fact, do something historic and different. It will make for the first time unemployed employees, fired employees, whose company files bankruptcy, secured creditors. What does that mean? Just a few days before Enron filed bankruptcy, they gave $105 million in retention bonuses to corporate executives. On Sunday, they filed for bankruptcy. On Monday, they laid off 5,000 of my constituents, many of them without severance pay, who lost their pensions and 401(k)s. For the last 6 months, we fought with the bankruptcy court because they were not secured creditors. They had no status in the bankruptcy proceedings. This bill will give them secured creditor status. They will be inside the courtroom to be able to fight for their benefits.

This bill provides for criminal penalties for altering or destroying documents. We know what happens with that. All of us panic sometimes. Everyone wishes they had not made the wrong decision, tearing up a piece of paper to cover up. Coverup is worse than a crime. So we need to make sure they do not run to their office by mistake or otherwise and tear up documents.

The bill provides for prohibition on loans to officers and directors. I frankly think we might be able to regulate it, but clearly we can see from WorldCom what can be done in crumbling one's own company. This will help in curtailing large loans by boards of directors to company executives; it will stop creating offshore companies and inside special companies that the board does not even know anything about and that is used to puff up the bottom line.

Also to protect the pensions of employees, and many others. I believe that the Committee on the Judiciary, of which I am a member, should hold hearings on whether or not enhanced criminal penalties or criminal initiatives need to be passed.

I move now to share with Members, we had a surplus. In fact, in March 2001, we had a $5.6 trillion surplus with a decreasing debt. Because of the large tax cut that went nowhere and no one can remember, we now have no surplus. Yet we have the responsibility to our senior citizens because many of them are not able to pay rent or to get good food because they have an enormous prescription drug cost. We need a guaranteed prescription drug benefit. Where is our heart in America? Where is our reason and our respect for the Greatest Generation?

I would like this to be bipartisan, but we need it to work; and the Republican plan is a voluntary card that insurance companies have. And if they do not make the money in their area, as they did not in my area, then they will close up shop. There is a period when they stop paying for the prescription drugs.

Mr. Speaker, there is a lot left to be done. Let me conclude by saying we are working on the homeland security department, and I am for it. But as we create this Department, we cannot forget our civil liberties and due process. We must have those as we move this Department forward.

Mr. Speaker, this is work undone. We must get to work in this Congress.

REINSTATE CALIFORNIA'S MEDICAID UPPER PAYMENT LIMIT

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. KIRK). Under the Speaker's announced policy of January 3, 2001, the gentleman from California (Mr. DREIER) is recognized for 60 minutes as the designee of the majority leader.

Mr. DREIER. Mr. Speaker, I know that we have been talking about a wide range of issues today, corporate responsibility, establishing the Department of Homeland Security, and many other challenges that we are facing; economic recovery, of course, being very important. But I would like to take a few minutes to share with our colleagues some prepared remarks that I have on a very unique challenge that we as Californians face when it comes to dealing with the issue of health care.

As I said, California's public health care system is one of the most unique in our country. Unlike most States which run their own hospitals or States which have no public hospitals at all, California relies on a network of county-supported public hospitals working in conjunction with a network of private safety net hospitals. Together these public and private hospitals care for over 5 million Californians eligible for Medicaid and an additional 7 million Californians who are uninsured.

Obviously, supporting this network of health care for low-income Americans requires a reliable source of funding. California, like a number of other States, relies heavily on Federal dollars paid through what is known as Medicaid's Upper Payment Limit Program. The safety net hospitals in my County of Los Angeles receive over $120 million each year through the Upper Payment Limit Program. UPL was initiated a decade ago based on the recognition that public hospitals are the hospitals of last resort for most needy patients.

It is a mechanism that allows qualified public hospitals to receive reimbursement for services at 150 percent of the Medicare allowable payment rate. Only city and county public hospitals which provide trauma and emergency room services to a large number of uninsured and low-income patients are eligible for the program. The reason for the increased payments is very simple, there is no market incentive for hospitals to offer emergency services to patients who will never have the means to pay for expensive procedures.

So it was with great dismay this past January when I learned that the Center for Medicare and Medicaid Services had instituted a rule to actually lower the upper payment limit and reduce Medicaid reimbursements for city and county public hospitals to 100 percent of the Medicare allowable payment rate.

Mr. Speaker, implementation of this rule will have immediate and devastating consequences for the public health system in my State. By the time final implementation of this new policy is complete, California will lose over $300 million in Medicaid funding each year, an amount that cannot be replaced by any State or local source. The stated explanation for reducing UPL is that certain States were misallocating UPL payments and using them for non-Medicaid-related expenditures, and we all understand that concern; and we want to make sure that those States are in fact getting back on track.

While several States were identified as misusing these Federal Medicaid dollars, it is very important to note that California was not among them. In fact, a number of States did misuse UPL dollars; California was not one of those States. In fact, we never spent any Federal Medicaid dollars on anything other than public health care.

In its haste to close the so-called upper payment limit loophole, CMS has issued this regulation with too broad a stroke. This lowered upper payment limit punishes not only the States that were abusing Federal funds, and they should be punished, but it has hurt States like California which were operating properly.

This program for 10 years, under both Democrats and Republicans, has been implemented and strongly supported. Moreover, this regulation ignores the will of this Congress in regards to the upper payment limit for public hospitals. When the allegations of misused UPL funds came to light several years ago, this body responded by severely limiting these supplemental payments and by fixing the upper payment limit at the 150 percent level.

As I said, the House and Senate reached a bipartisan agreement that was codified when the Medicare and Medicaid Beneficiaries and Improvement Act was signed into law in the 106th Congress. By lowering the Medicaid upper payment limit to 100 percent, CMS is undoing a carefully crafted compromise that balanced the Federal Treasury with the need to ensure that health care remain available to the most vulnerable of our fellow citizens.

Mr. Speaker, as I stand here today, there may be skeptics out there who say that when compared to the overall Medicaid budget for the State of California, the $300 million received under the 150 percent UPL is nothing more than a drop in the bucket. Well, to that let me say that the financial situation in California, and indeed in many of our State and local governments across this country, is so constrained that not one Federal dollar can be cut from the Federal Medicaid allocation without it adversely affecting the availability of care for Medicaid patients.

Just recently, Los Angeles County revealed that it plans to close nearly a dozen community health clinics and lay off over 5,000 health care workers because of a lack of budgetary resources. What alarms me the most is that the county's budget does not include the tidal wave of Federal Medicaid cuts that are scheduled to go into effect next year, including the reduction in the upper payment limit.

The fact is, if the UPL reduction is implemented by CMS, health care for low-income and uninsured patients will be compromised as a result. If the counties across California are forced to reduce hospital services because of decreased Federal support, those patients faced with long waits at the few remaining open public hospitals will turn to private hospitals for emergency care. While Federal law prohibits private hospitals from refusing to treat uninsured emergency care patients, it does not prohibit them from closing their emergency room doors.

Faced with overflowing emergency rooms and inadequate Medicaid reimbursements, this is the choice that many private hospitals would be forced to make. Therefore, a decreased upper payment limit would force both public and private hospitals in California to curtail emergency and trauma care services resulting in an absurd situation where a constituent of mine from Claremont, California, could conceivably be forced to drive over 30 miles in rush hour traffic to the Los Angeles USC Medical Center to find an open trauma center. The prospect of such an occurrence is simply unacceptable.

Mr. Speaker, I wanted to make clear that, in stating my opposition to the reduction of the UPL, I am not asking for special treatment for California. I am simply asking for fair treatment of California.

Under its federally approved Medicaid UPL, California follows some of the most stringent requirements for UPL eligibility. To access those funds in California, more than 25 percent of a hospital's patients have to be Medicaid-eligible or uninsured. I reiterate that California has exclusively spent the money that it has received under the UPL program on health care, not on anything else. To punish California for the misdeeds of other States is unwise and unfair.

We are all aware of the fact that California provides more tax dollars to the Federal Treasury than it receives in Federal support. Our State is third to the last in Federal Medicaid spending on a per capita basis. We can afford to fall no further. The public health system in California is at a critical juncture, and we must act now to prevent a crisis that will affect tens of millions of California taxpayers.

Yet I am very cognizant of the fact that our Nation is currently at war, and because of that we face significant budgetary limitation this fiscal year and we will face challenges next year as well. I do not believe, however, that we should reduce health care services for our most disadvantaged people in our efforts to reduce costs. Such action will undoubtedly cause more instability and expense in the long run than any benefit that would be provided in the short term.

Because implementation of the reduction of the upper payment limit is not scheduled to take place for California until fiscal year 2004, we have a unique opportunity to address these concerns without impacting the budget of this Congress, but we must take action this year. We must further the bipartisan compromise that was put together in the 106th Congress, and I am underscoring the importance of that.

Mr. Speaker, I am here today to ask for the support of Members on both sides of the aisle to find a common-sense solution to this impending crisis and to protect California's public health system from financial attack. The people of California deserve no less. We obviously want to do everything that we possibly can to ensure that there is not a continued reliance on emergency services, and we are working on a broad range of reforms in the area of health care, including the delivery of prescription drugs to seniors and other reforms which we believe are very important. But in the meantime, until we bring about those reforms, we cannot leave those who are the most disadvantaged among us hurting.

Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleagues on both sides of the aisle from California who have joined in working hard to deal with this Medicaid upper payment limit issue. We remain strongly united as a California delegation to preserve the health care system in our State and for the country.

TROPICAL STORMS HIT GUAM

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Guam (Mr. UNDERWOOD) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I come to the floor having been absent all week from the deliberations of the House due to two storms which hit my home island of Guam. The first typhoon, the eye of the storm, passed over Guam on July 5, 2002, Chamorro Standard Time, with sustained winds of over 110 miles an hour.

□ 1130

Subsequently, Typhoon Ha Long was supposed to hit Guam on July 11, but, fortunately, it just veered a little bit to the south of the island. These storms, which frequent my part of the world quite often, of course, have caused a great deal of damage and a great deal of interruption of public services, and obviously I was not able to come back to the House this week as originally planned.

I have just gotten off the phone with Mr. Joe Allbaugh of the Federal Emergency Management Agency, FEMA, and they have assured me that FEMA is on the ground in Guam. In fact, they have chartered a plane with some 300 people to come out to Guam to try to provide all of the services that are necessary, including individual services for those who were directly affected by the typhoon.

Historically, Guam has suffered a major typhoon nearly every decade. There are some 60 to 70 storms which this part of the world generates every year, tropical storms, and sometimes they reach the level of typhoons. Typhoon Chata'an is the first major storm to hit us since Typhoon Paka directly hit Guam also in 1997.

There are a number of issues that always pertain to typhoon recovery, including power and water situations, and, of course, the vast majority of Guam is still without power. Those areas which have been powered up are the hospital, the two hospitals, the Guam Memorial Hospital and Naval Hospital, and the water system is basically inoperable at this time, so that those areas that are getting water are required to boil water if they want to use it for consumption, as opposed to just bathing or taking care of the bathroom facilities. This situation is likely to continue on for at least 2 to 3 more weeks.

It is important that as we try to learn the lessons of typhoon recovery, which are indeed painful lessons and lessons which I hope many of the Members of this body and the people they represent never have to undergo, they really have a capacity to strain human relations, have the capacity to generate feelings about maybe people are not pulling their share of the load.

But I am happy to report that the people of Guam in general are in great spirits. The people of Guam understand, as they have so often in the past, that at a time of a typhoon, the time of typhoon recovery is a time to pull together, a time to act together and a time to rebuild together, and the people of Guam will rebuild their island, will rebuild the utilities and the services which most other Americans take for granted on a day-to-day basis.

Chata'an, which is in Chamorro, means rainy day, means having a bad day, but indeed it was a bad day. Chata'an also had affected the Island of Chuuk in the Federated States of Micronesia, which is the area where the storms generate. At that time it was still under 75 miles per hour so it was only called a tropical storm, but it caused a number of landslides there and killed over 40 people. So Chuuk in the Federated States of Micronesia has also suffered greatly, perhaps not as much in damage as the people of Guam have, but certainly more in the sense of human loss and the effect on families.

Both the Federated States of Micronesia, which is an independent nation in free association with the United States, as well as the Territory of Guam, will be fully eligible for FEMA. I thank Mr. Allbaugh's recognition of this in our phone call just a few minutes ago, indicating that he will make sure that Guam is treated fairly and that it will receive all the services it needs, just like any other American community, and that as a result of the special relationship with the Federated States of Micronesia, also the FSM will be afforded the same treatment.

Typhoon Ha Long, which was supposed to pass directly over Guam 2 days ago, fortunately passed about 50 miles south of Guam. The people of Guam today are, in the main, without power, are without water, and they continue to deal with their conditions in the spirit that has always sustained them for centuries, and that is understanding we are always at the mercy of natural events, but that it is our own spirit, our own intelligence and our own capacity to work together, to collaborate together, which will see us through.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to:

Mr. BECERRA (at the request of Mr. GEPHARDT) for today on account of personal reasons.

Mrs. EMERSON (at the request of Mr. ARMEY) for today on account of personal reasons.

SPECIAL ORDERS GRANTED

By unanimous consent, permission to address the House, following the legislative program and any special orders heretofore entered, was granted to:

The following Members (at the request of Mr. SHERMAN) to revise and extend their remarks and include extraneous material:

Mr. FILNER, for 5 minutes, today.

Mr. DEFAZIO, for 5 minutes, today.

Ms. NORTON, for 5 minutes, today.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio, for 5 minutes, today.

Mr. TAYLOR of Mississippi, for 5 minutes, today.

Mr. PALLONE, for 5 minutes, today.

Mr. SHERMAN, for 5 minutes, today.

Mr. UNDERWOOD, for 5 minutes, today.

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas, for 5 minutes, today.

The following Members (at the request of Mr. FOLEY) to revise and extend their remarks and include extraneous material:

Mr. JONES of North Carolina, for 5 minutes, July 15.

Mr. FOLEY, for 5 minutes, today.

Mr. NUSSLE, for 5 minutes, today.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 11 o'clock and 36 minutes a.m.), under its previous order, the House adjourned until Monday, July 15, 2002, at 12:30 p.m., for morning hour debates.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 8 of rule XII, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

7874. A letter from the Acting Director, OSHA Directorate of Safety Standards, Department of Labor, transmitting the Department's "Major" final rule — Occupational Injury and Illness Recording and Reporting Requirements [Docket No. R-02A] (RIN: 1218-AC06) received July 2, 2002, pursuant to 5 U.S.C. 801(a)(1)(A); to the Committee on Education and the Workforce.

7875. A letter from the Director, Defense Security Cooperation Agency, transmitting the Department of Defense's proposed lease of defense articles to the Government of Malaysia (Transmittal No. 08-02), pursuant to 22 U.S.C. 2796a(a); to the Committee on International Relations.

7876. A letter from the Director, Defense Security Cooperation Agency, transmitting the Department of Defense's proposed lease of defense articles to the Government of India (Transmittal No. 10-02), pursuant to 22 U.S.C. 2796a(a); to the Committee on International Relations.

7877. A letter from the Director, Defense Security Cooperation Agency, transmitting the Department of Defense's proposed lease of defense articles to the Government of the Philippines (Transmittal No. 07-02), pursuant to 22 U.S.C. 2796a(a); to the Committee on International Relations.

7878. A letter from the Director, Defense Security Cooperation Agency, transmitting the Department of Defense's proposed lease of defense articles to the Government of Singapore (Transmittal No. 09-02), pursuant to 22 U.S.C. 2796a(a); to the Committee on International Relations.

7879. A letter from the Director, Defense Security Cooperation Agency, transmitting the Department of Defense's proposed lease of defense articles to the Government of the Thailand (Transmittal No. 11-02), pursuant to 22 U.S.C. 2796a(a); to the Committee on International Relations.

7880. A letter from the Director, International Cooperation, Department of Defense, transmitting copy of Transmittal No. 14-02 which informs of the intent to sign Amendment Number 1 to the Joint Strike Fighter Engineering and Manufacturing Development (EMD) Phase Framework Memorandum of Understanding (MOU) and the Supplement for Italy Participation under the JSF EMD Framework between the United States, Italy and the United Kingdom, pursuant to 22 U.S.C. 2767(f); to the Committee on International Relations.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

HONORING DEZIE WOODS-JONES

HON. BARBARA LEE

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 11, 2002

Ms. LEE. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor Dezie Woods-Jones for her lifetime of distinguished public service. She has been a tireless community activist, civic and educational leader for more than 40 years.

Dezie's long history of civic involvement began in high school, while working in the Civil Rights Movement. She served as President of the Fresno Youth Chapter of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People (NAACP), later becoming an organizer for the Congress of Racial Equality (CORE), and a national fundraiser for the Student Non-violent Coordinating Committee (SNCC).

Ms. Woods-Jones has continued to demonstrate her commitment to social and economic equity by striving to empower women and working with young people. She joined the Peralta Community College District in 1969, as Director of the Merritt College Outreach Center. During her 34-year career, she served as an administrator of Student Services, Community Relations, and Governmental Affairs. First and foremost, however, Dezie considers herself an instructor and teacher. Indeed, she has taught all of us so much.

Ms. Woods-Jones was the first woman to run for the office of Mayor of Oakland. She was elected to the Oakland City Council in June of 1991 and served as the City's Vice Mayor from 1996–1997. While in office, Ms. Woods-Jones served as Chair of the Rules Committee, the Finance and Legislation Committee, and the Health and Human Services Committee. After her term ended, she returned to the Peralta Community College District and presided as Vice Chancellor for External Affairs.

Over the years, she has continued her community activism, working diligently on behalf of the underprivileged and disenfranchised, particularly on behalf of youth and women. Dezie Woods-Jones was a founding member of Black Women Organized for Political Action (BWOPA) and has served as the organization's president for over 30 years. She is also founder of Black Women Organized for Educational Development and its outreach arm, the Black Women's Resource Center.

Ms. Woods-Jones' commitment to the Oakland/Bay Area community is indeed unparalleled. She has been part of the Alameda County Interagency Task Force, the Greater Oakland International Trade Center Board of Directors, Chair of the Oakland Community Policing Advisory Board, and President of the Oakland Private Industry Council. Her outstanding service has been recognized by the Department of Defense, the Department of Energy, the American Heart Association, the City and County of San Francisco, the City of Oakland, the State of California, and the Congress of the United States of America.

Finally, as we honor Dezie Woods-Jones today, I want to thank her on behalf of the entire 9th Congressional District of California for being a great friend and leader. Dezie has shared with me her wisdom and has given me support.

I have known Dezie since the early 1970's and continue to be inspired by her optimism, her energy, her boldness, her intellect, her heart, and her soul. Those who meet her cannot forget her incredible sense of style and exquisite hats. She is a true role model who continues to touch the lives of women—young and old—in magnificent ways. Her love for people transcends race and gender.

I take great pride in joining Ms. Woods-Jones' friends, family, and colleagues to salute the extraordinary Dezie Woods-Jones. Her Spirit soars even through difficult times. What a remarkable woman!

RESTORE DEVELOPMENT ASSISTANCE TO HAITIHON. MAXINE WATERS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 11, 2002

Ms. WATERS. Mr. Speaker, Haiti is the poorest country in the Western Hemisphere. Yet the U.S. government is blocking aid to Haiti in order to expand the influence of a single Haitian political party. This party, known as the Democratic Convergence, is supported by only a small fraction of the Haitian electorate. Nevertheless, the Democratic Convergence and the Organization of American States raised questions about the May 21, 2000, elections in Haiti.

Meanwhile, Haiti's population is facing a serious humanitarian crisis. Haiti's per capita income is only $460 per year. Four percent of the population is infected with the AIDS virus, and 163,000 children have been orphaned by AIDS. Every year, there are 30,000 new AIDS cases. The infant mortality rate is over seven percent. For every 1000 infants born in Haiti, five women die in childbirth. Furthermore, there are only 1.2 doctors for every 10,000 people in this desperately poor country.

Not only has the United States suspended development assistance to Haiti, the United States has been blocking loans from international financial institutions such as the World Bank, the International Monetary Fund (IMF) and the Inter-American Development Bank. U.S. policy has effectively prevented Haiti from receiving $146 million in loans from the Inter-American Development Bank that were already approved by that institution's Board of Directors. These loans are desperately needed by the people of Haiti.

The Board of Directors of the Inter-American Development Bank recently agreed to send a special mission to Haiti to review conditions for the renewal of lending to Haiti. This mission, which will take place later this month, is purely technical. Its purpose is twofold. First, the mission's participants will reassess past loans to Haiti that are in arrears. Second, they will assess current efforts by the Haitian government to resolve the political crisis. Unfortunately, there is no indication that participants in this mission will discuss conditions for the restoration of loans or development assistance to Haiti.

President Jean-Bertrand Aristide has taken several steps to address the concerns raised by the international community regarding the May 21, 2000, elections. Yet the U.S. government continues to refuse to negotiate with the Haitian government.

It is time for the United States to end this political impasse and restore development assistance to this impoverished democracy.

IN CELEBRATION OF THE 60th ANNIVERSARY OF WAVESHON. LOUISE MCINTOSH SLAUGHTER

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 12, 2002

Ms. SLAUGHTER. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased today to pay special tribute to WAVES, "Women Accepted For Voluntary Emergency Service", on the 60th anniversary of its incorporation. WAVES brings together all former, retired, and present Navy women, promotes the Navy and Navy women, serves women veterans, and supports the traditions and history of the Women of the United States Navy.

During World War I, while the Army remained committed to its prohibition against enlisted women, the Navy Department took advantage of the skills women offered by signing up 13,000 women into the Navy and the Marine Corps.

World War II marked a turning point in the history of women in the military. On July 30, 1942, Congress enacted legislation establishing a Women's Reserve for duty with the U.S. Navy stateside, and on August 3, 1942, WAVES was established. Women have continued to make invaluable contributions to the United States military ever since.

The Bureau of Labor Statistics estimates that there are over 1,448,000 women veterans in this country, representing 5 percent of the total veteran population. Women have served in and with the military services since our country was founded. As medics, mechanics, postal workers, clerks, cooks, or MP's, women have contributed and continue to contribute mightily to our national defense in times of both war and peace. Women veterans have served proudly in nearly every United States military action risking their lives in the service of their country.

I am proud to have the Finger Lakes Unit #49 of WAVES National, with members from Rochester and surrounding towns, as an active organization in my district. Our local unit carries out national programs with special emphasis on service to women veterans in VA hospitals, at home, and in nursing homes. In addition, our dedicated group continuously supports the Institute of Logopedics for Special children.

I am happy to offer my congratulations to WAVES on their 60th anniversary and my strong support for the important work they do recognizing and promoting the valuable service of women veterans.

HOUSE RESOLUTION 393

SPEECH OF

HON. HILDA L. SOLIS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 9, 2002

Ms. SOLIS. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of H. Res. 393, the resolution offered by Representative JOSEPH CROWLEY.

We have all heard during the past year and a half about the egregious acts of anti-Semitic behavior that have spread through Europe—vandalism of synagogues; desecration of graveyards; personal attacks of people of Jewish faith; boycott of products made in Israel. These actions are cowardly and have resulted in the worst wave of anti-Semitic behavior since 1945.

Today, I rise to support this resolution that calls upon the governments of Europe to protect their residents—Jewish and non-Jewish alike. We must fight for understanding and cooperation between people of all religions, not just in the turbulent Middle East but wherever prejudice and discrimination occur.

Our nation prides itself on maintaining an atmosphere where people can practice whatever religion they choose. Religious tolerance is the root of our peace and prosperity; we must strive to ensure that it is practiced throughout the world so that others may benefit from this spirit of cooperation.

No one deserves to be discriminated against, harmed or even killed simply because of their personal religious beliefs. I urge my colleagues to support this resolution to ensure that this behavior ceases immediately.

TRIBUTE TO ANTHONY A. MINISSALE

HON. TODD RUSSELL PLATTS

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 12, 2002

Mr. PLATTS. Mr. Speaker, it is with great admiration and respect that I offer congratulations to my constituent, Anthony A. Minissale, D.O. of York, Pennsylvania. On July 20, Dr. Minissale will be inducted as the President of the American Osteopathic Association (AOA) at its annual House of Delegates meeting in Chicago, Illinois. Dr. Minissale will serve from July 2002 through July 2003.

Dr. Minissale is a board-certified osteopathic surgeon. He will lead 47,000 osteopathic physicians (D.O.s) and the AOA, an association organized to advance the philosophy and practice of osteopathic medicine by promoting excellence in education, research and the delivery of quality and cost-effective healthcare in a distinct, unified profession. In addition to protecting the right and privilege to practice osteopathic medicine, Dr. Minissale will work with the AOA to enhance professional unity, ensure quality education and training and preserve osteopathic principles.

Dr. Minissale, vice president of medical affairs and director of medical education at Memorial Hospital in York, earned his Doctor of Medicine degree from the Philadelphia College of Osteopathic Medicine. He completed a rotating internship at Green Cross General Hospital in Cuyahoga Falls, Ohio, and a residency in general surgery at Parkview Hospital in Philadelphia.

A member of the AOA for 45 years, he has served as a member of its Board of Trustees for nine years and as a delegate to its legislative body, the House of Delegates, for over 20 years. Additionally, he has chaired all departments of the AOA and acts as the AOA's internship inspector, a post he has held since 1973.

Dr. Minissale, a fellow of the American College of Osteopathic Surgeons, also serves the Pennsylvania Osteopathic Medical Association (POMA). A member of POMA since 1961, he has worked in such capacities as vice chairman, secretary/treasurer, and board member. A founding member and chairman of the Pennsylvania Osteopathic Surgical Society, Dr. Minissale is also a member of the York Osteopathic Medical Society.

Above and beyond his osteopathic duties, Dr. Minissale has worked with civic organizations, such as Leadership York, the Coalition for a Healthy York, and the Gladwyne Civic Association. Dr. Minissale resides in York with his wife, Adele, and their two children, Anthony and Angela.

Mr. Speaker, osteopathic medicine plays an important role in the health of my fellow Pennsylvanians. We are proud to be the home of two osteopathic medical schools—the Philadelphia College of Osteopathic Medicine and the Lake Erie College of Osteopathic Medicine. Over 4,600 osteopathic physicians serve residents of the Keystone State.

I am pleased to congratulate Anthony A. Minissale, D.O. on achieving the high honor of being named President of the American Osteopathic Association. I look forward to working with him to advance the health of my fellow Pennsylvanians and all Americans.

TRIBUTE TO THE GREAT DOMINICAN PARADE AND FESTIVAL OF THE BRONX

HON. JOSÉ E. SERRANO

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 12, 2002

Mr. SERRANO. Mr. Speaker, it is with great pride that I rise today to pay tribute to the thirteenth annual Great Dominican Parade and Festival of the Bronx which will take place this Sunday, July 14, 2002. This famed event is eagerly anticipated by the Dominican and Bronx communities each year. It is a wonderful celebration of the spirit and richness of Dominican culture.

As the second largest Latino community in New York City, Dominicans have made invaluable contributions to the city, as well as to the entire nation. Although the highest concentration of Dominican people live in Washington Heights, a significant number have enriched the Bronx with their unique culture and spirit. The Dominican culture is one characterized by, among other things, diverse multiculturalism, strong family values, distinctive art, amazing music and unique cuisine. We are grateful that so many have chosen to make the Bronx home.

Mr. Speaker, the roots of Dominican New Yorkers lie in a country with a fascinating history and arresting beauty. The Dominican Republic is the home of numerous peoples from various heritages. As a result, the culture is charged with strong Taino, African, and European influences. One visit to the Dominican Republic will put to rest any questions one might have as to why Dominicans in America retain such a strong sense of pride in their homeland and never stop missing it.

The achievements and contributions made by Dominican-Americans and Dominican residents have spanned the realms of politics, science, the Armed Forces, literature, public service, and the arts, and undoubtedly make them an integral part of American society. The Great Dominican Parade and Festival of the Bronx is a great opportunity to celebrate the Dominican people's culture, history, and bright future.

I ask my colleagues to please join me in honoring the Great Dominican Parade and Festival of the Bronx.

HAPPY BELATED BIRTHDAY TO EILEEN COUNIHAN

HON. NYDIA M. VELÁZQUEZ

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 12, 2002

Ms. VELÁZQUEZ. Mr. Speaker, I rise to wish a very happy belated birthday to Eileen Counihan, born June 21, 1952, in New York City. Eileen celebrated her 50th birthday with family and friends in Yorkville and Margaretville in Upstate New York.

Eileen is known for her loyalty to friends and her commitment to her family, a quick smile and a warm sense of humor. She is a dedicated, active member of her community, volunteering to distribute food to the homeless on Friday evenings and even Thanksgiving Day. On Earth Day this year she led a project that planted 100 trees.

For these reasons and more I would like to extend the warmest best wishes to her and her family. Happy Belated Birthday, Eileen!

ADDRESSING THE GLOBAL AIDS PANDEMIC

HON. DANNY K. DAVIS

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 12, 2002

Mr. DAVIS of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in urge of dramatic funding increases to stop the spread of an epidemic that is taking the lives of millions of people throughout the world.

Today there are more than 40 million people in the world living with HIV/AIDS. Last year 5 million people contracted the virus, and 3 million people died of AIDS related causes. This current health crisis was once again brought to my attention yesterday, when the Chicago Tribune reported that African-Americans account for 67 percent of all newly reported cases of HIV in Chicago. They went on to state that the rate of undiagnosed AIDS cases among women in Chicago has nearly tripled in the last decade, with 80 percent of those women being African-American.

But Chicago is not the only place where people are affected by AIDS. In the words of U.S. Secretary of State, Colin Powell, "AIDS respects no man, woman, or child. It knows no race, religion, class, or creed. No community, country, or continent is immune from its ravages."

Ninety-five percent of those infected with HIV/AIDS live in the developing world. Across the Atlantic, millions of Africans are battling with an epidemic that has ravaged the human capital infrastructure, leaving homes and communities barren. The dreams and hopes of millions of people have been deferred as men, women, and children engage in a losing battle with the silent but powerful enemy that is sweeping and dismantling Africa at an alarming rate. Last year in sub-Saharan Africa alone 2.3 million people have died from AIDS related causes.

HIV/AIDS has made a devastating impact on the fruit of Africa's future, the children. Thirteen million African children have been orphaned due to AIDS, by the end of the decade this number is expected to exceed 40 million.

Global infection rates will continue to rise at alarming rates unless education and treatment options are made available. Recent surveys in 17 countries found that more than half of the adolescents questioned could not name a single method for protecting themselves against HIV/AIDS. In developing nations only 6 to 10 percent of HIV-infected people are receiving treatment for HIV-related opportunistic infection.

If we are serious about finding solutions to this epidemic, then I charge us to commit ourselves to fighting for the humanity of our African brothers and sisters, at whatever the cost. The World Health Organization Commission on Macroeconomics and Health estimates that the cost of mounting an effective global response to HIV/AIDS could reach $14 billion by 2007. This figure includes programs for prevention, care, and treatment.

We must provide life-saving drugs at reasonable cost. We must support funding for innovative research in finding a cure. We must support the regulation of affordable drugs for all Africans infected by this deadly disease. We must support the development of comprehensive HIV/AIDS policy for Africa.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

July 12, 2002

As a civil society, we ourselves must unite to confront this dilemma head on, to defeat this plague which has us anxious and on the run. It is time for us to stop running and start to act.

SEC CHAIRMAN PITT SHOULD NOT RESIGN

HON. DAVID L. HOBSON

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 12, 2002

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to bring attention to the recent calls by some of our colleagues for Securities and Exchange Commission Chairman Harvey Pitt to resign in the wake of the public disclosure of inaccurate corporate accounting measures and other problems on Wall Street.

Mr. Pitt should resign, they say, because in his term of office he has done nothing to crack down on corporate abuse of the law and because he is too "cozy with the business community." These calls for Mr. Pitt's resignation are the epitome of hypocrisy. These schemes were hatched in the mid to late 1990s and the Bush administration inherited our current situation. Where was the SEC then? And why haven't these individuals who have been recently critical of the SEC only spoken up in the last week if they believed no one was "minding the store?"

The President correctly said recently that some corporate executives lack an "ethical compass." But the current cycle of free-wheeling financial dealings did not begin with the Bush Administration but during the heady, consequence-free years of the Clinton Administration. The calls for Mr. Pitt to step down are political posturing of the worst kind. President Bush said he believes that Mr. Pitt should get a chance to do the job for which the Senate confirmed him.

The President has decided to give Mr. Pitt that chance, and so should my colleagues in Congress.

WE WILL LEAD ON, JUSTIN DART

HON. JANICE D. SCHAKOWSKY

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 12, 2002

Ms. SCHAKOWSKY. Mr. Speaker, our Nation has never seen the likes of Justin Dart. His vision, his dedication, and his passion for improving our country and the lives of our people were unwavering. What he accomplished during his lifetime was nothing short of miraculous. Justin Dart's contributions for equality for persons with disabilities and for justice for all people will be felt for generations to come. He would have expected nothing less of himself and from those who joined him in the struggle.

Justin Dart was a trailblazer for justice. For 30 years, with his lifetime partner, companion, friend and wife Yoshiko, and with many of us following closely behind, he led the way for the radical empowerment of persons with disabilities and for universal healthcare.

Justin Dart's life was changed forever when he contracted polio and the doctors proclaimed that he was only 3 days away from death. Those 3 days turned into 40 years. Polio left him in a wheelchair, but Justin often said, "I count the good days in my life from the time I got polio." He used each and every day to the fullest. He traveled, organized, spoke, and enjoyed every minute of it.

He began his advocacy campaign in earnest following his visit to a rehabilitation center for children with Polio in Vietnam in 1966. He would later write of the scene of young starving children left to suffer. "That scene is burned forever in my soul. For the first time in my life I understood the reality of evil, and that I was a part of that reality." Since that day forward, he dedicated himself and his resources to what he believed to be the most basic of human and civil rights—the right to live free and in dignity. Through sheer will, he fought to end the centuries old discrimination against people with disabilities.

Because of his years of hardwork, along with those who joined him in the fight, people with disabilities in this country finally received what is rightfully theirs, but what took so many years and so many struggles to achieve. In 1990, with Justin Dart on the podium, the Americans with Disabilities Act was signed into law. Understanding that without a grass-roots movement, there is no catalyst for change, Justin Dart did not miss the opportunity to protest that the fact that he and only two other disability advocates were on stage when President George Bush signed the ADA. He said, "hundreds of others should have been there as well."

Justin Dart, the father of the ADA, did not stop, did not rest, but instead pushed ahead with another cause after the victory of 1990. Universal healthcare became his passion and he once again traveled the nation calling himself "a full-time citizen soldier in the trenches of justice." When he spoke in Chicago in the early 1990s on universal healthcare, people drove hundreds of miles to hear him. He later fought tirelessly against attempts to weaken or even repeal the ADA and the Individuals with Disabilities Education Act. He turned back the attacks. Once again, Justin Dart was victorious.

In his lifetime, Justin Dart was unwavering in his convictions. And in his final words to us, he wrote, "Thanks to you, I die in the beautiful belief that the revolution of empowerment will go on. I love you so much. I'm with you always. Lead on! Lead on! Justin, we will."

EXPRESSING REGRET AND SYMPATHY FOR FAMILIES OF THE UKRAINIAN COAL MINERS KILLED ON JULY 7, 2002

HON. LOUISE MCINTOSH SLAUGHTER

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 12, 2002

Ms. SLAUGHTER. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to express my humblest condolences to the families of the thirty-five coal miners who lost their lives in a July 7th fire in Donetsk, Ukraine.

The terrible loss of life in Donetsk hits home on a number of levels. A tragedy of this magnitude is suffered not only by the families who lost their loved ones but the larger community. As the representative of a sizeable Ukrainian-American community and the co-chairperson of the Congressional Ukrainian Caucus, I would like to express our condolences to the families of the lost Ukrainian miners. The Ukrainian community in Monroe county, which was established over a century ago, maintains close times with their counterparts in Ukraine. In fact, in recent years, the Rochester-area Ukrainian community opened its arms to a new wave of immigrants.

As a Kentucky native, I have seen, firsthand, the enormous toll that underground mining can exact. Underground mining is dangerous. Tunnels can collapse. Coal in the mines can catch on fire. Sometimes there are poisonous gases near coal. In the U.S., the modernization of mining methods has made it less dangerous but there is always risk. I appreciate that Ukraine's efforts at enhancing its economy and modernizing its industrial structures has not been without setbacks. However, I am troubled by the fact that this terrible incident is not an isolated one.

Mr. Speaker, Ukraine's mines have one of the highest accident rates in the world due to poor maintenance and neglect of safety regulations. This accident comes a year after a gas explosion killed at least 50 miners in Donetsk and two years after 80 miners died in another underground mining explosion. More than 3,700 miners have died since Ukraine's independence from the Soviet Union in 1991. At this time of reflection, it is my sincere hope that this terrible incident marks a turning point for Ukraine and the Ukrainian government takes substantial steps to close the roughly 200 mines that the World Bank rates as highly prone to methane blasts.

Mr. Speaker, I extend my condolences to the victims' families in Ukraine, and offer my sorrow and sympathy to the people of Ukraine for this shocking tragedy that resulted in thirty-five deaths and my sincerest hope for real reforms in the Ukrainian mining industry.

RECOGNIZING THE PLANNED PARENTHOOD LOS ANGELES PROMOTORAS COMUNITARIAS TRAINING PROGRAM

HON. HILDA L. SOLIS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 12, 2002

Ms. SOLIS. Mr. Speaker, it is my distinct pleasure to rise today to honor the 10th anniversary of the Planned Parenthood Los Angeles Promotoras Comunitarias Training Program.

This innovative community outreach program started in 1991 to help promote family planning education programs in Latino communities by training women within the community to do the outreach. This is important because it helps spread the message of family planning in a culturally sensitive manner.

Not only did the program help spread much-needed information about family planning methods, it also instilled in the women who became Promotoras a sense of pride and helped them develop critical life skills. By giving their families, friends and neighbors vital health care information and then facilitating access to gynecological health care, Promotoras are empowering women to advocate for their own health care. In return, these dedicated women were able to develop job skills, communication methods and leadership traits.

In short, the Promotoras program has helped thousands of women in my area learn about gynecological care and domestic violence prevention. I urge all of my colleagues to join me in recognizing this remarkable organization.

CARLTON REESE, MUSIC DIRECTOR OF THE CIVIL RIGHTS MOVEMENT

HON. EARL F. HILLIARD

OF ALABAMA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 12, 2002

Mr. HILLIARD. Mr. Speaker, I wish to commemorate the life of Carlton Reese today. Professor Reese led the Freedom Choir in Birmingham during the days of struggle in the 1960's and continued to lead it to his death this month. He provided the soul to the movement—without him the struggle might have failed or fallen into violence and disorder.

He was the original writer of the great anthem of the movement, "We Shall Overcome," now one of the most well known songs in the world and sung everywhere that people are struggling for freedom. It has been sung in the freedom rallies in Chile, in democratic rallies in Turkey and in the bomb shelters of Hanoi. In this song, Professor Reese left a permanent legacy of freedom, equality, peace and hope for all to come.

At the tender age of 17, Rev. Fred Shuttlesworth asked him to be the music director of the Alabama Christian Movement for Human Rights, which organized and directed the demonstrations in Birmingham. It was his music that defined the movement and its spirit. Some of that music can be found on the Smithsonian Institute's CD, "Voices of the Civil Rights Movement."

When he graduated from Miles College in the '60s with a teaching degree, he was blacklisted by the Birmingham School system, and had to go to Tupelo, Mississippi to begin his career as a teacher. The Birmingham school system said that they did not want teachers who had been in jail—even if imprisoned for their commitment to freedom.

Upon returning to Alabama to teach in the Shelby County schools, South of Birmingham, he became Minister of Music at the New Bethlehem Baptist Church in Dolomite, where he served for over 40 years, turning down positions with many of the great gospel churches throughout the nation. This humble giant of freedom and music also served as a Deacon in the church, Religious Education Consultant, Youth Staff Worker, Advisor to the Senior Citizens Program and Financial Planner for the building fund.

Upon returning to Birmingham, he reorganized the Freedom Choir, which later took the name of the Sacred and Heritage Singers. Using this as a base, he became the Music Director for the City-Wide Unity Breakfast Program, an annual major event in Birmingham which brings members of the white and Black communities together to celebrate our progress and unity.

We have lost this great freedom fighter, but he will march on wherever people struggle for freedom, peace and the human family. His music will be sung wherever people are celebrating their victories. His music will be sung in every valley and on every hill of this planet. Carlton Reese will be with us forever. He has overcome!

THE TRAGIC DEATH OF 35 MINERS IN UKRAINE ON 7 JULY 2002

HON. BOB SCHAFFER

OF COLORADO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 12, 2002

Mr. SCHAFFER. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to offer my condolences to the families and comrades of 35 Ukrainian miners who died Sunday, 7 July 2002, in a mining accident in eastern Ukraine. I also offer my condolences to the people of Ukraine who have suffered too many such tragedies in the years since independence, as a result of an aging mining sector that is in dire need of reform and modernization.

Ukraine's miners have endured turmoil for too long. Miners have been forced to work under intolerable and life-threatening conditions, in some cases without being paid for years. It is estimated Ukraine's mining industry employs about half a million people in 193 mines, mostly in the eastern region of the country. However, the mortality rate in Ukraine's coalmining industry is staggering, with five to six miners lives sacrificed for every ton of coal produced, constituting nearly 4,000 deaths in the last 11 years.

Mr. Speaker, despite the obvious threat to its citizens, Ukraine's government has resisted shutting down unsafe mines. Rather, it appears avoiding profit loss, instability from mass unemployment and lack of heating coal far outweigh the considerations for human life.

In August this year, I intend to lead a Congressional Delegation to countries surrounding the Black Sea, including Ukraine. One focus of this trip will be on the mining industry to gain a better understanding of the crisis facing Ukraine and to help alleviate the suffering of miners and their families.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

HON. BOB GOODLATTE

OF VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 12, 2002

Mr. GOODLATTE. Mr. Speaker, on rollcall Nos. 293 and 294, I was unavoidably detained.

Had I been present, I would have voted "yea" on both.

RECOGNIZING THE
REDEVELOPMENT OF STAPLETONHON. MARK UDALL

OF COLORADO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 12, 2002

Mr. UDALL of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor Forest City Stapleton, Inc., for their role in the redevelopment of the former Stapleton International Airport in Denver, Colorado.

Stapleton International Airport served as Denver's municipal airport from 1929 to 1995. After that function ended with opening of the new Denver International Airport, there was much discussion about what to do with the 7.5 square mile Stapleton property—land that once was at the edge of town but that is now surrounded by residential development.

What evolved from those discussions is the vision that Forest City Stapleton, Inc. is implementing today—a vision that I am proud to recognize as an example of the kinds of responsible community redevelopment.

As Colorado continues to increase rapidly in population, policies that promote smart, responsibly managed growth become ever more important. The new Stapleton community that Forest City Stapleton, Inc. has planned displays the finest aspects of both smart growth and "New Urbanism."

New Urbanism refers to community development that concentrates a diversity of uses (residential, commercial, governmental) and thus avoids some of the impacts that come with suburban sprawl (such as long commutes, lost open space). Forest City Stapleton, Inc. has consistently remained mindful of the critical importance of developing land so as to maximize the use of natural resources while minimizing the impact on the natural environment.

Over the next 20 years, Stapleton's 4,700 acres will become a new community of 12,000 homes and 13 million square feet of offices and shops as well as over 1,100 acres of parks and open space. The Stapleton redevelopment alone will increase the acreage of Denver parks by 30 percent. With new homes, schools, retail and office space, Stapleton will be a self-sustainable community where people can live, learn, work and play. By varying land-use and density of development, Forest City Stapleton, Inc. is able to create the social and economic diversity characteristic of any great urban community.

Essentially, through the foresight of the Stapleton redevelopment committee, the surrounding communities and the City and County of Denver, Coloradans are converting a once productive property into a new community that will serve its residents well. The redevelopment of Stapleton represented an opportunity to employ innovative and workable approaches that will result in healthy, livable communities. I hope that this model can be used as an example of alternatives to traditional development in communities throughout Colorado.

Mr. Speaker, I ask my colleagues to join with me in expressing our appreciation for the conscientious development Forest City Stapleton, Inc. has undertaken. I wish them continued success.

HONORING USCG CAPTAIN RICK
YATTO COMMANDING OFFICER OF AIR STATION CAPE CODHON. WILLIAM D. DELAHUNT

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 12, 2002

Mr. DELAHUNT. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to bring to the attention of this Congress the accomplishments of Captain Rick Yatto of the United States Coast Guard. We extend our appreciation for his three years of outstanding service as Commanding Officer of Air Station Cape Cod.

Today, Captain Yatto will step down as the Commanding Officer of the largest Air Station on the East Coast. It is an assignment that is one of the most difficult in the entire Coast Guard, with a unique set of challenges both at sea and on land.

On the water, the Air Station provides law enforcement and search-and-rescue coverage throughout much of the Northwest Atlantic, with a large boating and fishing community that operates in some of the most difficult conditions. In the past three years, the Air Station performed over 750 search-and-rescue cases and saved over 200 lives. On land, the Air Station is a large industrial complex spread out over 1,400 acres, with over 600 housing units, a medical clinic, and dozens of buildings that support hundreds of Coast Guard and military families. The Air Station is also located on top of a fragile underground drinking water supply, located next to one of the largest Superfund sites in the country. The job is so large, that those who work and live at the base often see Captain Yatto as the local mayor.

However, unlike politics, in the Coast Guard there is no margin for error. During Captain Yatto's tenure, the Air Station has not only had its fair share of daring rescues, it has successfully tackled a host of environmental challenges critical to the future of the installation. The Air Station's success in pollution prevention, innovative environmental management, and energy efficiency has won national recognition from the Environmental Protection Agency, the Department of Transportation, and the White House.

In my district, the Coast Guard is widely respected as the oldest maritime service in the country, with a tradition forever linked to the heritage of Cape Cod and the Islands. Many of the first Coast Guard stations were built on the Massachusetts coast, manned by brave men from local families with deep roots in our community. Their gallant deeds and heroics are not only a part of the Coast Guard's proud tradition, they are permanently etched into the communities and family histories of the people I represent.

This explains why the Coast Guard is so much a part of our community, why there is so much local pride in its rich tradition and in the work they do today saving lives, protecting our fisheries, the marine environment and defending our homeland. That pride in our Coast Guard will continue as long as it is led by people like Captain Rick Yatto and served by the fine men and women of Air Station Cape Cod.

On behalf of a very grateful constituency, Captain Yatto: "Mission accomplished, and job well done."

INTRODUCTION OF THE TEACHER
TAX RELIEF ACTHON. DAVE CAMP

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 12, 2002

Mr. CAMP. Mr. Speaker, the economic stimulus package signed into law by President Bush on March 9, 2002 offers school teachers a $250 deduction for qualified "out of pocket" educational expenses such as books and other supplies. These important provisions will provide almost half a billion dollars worth of tax relief to teachers all across America. However these provisions are only effective in tax years 2002 and 2003.

It is now estimated that the average teacher spends $521 out of their own pocket each year on classroom materials—materials such as pens, pencils and books. First year teachers spend even more. Moreover, in addition to spending substantial money on classroom supplies, many teachers spend even more money out of their own pocket on professional development.

The bottom line is that these out-of-pocket costs place lasting financial burdens on our teachers and this is one reason our teachers are leaving the profession. Congressmen JOHN TANNER, MARK FOLEY and I have introduced the Teacher Tax Relief Act of 2002. This important legislation will build on current law in three ways: increase the above-the-line deduction for educators from $250 allowed under current law to $500, allow educators to include professional development costs within that $500 deduction and make these provisions permanent.

This legislation has bi-partisan cosponsors and support from the education community. I urge the House to support this measure.

CELEBRATING THE 30TH ANNIVER-SARY OF THE IOLA OLD CAR SHOWHON. MARK GREEN

OF WISCONSIN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 12, 2002

Mr. GREEN of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, this weekend marks the 30th anniversary of the Iola Old Car Show.

July 12, 2002

Iola is a village in my northeastern Wisconsin district filled with great people. For a few days each summer it is filled with even more terrific folks, who bring their truly extraordinary historic cars for this event.

This year, the Iola Car Show will focus on "Ford's Fabulous Model A," and will have more than 200 Ford Model A's on display. But that's just a fraction of the more than 2,500 cars built between 1900 and 1975 that will be there.

There are few things more distinctly American than our adoration for the automobile, and the Iola Old Car Show celebrates that love. It also showcases who we are and who we've been—retelling nearly a century of American history through the automobile. This year's Ford Model A exhibition is a perfect example of that expression of our history.

The car show has come a long way from its humble beginnings in 1972, when Chet Krause invited some of his buddies who happened to own old cars to the Iola Lions Chicken Roast. Today, it's grown into one of the largest car shows in the nation. It's an event that I'm very proud to host in my district, and I wish them all the best this year for a great show and a happy 30th anniversary.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

H.R. 2486 "INLAND FLOOD FORECASTING AND WARNING SYSTEM ACT OF 2002"

SPEECH OF

HON. WALTER B. JONES

OF NORTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 11, 2002

The House in Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union had under consideration the bill (H.R. 2486) to authorize the National Weather Service to conduct research and development, training, and outreach activities relating to tropical cyclone inland forecasting improvement, and for other purposes:

Mr. JONES of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, as I stand before you today, homeowners of my district in Eastern North Carolina are making preparations for another hurricane season along the coast. Unfortunately, many of my constituents have yet to fully recover from effects of seasons past.

The United States has a significant hurricane problem. More than 60 percent of our population live in coastal states, and every year these citizens must rely on the most accurate information at their disposal as they take the measures necessary to remain safe.

Mr. Chairman, when most people think of the dangers of hurricanes, high winds and storm surges come to mind. However, more people have died from inland flooding over the past 30 years than any other cause. While high winds are a major source of damage, their impacts are often localized to immediate coastal areas. On the contrary, inland flooding threatens communities hundreds of miles from the coast, as powerful rains fall from these huge tropical air masses.

My constituents know all too well the perils of inland flooding. In 1999, Hurricane Floyd brought torrential rains and record flooding to Eastern North Carolina. As riverbanks and dams gave way, townspeople were lucky to find safety before their homes and businesses were washed away. Of the 56 people who lost their lives in this storm, 50 of them drowned due to inland flooding.

Mr. Chairman, even more heartbreaking is the fact that these deaths could have been prevented. That is why I stand before you today to voice my full support for H.R. 2486, the Inland Flood Forecasting and Warning System Act, introduced by my colleague from North Carolina, BOB ETHERIDGE.

This bill will give the National Weather Service, emergency officials, and meteorologists the tools necessary to moderate the dangers of tropical cyclones and inland flooding. More importantly it saves lives.

Mr. Chairman, each year citizens along coastal areas do their part to protect families and communities from the effects of hurricanes, now it's time for Congress to do ours.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES—Monday, July 15, 2002

The House met at 12:30 p.m. and was called to order by the Speaker pro tempore (Mr. CULBERSON).

DESIGNATION OF SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following communication from the Speaker:

WASHINGTON, DC,
July 15, 2002.

I hereby appoint the Honorable JOHN ABNEY CULBERSON to act as Speaker pro tempore on this day.

J. DENNIS HASTERT,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate by Mr. Monahan, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate has passed with amendments in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

H.R. 2069. An act to amend the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961 and the Global AIDS and Tuberculosis Relief Act of 2000 to authorize assistance to prevent, treat, and monitor HIV/AIDS in sub-Saharan Africa and other developing countries.

The message also announced that the Senate has passed without amendment in which the concurrence of the House is requested, concurrent resolutions of the House of the following titles:

H. Con. Res. 161. Concurrent resolution honoring the 19 United States servicemen who died in the terrorist bombing of the Khobar Towers military housing compound in Dhahran, Saudi Arabia, on June 25, 1996.

H. Con. Res. 378. Concurrent resolution commending the District of Columbia National Guard, the National Guard Bureau, and the entire Department of Defense for the assistance provided to the United States Capitol Police and the entire Congressional community in response to the terrorist and anthrax attacks of September and October 2001.

The message also announced that the Senate disagrees to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 3009) "An Act to extend the Andean Trade Preference Act, to grant additional trade benefits under that Act, and for other purposes.", and agrees to a conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. BAUCUS, Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Mr. BREAU, Mr. GRASSLEY, and Mr. HATCH, to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

MORNING HOUR DEBATES

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the order of the House of January 23, 2002, the Chair will now recognize Members from lists submitted by the majority and minority leaders for morning hour debates. The Chair will alternate recognition between the parties, with each party limited to not to exceed 30 minutes, and each Member, except the majority leader, the minority leader, or the minority whip, limited to not to exceed 5 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. WELLER) for 5 minutes.

URGING MEMBERS TO JOIN IN OPPOSITION TO H.R. 3479, LEGISLATION WHICH EXPANDS O'HARE AIRPORT BUT EXCLUDES FUNDING FOR PEOTONE AIRPORT

Mr. WELLER. Mr. Speaker, today is the first day we are in session in the week. Usually on the first day we deal with noncontroversial issues, something called the Suspension Calendar.

It is my understanding we have almost 15 pieces of legislation before us today on what is normally a noncontroversial day. But I want to draw the attention of my colleagues to a very controversial piece of legislation that is on the Suspension Calendar, and I want to ask my colleagues to join me in opposition to this legislation, legislation which, frankly, breaks a bipartisan agreement back in my home State in Illinois.

I am referring to H.R. 3479, legislation that is before us that we in the Chicago area know as the O'Hare bill, legislation that federally mandates construction of O'Hare and expansion of O'Hare. I want to ask my colleagues to join me today in opposition to this legislation.

Let me explain why. I stand here in strong support of O'Hare. I stand in strong support of Midway. I also believe we need to build a third airport to serve the Chicago region. As we know, air travel is going to double over the coming decade, and O'Hare and Midway in the Chicago area are today at capacity. We need to rebuild and modernize O'Hare, but we also need to build a third airport in south suburban Peotone to serve the Chicago region.

This past year, Governor Ryan and Mayor Daley entered into a historic agreement which provided for the reconfiguration and expansion of O'Hare, as well as development of Chicago's south suburban airport near Peotone, Illinois. My colleague, the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. LIPINSKI), introduced legislation which originally would have codified this agreement into law, modernizing O'Hare, and pushing development of a south suburban airport.

I had originally stood here and stated time after time that I wanted to support this legislation and that I was ready to cosponsor the bill if it truly reflected the integrity of the agreement between the Governor and the mayor.

However, this legislation, H.R. 3479, which will be before us this afternoon, does not reflect the agreement between the Governor and the mayor. In fact, the Governor has indicated he does not support the bill today in its current form. That is why I think it is important to note that H.R. 3479 breaks the bipartisan agreement between Governor Ryan and Mayor Daley on O'Hare. That is why I ask my colleagues to join me in opposition to this bill today.

My hope is that the Committee on Transportation and Infrastructure will go back and move legislation again, and bring it back to the floor, which truly reflects the bipartisan agreement which expands O'Hare as well as moves forward on construction of an airport at Peotone.

Mr. Speaker, this legislation, as I noticed, breaks the agreement between the mayor and the Governor. I would note that the legislation, H.R. 3479, has no language in it which reflects the agreement that the Governor and mayor agreed to, which moves forward with the construction of a third airport at Peotone.

The legislation takes away the State of Illinois's rights and undercuts the authority of the State of Illinois to make its own decisions regarding air travel.

H.R. 3479 completely ignores the needs of the south suburbs of Chicago, where 2.5 million people live within 45 minutes of the proposed airport at Peotone. Additionally, I would note that failure to develop Peotone would shortchange the entire Chicago region by forfeiting almost 250,000 new jobs.

Unfortunately, H.R. 3479 does not pay any heed to the studies that have, since the 1980s, consistently shown that Chicago, the region, and our Nation will have aviation gridlock, and the best solution is a new airport, a third airport to serve the Chicago region. Both the Governor and mayor recognized these studies when they reached their agreement last year.

I would note that the bill that will be before us today breaks the agreement between the mayor and the Governor

□ This symbol represents the time of day during the House proceedings, e.g., □ 1407 is 2:07 p.m.

Matter set in this typeface indicates words inserted or appended, rather than spoken, by a Member of the House on the floor.

and does not reflect the integrity of the agreement. Nevertheless, the bill imposes a Federal solution on a State problem and does not have the full support of the Illinois delegation nor the people of Illinois, who will be most impacted by the legislation.

In fact, the three members of the Illinois delegation most affected by H.R. 3479, the gentlemen from Illinois, Mr. HYDE, Mr. JACKSON, and myself, stand in opposition to this bill this afternoon.

I support Chicago-O'Hare and believe it needs to be expanded and modernized to be a safer airport with more capacity, but expanding O'Hare is not enough. It will not solve the capacity problem or face it in the future. Even with the development of a south suburban airport, O'Hare can still expect a 40 percent increase in passenger load, so they are still going to increase their business.

Air travel is expected to double in the next 15 years. Expanding O'Hare will take 12 to 15 years, and we know we cannot land airplanes while pouring concrete. The south suburban airport at Peotone could be expanding capacity in just 4 to 5 years as a complement to O'Hare expansion. However, this legislation will kill any development of a south suburban airport and keep Chicago aviation gridlocked for years to come.

Mr. Speaker, we need a bipartisan solution. The mayor and the Governor came together with an agreement. The bill before us today, H.R. 3479, fails to honor that agreement; in fact, it breaks the agreement between the mayor and the Governor.

I urge opposition to this bill and ask that my colleagues join me in voting "no."

CORPORATE GREED

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the order of the House of January 23, 2002, the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. BROWN) is recognized during morning hour debates for 5 minutes.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, it has been almost a week since President Bush went to Wall Street to present his plan to curb executive greed and corporate misgovernance. The response, unfortunately, has been pretty underwhelming. The markets dropped by several hundred points day after day after day. The press and the American people have openly questioned the President's commitment to real change.

Even Wall Street workers who attended the speech, mostly Bush supporters, wondered aloud about how much of the speech was just politics and how much was about real change.

Why was this speech so poorly received? One, because so many officials in the Bush administration are themselves former corporate CEOs, lawyers, and accountants who lack the moral authority or the will to change corporate practices, or even to enforce current law.

Second, because in the middle of the current crisis, the President and the Vice President, both former oil company CEOs, have been forced to answer questions about their own ethics and business practices in the private sector.

Third, because, despite his rhetorical calls for corporate America to clean up its act, President Bush continues to oppose real reform on Capitol Hill. He has refused to support meaningful pension and accounting reform; he opposes legislation to halt offshore tax avoidance by huge corporations; and, to make matters worse, even though America's capital markets lost $2.4 trillion last year, more than the gross domestic product of Germany, the President continues to favor turning Social Security over to Wall Street in a privatization scheme. This is the same Wall Street that advised American investors to buy Enron and WorldCom and Adelphia and others while their analysts privately ridiculed those companies.

In addition, the President has supported a whole slew of bills that have been written by and for big industry. He supports energy legislation written by the oil companies, he supports environmental legislation written by the chemical companies, he supports privatization of Social Security written by Wall Street bankers.

Most recently, the President endorsed a prescription drug benefit to be administered by the health insurance industry, the same people who brought us HMOs. This plan would provide seniors with totally inadequate coverage, making no provision for dealing with the outrageous prices Americans are paying for their prescription drugs. It would undercut seniors' purchasing power and enable the drug industry to sustain its outrageous drug prices.

Apparently, the President has been convinced by the brand-name big drug companies that prices are not a problem. Democrats are more concerned about the burden on seniors and their families who are being gouged by the predatory pricing of the prescription drug industry. The Democratic plan provides a direct prescription drug benefit inside Medicare and combats high prescription drug prices. The Republican plan, written by the drug companies, calls for a privatized system that coddles industry and leaves gaps in coverage for seniors.

The Republicans claim they are offering the best drug benefit possible under current budgetary constraints; but a year ago, when the Bush tax cut plan, the tax breaks, which went overwhelmingly to the richest 1 percent of people in this society, when that was being debated, we were assured by the President and Republican leadership of huge budget surpluses. We were told these surpluses would be enough to address long-term solvency of Medicare and Social Security and still have the money for education and the money for a prescription drug benefit. Since then, these projected surpluses promised by President Bush and others have evaporated, mostly because of the overly-generous-to-the-most-privileged-in-this-society tax cut.

Maybe the President and his administration, full of corporate executives, were using the same accounting practices as America's big companies. Maybe, Mr. Speaker, this is what President Bush and Vice President CHENEY meant when they said that, under their leadership, the country would be run like a corporation.

HONORING TED WILLIAMS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the order of the House of January 23, 2002, the gentleman from Florida (Mr. STEARNS) is recognized during morning hour debates for 5 minutes.

Mr. STEARNS. Mr. Speaker, today we will honor Ted Williams, the baseball legend, here on the House floor. I am here this morning to also honor him.

On July 5, of course, of this year, he died. He is one of baseball's greatest legends. He was known as the "Splendid Splinter," "Teddy Ballgame," "the Kid," "the Thumper"; he was a man who turned the art of batting into a science.

Mr. Speaker, he began his major league career with the Boston Red Sox on December 7, 1937, and played for the team exclusively for 19 years. He retired with a career high .344 batting average, and was, of course, the last player to hit over 400 for a full season in 1941. Ted Williams is tied for 11th all time, with 521 home runs, and 11th with 1,839 RBIs.

He won two Triple Crowns, and was a two-time MVP. He held six American League batting championships and received 18 All-star game selections.

These tremendous achievements, Mr. Speaker, were reached despite Ted missing five seasons serving his country as a naval aviator in World War II, and then later he went on to become a Marine aviator, flying 39 combat missions in Korea and earning an Air Medal and two Gold Stars.

On January 20, 1966, Ted Williams was inducted into the Baseball Hall of Fame, and on May 29, 1984, the Red Sox formally retired his number 9.

In 1994, the so-called "Einstein of batting" opened the Ted Williams Museum and Library in Hernando, Florida, becoming the number one tourist attraction in Citrus County. My family has had the opportunity to visit this wonderful museum, and I was his Congressman for many years. We had an opportunity to meet and talk with him many times.

But Mr. Speaker, Ted Williams was much more to his country than just a baseball legend.

He was also a legend in terms of helping others. When I first came to Congress, Ted Williams, as I mentioned, was one of my constituents. Unfortunately, districts were redrawn in 1991 and I moved away from him. However, I continued to work with him and to speak with him on a number of key issues. And one issue, Mr. Speaker, I would like to share with you this afternoon.

In 1995 he was recovering from a stroke that he suffered. During his therapy he came to know a young woman whose name was Tricia Miranti. She was also going through therapy much like him, and he used to play checkers with her and talk to her. She had a brain hemorrhage which she suffered at the age of five. Ted Williams is a man who exemplified determination and hard work. He was impressed with her determination and her hard work and he watched her go through therapy. They became fast friends and out of their friendship grew Williams' creation of a scholarship fund for disabled students.

In 1997 I had the honor of working with Ted to raise funds for that scholarship program. Ted's dedication to Tricia and those who share her experiences can be summed up in the following quote he gave to an article in 1998. He said, "It makes me feel lucky. If ever, as long as I live, I can help anyone in any way possible, I will. It makes you just feel great."

This statement, of course, is no surprise to those who knew Ted. His passionate support of the Jimmy Fund, an organization dedicated to raising funds for cancer research and treatment for children, is also legend. In his autobiography Ted wrote, "I think one of the greatest things ever said is that a man never stands so high as when he stoops to help a kid."

Mr. Speaker, Ted Williams is one of the greatest hitters to ever play the game, if not the greatest. But he should also be remembered for what he accomplished outside of the game, accomplishments that we will not find in career statistics, but the impact of which will be felt for years to come. God bless Ted Williams and his family.

RECESS

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. CULBERSON). Pursuant to clause 12 of rule I, the Chair declares the House in recess until 2 p.m.

Accordingly (at 12 o'clock and 48 minutes p.m.), the House stood in recess until 2 p.m.

□ 1400

AFTER RECESS

The recess having expired, the House was called to order by the Speaker pro tempore (Mr. CULBERSON) at 2 p.m.

PRAYER

The Chaplain, the Reverend Daniel P. Coughlin, offered the following prayer: Lord, You are wisdom for the ages and strength in times of weakness, renew Your people in faith and by our prayer wash us clean in Your Holy Spirit.

Guide the Members of Congress during this week. Bring forth from their diversity a unity of purpose. Born out of honest exchange and compromise, let there emerge great leadership for Your people.

Through the power of Your own Spirit work through them and in them.

By works in the mind provide new understanding and by works in the heart bring about freedom and unity, enough to hold a Nation, now and forever. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has examined the Journal of the last day's proceedings and announces to the House his approval thereof.

Pursuant to clause 1, rule I, the Journal stands approved.

PLEDGE OF ALLEGIANCE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Will the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. SENBRENNER) come forward and lead the House in the Pledge of Allegiance.

Mr. SENBRENNER led the Pledge of Allegiance as follows:

I pledge allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America, and to the Republic for which it stands, one nation under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all.

COMMUNICATION FROM DISTRICT DIRECTOR OF HON. SHERROD BROWN OF OHIO, MEMBER OF CONGRESS

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following communication from Elizabeth Thames, District Director to the Honorable SHERROD BROWN of Ohio, Member of Congress:

JULY 8, 2002.

Hon. DENNIS J. HASTERT,
Speaker, House of Representatives,
Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. SPEAKER: This is to formally notify you, pursuant to Rule VIII of the Rules of the House, that I have been served with a civil subpoena for testimony issued by the Geauga County Court of Common Pleas, Chardon, Ohio.

After consultation with the Office of General Counsel, I determined that it is inconsistent with the precedents and privileges of the House to comply with the subpoena.

Sincerely,

ELIZABETH THAMES,
District Director.

COMMUNICATION FROM THE HON. SHERROD BROWN OF OHIO, MEMBER OF CONGRESS

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following communication from the HONORABLE SHERROD BROWN of Ohio, Member of Congress:

JULY 8, 2002.

Hon. DENNIS J. HASTERT,
Speaker, House of Representatives,
Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. SPEAKER: This is to formally notify you, pursuant to Rule VIII of the Rules of the House, that I have been served with a civil subpoena for testimony issued by the Geauga County Court of Common Pleas, Chardon, Ohio.

After consultation with the Office of General Counsel, I determined that it is inconsistent with the precedents and privileges to the House to comply with the subpoena.

Sincerely,

SHERROD BROWN,
Member of Congress.

COMMUNICATION FROM THE CLERK OF THE HOUSE

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following communication from the Clerk of the House of Representatives:

OFFICE OF THE CLERK,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, DC, July 12, 2002.

Hon. J. DENNIS HASTERT,
The Speaker, House of Representatives,
Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. SPEAKER: Pursuant to the permission granted in Clause 2(h) of Rule II of the Rules of the U.S. House of Representatives, I have the honor to transmit a sealed envelope received from the White House on Friday, July 12, 2002 at 1:21 p.m., and said to contain a message from the President whereby he transmits the District of Columbia's Fiscal Year 2003 Budget Request Act.

Sincerely yours,

MARTHA C. MORRISON,
Deputy Clerk.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA FISCAL YEAR 2003 BUDGET REQUEST ACT—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES (H. DOC. NO. 107-)

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was read and, together with the accompanying papers, without objection, referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed:

To the Congress of the United States:

Pursuant to my constitutional authority and consistent with sections 202(c) and (e) of the The District of Columbia Financial Management and Responsibility Assistance Act of 1995 and section 446 of The District of Columbia Self-Governmental Reorganization Act as amended in 1989, I am transmitting the District of Columbia's Fiscal Year 2003 Budget Request Act.

The proposed FY 2003 Budget Request Act reflects the major programmatic objectives of the Mayor and the Council of the District of Columbia. For FY 2003, the District estimates total revenue and expenditures of $5.7 billion.

GEORGE W. BUSH.
THE WHITE HOUSE, July 11, 2002.

REMEMBERING OUR VETERANS THROUGH SERVICE ORGANIZATIONS

(Mr. GEKAS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. GEKAS. Mr. Speaker, 1941 was a banner year for American baseball and baseball in the American League, as it were. In that year Joe DiMaggio hit in 56 games straight, and Ted Williams batted 406. These are not the important historical facts, although they are great for those of us who follow baseball, but both of them did something extraordinary. Joe DiMaggio, very soon after that wonderful streak, entered the United States Army and served until 1946 as a noncommissioned officer in the United States Army. Ted Williams went into the Air Force, or Army, and served the balance of the war in his branch of the service.

Then dramatically twice after that, Ted Williams reported back for duty and served in the Korean conflict. These are the great Americans that we remember and we will continue to remember through the service organizations which we will discuss a little bit later.

CORPORATE GREED

(Mr. BROWN of Ohio asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, this morning in Birmingham, President Bush gave another speech aimed at restoring investor confidence at the same time the country's equity markets were well on their way to a sixth day of losses. Why is that?

Could it be because so many administration officials in the Bush White House are themselves former corporate CEOs, lawyers, or accountants who lack the moral authority or the will to change corporate practices, or even to enforce current law? Or could it be because in the middle of the current financial crisis, the President and the Vice President have been forced to answer questions about their own ethics and business practices as oil company CEOs? Or could it be, because despite his rhetorical calls for corporate America to clean up its act, the President continues to oppose real reform on Capitol Hill?

Maybe, Mr. Speaker, with the recent spate of corporate collapses, the American people have begun to wonder whether running the company like a corporation, as the President and Vice President have promised, is all that good an idea.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 8 of rule XX, the Chair announces that he will postpone further proceedings today on each motion to suspend the rules on which a recorded vote or the yeas and nays are ordered, or on which the vote is objected to under clause 6 of rule XX.

Any record votes on motions to suspend the rules ordered prior to 6:30 p.m. will be taken today. Record votes on remaining motions to suspend the rules will be taken tomorrow.

CYBER SECURITY ENHANCEMENT ACT OF 2002

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 3482) to provide greater cybersecurity, as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

H.R. 3482

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Cyber Security Enhancement Act of 2002".

TITLE I—COMPUTER CRIME

SEC. 101. AMENDMENT OF SENTENCING GUIDELINES RELATING TO CERTAIN COMPUTER CRIMES.

(a) DIRECTIVE TO THE UNITED STATES SENTENCING COMMISSION.—Pursuant to its authority under section 994(p) of title 28, United States Code, and in accordance with this section, the United States Sentencing Commission shall review and, if appropriate, amend its guidelines and its policy statements applicable to persons convicted of an offense under section 1030 of title 18, United States Code.

(b) REQUIREMENTS.—In carrying out this section, the Sentencing Commission shall—

(1) ensure that the sentencing guidelines and policy statements reflect the serious nature of the offenses described in subsection (a), the growing incidence of such offenses, and the need for an effective deterrent and appropriate punishment to prevent such offenses;

(2) consider the following factors and the extent to which the guidelines may or may not account for them—

(A) the potential and actual loss resulting from the offense;

(B) the level of sophistication and planning involved in the offense;

(C) whether the offense was committed for purposes of commercial advantage or private financial benefit;

(D) whether the defendant acted with malicious intent to cause harm in committing the offense;

(E) the extent to which the offense violated the privacy rights of individuals harmed;

(F) whether the offense involved a computer used by the government in furtherance of national defense, national security, or the administration of justice;

(G) whether the violation was intended to or had the effect of significantly interfering with or disrupting a critical infrastructure; and

(H) whether the violation was intended to or had the effect of creating a threat to public health or safety, or injury to any person;

(3) assure reasonable consistency with other relevant directives and with other sentencing guidelines;

(4) account for any additional aggravating or mitigating circumstances that might justify exceptions to the generally applicable sentencing ranges;

(5) make any necessary conforming changes to the sentencing guidelines; and

(6) assure that the guidelines adequately meet the purposes of sentencing as set forth in section 3553(a)(2) of title 18, United States Code.

SEC. 101A. STUDY AND REPORT ON COMPUTER CRIMES.

Not later than May 1, 2003, the United States Sentencing Commission shall submit a brief report to Congress that explains any actions taken by the Sentencing Commission in response to this Act and includes any recommendations the Commission may have regarding statutory penalties for offenses under section 1030 of title 18, United States Code.

SEC. 102. EMERGENCY DISCLOSURE EXCEPTION.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 2702(b) of title 18, United States Code, is amended—

(1) by striking "or" at the end of paragraph (5);

(2) by striking subparagraph (C) of paragraph (6);

(3) in paragraph (6), by inserting "or" at the end of subparagraph (A); and

(4) by inserting after paragraph (6) the following:

"(7) to a Federal, State, or local governmental entity, if the provider, in good faith, believes that an emergency involving danger of death or serious physical injury to any person requires disclosure without delay of communications relating to the emergency."

(b) REPORTING OF DISCLOSURES.—A government entity that receives a disclosure under this section shall file, no later than 90 days after such disclosure, a report to the Attorney General stating the subparagraph under which the disclosure was made, the date of the disclosure, the entity to which the disclosure was made, the number of customers or subscribers to whom the information disclosed pertained, and the number of communications, if any, that were disclosed. The Attorney General shall publish all such reports into a single report to be submitted to Congress one year after enactment of the bill.

SEC. 103. GOOD FAITH EXCEPTION.

Section 2520(d)(3) of title 18, United States Code, is amended by inserting "or 2511(2)(i)" after "2511(3)".

SEC. 104. INTERNET ADVERTISING OF ILLEGAL DEVICES.

Section 2512(1)(c) of title 18, United States Code, is amended—

(1) by inserting "or disseminates by electronic means" after "or other publication"; and

(2) by inserting "knowing the content of the advertisement and" before "knowing or having reason to know".

SEC. 105. STRENGTHENING PENALTIES.

Section 1030(c) of title 18, United States Code, is amended—

(1) by striking “and” at the end of paragraph (3);

(2) in each of subparagraphs (A) and (C) of paragraph (4), by inserting “except as provided in paragraph (5),” before “a fine under this title”;

(3) by striking the period at the end of paragraph (4)(C) and inserting “; and”; and

(4) by adding at the end the following:

“(5)(A) if the offender knowingly or recklessly causes or attempts to cause serious bodily injury from conduct in violation of subsection (a)(5)(A)(i), a fine under this title or imprisonment for not more than 20 years, or both; and

“(B) if the offender knowingly or recklessly causes or attempts to cause death from conduct in violation of subsection (a)(5)(A)(i), a fine under this title or imprisonment for any term of years or for life, or both.”.

SEC. 106. PROVIDER ASSISTANCE.

(a) SECTION 2703.—Section 2703(e) of title 18, United States Code, is amended by inserting “, statutory authorization” after “subpoena”.

(b) SECTION 2511.—Section 2511(2)(a)(ii) of title 18, United States Code, is amended by inserting “, statutory authorization,” after “court order” the last place it appears.

SEC. 107. EMERGENCIES.

Section 3125(a)(1) of title 18, United States Code, is amended—

(1) by striking “or” at the end of subparagraph (A);

(2) by striking the comma at the end of subparagraph (B) and inserting a semicolon; and

(3) by adding at the end the following:

“(C) an immediate threat to a national security interest; or

“(D) an ongoing attack on a protected computer (as defined in section 1030) that constitutes a crime punishable by a term of imprisonment greater than one year;”.

SEC. 108. PROTECTING PRIVACY.

(a) SECTION 2511.—Section 2511(4) of title 18, United States Code, is amended—

(1) by striking paragraph (b); and

(2) by redesignating paragraph (c) as paragraph (b).

(b) SECTION 2701.—Section 2701(b) of title 18, United States Code, is amended—

(1) in paragraph (1), by inserting “, or in furtherance of any criminal or tortious act in violation of the Constitution or laws of the United States or any State” after “commercial gain”;

(2) in paragraph (1)(A), by striking “one year” and inserting “5 years”;

(3) in paragraph (1)(B), by striking “two years” and inserting “10 years”; and

(4) so that paragraph (2) reads as follows:

“(2) in any other case—

“(A) a fine under this title or imprisonment for not more than one year or both, in the case of a first offense under this paragraph; and

“(B) a fine under this title or imprisonment for not more than 5 years, or both, in the case of an offense under this subparagraph that occurs after a conviction of another offense under this section.”.

(c) PRESENCE OF OFFICER AT SERVICE AND EXECUTION OF WARRANTS FOR COMMUNICATIONS AND CUSTOMER RECORDS.—Section 3105 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following: “The presence of an officer is not required for service or execution of a search warrant directed to a provider of electronic communication service or remote computing service for records or other information pertaining to a subscriber to or customer of such service.”.

TITLE II—OFFICE OF SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGYSEC. 201. ESTABLISHMENT OF OFFICE; DIRECTOR.

(a) ESTABLISHMENT.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—There is hereby established within the Department of Justice an Office of Science and Technology (hereinafter in this title referred to as the “Office”).

(2) AUTHORITY.—The Office shall be under the general authority of the Assistant Attorney General, Office of Justice Programs, and shall be independent of the National Institute of Justice.

(b) DIRECTOR.—The Office shall be headed by a Director, who shall be an individual appointed based on approval by the Office of Personnel Management of the executive qualifications of the individual.

SEC. 202. MISSION OF OFFICE; DUTIES.

(a) MISSION.—The mission of the Office shall be—

(1) to serve as the national focal point for work on law enforcement technology; and

(2) to carry out programs that, through the provision of equipment, training, and technical assistance, improve the safety and effectiveness of law enforcement technology and improve access to such technology by Federal, State, and local law enforcement agencies.

(b) DUTIES.—In carrying out its mission, the Office shall have the following duties:

(1) To provide recommendations and advice to the Attorney General.

(2) To establish and maintain advisory groups (which shall be exempt from the provisions of the Federal Advisory Committee Act (5 U.S.C. App.)) to assess the law enforcement technology needs of Federal, State, and local law enforcement agencies.

(3) To establish and maintain performance standards in accordance with the National Technology Transfer and Advancement Act of 1995 (Public Law 104-113) for, and test and evaluate law enforcement technologies that may be used by, Federal, State, and local law enforcement agencies.

(4) To establish and maintain a program to certify, validate, and mark or otherwise recognize law enforcement technology products that conform to standards established and maintained by the Office in accordance with the National Technology Transfer and Advancement Act of 1995 (Public Law 104-113). The program may, at the discretion of the Office, allow for supplier's declaration of conformity with such standards.

(5) To work with other entities within the Department of Justice, other Federal agencies, and the executive office of the President to establish a coordinated Federal approach on issues related to law enforcement technology.

(6) To carry out research, development, testing, and evaluation in fields that would improve the safety, effectiveness, and efficiency of law enforcement technologies used by Federal, State, and local law enforcement agencies, including, but not limited to—

(A) weapons capable of preventing use by unauthorized persons, including personalized guns;

(B) protective apparel;

(C) bullet-resistant and explosion-resistant glass;

(D) monitoring systems and alarm systems capable of providing precise location information;

(E) wire and wireless interoperable communication technologies;

(F) tools and techniques that facilitate investigative and forensic work, including computer forensics;

(G) equipment for particular use in counterterrorism, including devices and technologies to disable terrorist devices;

(H) guides to assist State and local law enforcement agencies;

(I) DNA identification technologies; and

(J) tools and techniques that facilitate investigations of computer crime.

(7) To administer a program of research, development, testing, and demonstration to improve the interoperability of voice and data public safety communications.

(8) To serve on the Technical Support Working Group of the Department of Defense, and on other relevant interagency panels, as requested.

(9) To develop, and disseminate to State and local law enforcement agencies, technical assistance and training materials for law enforcement personnel, including prosecutors.

(10) To operate the regional National Law Enforcement and Corrections Technology Centers and, to the extent necessary, establish additional centers through a competitive process.

(11) To administer a program of acquisition, research, development, and dissemination of advanced investigative analysis and forensic tools to assist State and local law enforcement agencies in combating cybercrime.

(12) To support research fellowships in support of its mission.

(13) To serve as a clearinghouse for information on law enforcement technologies.

(14) To represent the United States and State and local law enforcement agencies, as requested, in international activities concerning law enforcement technology.

(15) To enter into contracts and cooperative agreements and provide grants, which may require in-kind or cash matches from the recipient, as necessary to carry out its mission.

(16) To carry out other duties assigned by the Attorney General to accomplish the mission of the Office.

(c) COMPETITION REQUIRED.—Except as otherwise expressly provided by law, all research and development carried out by or through the Office shall be carried out on a competitive basis.

(d) INFORMATION FROM FEDERAL AGENCIES.—Federal agencies shall, upon request from the Office and in accordance with Federal law, provide the Office with any data, reports, or other information requested, unless compliance with such request is otherwise prohibited by law.

(e) PUBLICATIONS.—Decisions concerning publications issued by the Office shall rest solely with the Director of the Office.

(f) TRANSFER OF FUNDS.—The Office may transfer funds to other Federal agencies or provide funding to non-Federal entities through grants, cooperative agreements, or contracts to carry out its duties under this section.

(g) ANNUAL REPORT.—The Director of the Office shall include with the budget justification materials submitted to Congress in support of the Department of Justice budget for each fiscal year (as submitted with the budget of the President under section 1105(a) of title 31, United States Code) a report on the activities of the Office. Each such report shall include the following:

(1) For the period of 5 fiscal years beginning with the fiscal year for which the budget is submitted—

(A) the Director's assessment of the needs of Federal, State, and local law enforcement agencies for assistance with respect to law enforcement technology and other matters consistent with the mission of the Office; and

(B) a strategic plan for meeting such needs of such law enforcement agencies.

(2) For the fiscal year preceding the fiscal year for which such budget is submitted, a description of the activities carried out by the Office and an evaluation of the extent to which those activities successfully meet the needs assessed under paragraph (1)(A) in previous reports.

SEC. 203. DEFINITION OF LAW ENFORCEMENT TECHNOLOGY.

For the purposes of this title, the term "law enforcement technology" includes investigative and forensic technologies, corrections technologies, and technologies that support the judicial process.

SEC. 204. ABOLISHMENT OF OFFICE OF SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY OF NATIONAL INSTITUTE OF JUSTICE; TRANSFER OF FUNCTIONS.

(a) TRANSFERS FROM OFFICE WITHIN NIJ.—The Office of Science and Technology of the National Institute of Justice is hereby abolished, and all functions and activities performed immediately before the date of the enactment of this Act by the Office of Science and Technology of the National Institute of Justice are hereby transferred to the Office.

(b) AUTHORITY TO TRANSFER ADDITIONAL FUNCTIONS.—The Attorney General may transfer to the Office any other program or activity of the Department of Justice that the Attorney General, in consultation with the Committee on the Judiciary of the Senate and the Committee on the Judiciary of the House of Representatives, determines to be consistent with the mission of the Office.

(c) TRANSFER OF FUNDS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Any balance of appropriations that the Attorney General determines is available and needed to finance or discharge a function, power, or duty of the Office or a program or activity that is transferred to the Office shall be transferred to the Office and used for any purpose for which those appropriations were originally available. Balances of appropriations so transferred shall—

(A) be credited to any applicable appropriation account of the Office; or

(B) be credited to a new account that may be established on the books of the Department of the Treasury; and shall be merged with the funds already credited to that account and accounted for as one fund.

(2) LIMITATIONS.—Balances of appropriations credited to an account under paragraph (1)(A) are subject only to such limitations as are specifically applicable to that account. Balances of appropriations credited to an account under paragraph (1)(B) are subject only to such limitations as are applicable to the appropriations from which they are transferred.

(d) TRANSFER OF PERSONNEL AND ASSETS.—With respect to any function, power, or duty, or any program or activity, that is transferred to the Office, those employees and assets of the element of the Department of Justice from which the transfer is made that the Attorney General determines are needed to perform that function, power, or duty, or for that program or activity, as the case may be, shall be transferred to the Office.

(e) REPORT ON IMPLEMENTATION.—Not later than 1 year after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Attorney General shall submit to the Committee on the Judiciary of the Senate and the Committee on the Judiciary of the House of Representatives a report on the implementation of this title. The report shall—

(1) identify each transfer carried out pursuant to subsection (b);

(2) provide an accounting of the amounts and sources of funding available to the Office to carry out its mission under existing authorizations and appropriations, and set forth the future funding needs of the Office;

(3) include such other information and recommendations as the Attorney General considers appropriate.

SEC. 205. NATIONAL LAW ENFORCEMENT AND CORRECTIONS TECHNOLOGY CENTERS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Director of the Office shall operate and support National Law Enforcement and Corrections Technology Centers (hereinafter in this section referred to as "Centers") and, to the extent necessary, establish new centers through a merit-based, competitive process.

(b) PURPOSE OF CENTERS.—The purpose of the Centers shall be to—

(1) support research and development of law enforcement technology;

(2) support the transfer and implementation of technology;

(3) assist in the development and dissemination of guidelines and technological standards; and

(4) provide technology assistance, information, and support for law enforcement, corrections, and criminal justice purposes.

(c) ANNUAL MEETING.—Each year, the Director shall convene a meeting of the Centers in order to foster collaboration and communication between Center participants.

(d) REPORT.—Not later than 12 months after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Director shall transmit to the Congress a report assessing the effectiveness of the existing system of Centers and identify the number of Centers necessary to meet the technology needs of Federal, State, and local law enforcement in the United States.

SEC. 206. COORDINATION WITH OTHER ENTITIES WITHIN DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE.

Section 102 of the Omnibus Crime Control and Safe Streets Act of 1968 (42 U.S.C. 3712) is amended in subsection (a)(5) by inserting "coordinate and" before "provide".

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. SENSENBRENNER) and the gentlewoman from Texas (Ms. JACKSON-LEE) each will control 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. SENSENBRENNER).

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks on H.R. 3482.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, our society has become technologically dependent. Computers and related technologies have improved every aspect of our lives, our health care, our education, and our security. Unfortunately, this same technology has also facilitated terrorist and criminal activity alike. At the stroke of a key, someone can cause millions of dollars of damage to our economy as well as threaten our national security and the public's safety.

This threat is not new; but after the September 11 attacks, the risks are greater. Even prior to the attacks, the Committee on the Judiciary's Subcommittee on Crime, Terrorism, and Homeland Security was working on legislation to improve Federal law to protect the Nation from cybercrime and cyberterrorism.

Last summer, the subcommittee held three hearings on the growing threat of cybercrime and cyberterrorism. Those hearings highlighted the fact that cybercrime knows no borders or restraints and can substantially harm the American people and our economy.

The law enforcement officials and private industry representatives at the hearings agreed that better coordination, cooperation and information-sharing were needed as well as stronger penalties for cyberattacks.

The U.S.A. PATRIOT Act, which the Committee on the Judiciary adopted much of H.R. 2915, an earlier cybersecurity bill introduced by the gentleman from Texas (Chairman SMITH), and began to improve the Nation's cybersecurity, this bill, the Cyber Security Enhancement Act of 2002, continues that work.

The bill strengthens penalties to better reflect the seriousness of cyberattacks, assists State and local law enforcement through better grant management, accountability and dissemination of technical advice and information, helps protect the Nation's critical infrastructure, and enhances privacy protections.

On May 8, the Committee on the Judiciary reported this bill favorably by voice vote. The bill as introduced and reported out of committee contained an authorization for the National Infrastructure Protection Center within the Department of Justice.

Since that time, it appears that the center will be transferred out of the Department of Justice into the new Department of Homeland Security proposed in H.R. 5005. Accordingly, the committee has removed that authorization to be consistent with H.R. 5005 in this amended version of H.R. 3482. The bill also contains a few technical changes as well.

H.R. 3482, the Cyber Security Enhancement Act of 2002, is designed to increase the cybersecurity of our Nation against criminal and terrorist attacks. As one of the most technologically advanced nations in the world, we must deal with a new vulnerability, the interconnectedness of our Nation's economy and national security. I urge Members to support this bill.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise to join the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. SENSENBRENNER) in support of H.R. 3482, the Cyber Security Act of 2002. I support the concept of allowing internal service providers to give information to law enforcement officials when emergency threat of death or serious bodily injury exists.

In general, information held by an ISP is private information which is entitled to protection as such. In fact, we have worked very hard to ensure that the privacy of Internet users and providers have been secured. This is a new way that America provides its information and communication; and, therefore, we believe the privacy issues are extremely important.

Under current law, an ISP is authorized to release information to law enforcement officials when the ISP reasonably believes an immediate danger exists. For an ISP to reasonably believe an immediate danger exists, an assessment of relevant information must be made. However, if the FBI presents information which an ISP believes, if true, would present a threat of death or serious bodily injury, the ISP dispatcher on duty should not have to wake up the corporate general counsel to assess the information to determine if it can be reasonably believed, particularly as relates to saving lives. If there is time to do all that, there is time to go to a magistrate or judge and get a search warrant. Accordingly, I would support changing "reasonably believed" to "believes in good faith" as the bill does.

I appreciate the adjustments Subcommittee Chairman SMITH made to the bill to address concerns that we had with the bill and Ranking Member SCOTT had with the bill, including adding a reporting requirement for law enforcement officials to report on their use of the provision during the year following enactment so that we can see how it is being used. This is in keeping with the balance that I think is important in fighting terrorism and providing law enforcement officers with the tools that they need, as well as balancing the rights of Americans. It is one thing to use this emergency authority for genuine emergencies involving threats to life or safety. It is another thing to use it in a calculated manner to get around the regular requirement of obtaining a warrant from a detached magistrate or judge before being given access to private information. Since the subscriber may never know of the access by law enforcement to his or her private information, there will be no way to know if they are assessing information erroneously or improperly. With this particular requirement, providing this information in the year following, this will help determine that. With the reporting requirement, we should be able to assess whether this provision is being used as contemplated and not abused.

With this understanding of the bill, Mr. Speaker, I support it and urge my colleagues to vote for it.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Texas (Mr. SMITH), the subcommittee chairman.

Mr. SMITH of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I thank the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary for yielding me this time.

Mr. Speaker, many people think of cybercrime simply as a form of vandalism involving hacking or planting viruses. Cybercrime is much more than this. It can devastate our businesses, economy and national infrastructure. Cybercrime also includes child pornography, which terrorizes our children and our families. Criminals use computer technology to steal life savings and the identities of unsuspecting individuals. These attacks threaten the lives and the livelihoods of many innocent victims.

Mr. Speaker, a crime is still a crime, whether it occurs on the Internet or on the street. We are in a war against terrorism. According to a recent newspaper article, "Unsettling signs of al Qaeda's aims and skills in cyberspace have led some government experts to conclude that terrorists are at the threshold of using the Internet as a direct instrument of bloodshed."

The article stated, "Most significantly, perhaps, U.S. investigators have found evidence in the logs that mark a browser's path through the Internet that al Qaeda operators spent time on sites that offer software and programming instructions for the digital switches that run power, water, transport and communication grids."

Cybercrimes and cybercriminals know no borders. As long as there is technology, cybercrime will exist. We must improve our Nation's cybersecurity and strengthen our criminal laws to prevent, deter and respond to such attacks.

This legislation, H.R. 3482, the Cyber Security Enhancement Act of 2002, increases penalties to better reflect the seriousness of cybercrime, enhances Federal, State and local law enforcement efforts through better coordination, and assists State and local law enforcement officials through better grant management, accountability and dissemination of technical advice and information. The Information Technology Association of America stated that the bill is important for strengthening guidelines on sentencing people who are convicted of cybercrimes. The Information Technology Industry Council concluded that the bill will remove obstacles to information-sharing between the public and private sectors to strengthen Internet security.

Mr. Speaker, we must protect our Nation and our economy from the growing threat of cyberattacks. Penalties and law enforcement capabilities must be able to prevent and deter cybercriminals. Until we secure our cyberinfrastructure, a few keystrokes and an Internet connection is all one needs to disable the economy or endanger lives. A mouse can be just as dangerous as a bullet or a bomb. That is why I urge my colleagues to support this legislation.

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from New York (Mr. BOEHLERT), the chairman of the Committee on Science.

Mr. BOEHLERT. I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of H.R. 3482, the Cyber Security Enhancement Act of 2002. I want to thank the gentleman from Texas (Mr. SMITH), the Subcommittee on Crime, Terrorism and Homeland Security chairman, for his excellent work in bringing this bipartisan bill to the floor. I also want to thank the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. SENSENBRENNER), Judiciary chairman, former chairman of the Committee on Science, where he received his best training. From his years of service on the Committee on Science, the gentleman from Wisconsin understands that research and development are critical weapons in the war on terrorism as well as our fight against all forms of crime. We know that the next war, the current war, the ongoing war, is going to be won as much in the laboratory as on the battlefield.

Mr. Speaker, title I of the legislation enhances penalties for cybercrime and allows for better cooperation between law enforcement and the private sector to investigate cybercrime. This is critical. However, in the interest of time, I will limit my comments to title II of the bill before the House today.

Title II establishes an Office of Science and Technology within the Office of Justice Programs at the Justice Department. It is a needed step forward in our fight against all forms of crime and terrorism. I have said repeatedly, the war on terrorism, like the Cold War, will be won in the laboratory as much as on the battlefield. That means that, as in the Cold War, we must properly organize our government to put the most into and get the most out of our academic, government and industry laboratories. Criminal use of technology, specifically information technology, is now commonplace. We rely on computers, the Internet, cell phones and pagers every day. But so, too, do the criminals and terrorists.

Increasingly criminals are becoming more and more sophisticated. Online fraud, identity theft, child pornography, computer intrusions, hacking and introduction of viruses are all on the rise. Unfortunately, U.S. law enforcement is often ill-equipped to counter this criminal high tech trend. It is particularly true for State and local law enforcement that often lack the resources, training and expertise to effectively use advanced information technology to stop crime. Currently the Justice Department does support the development of new technologies, mostly through the National Institute of Justice, to serve the needs of law enforcement and corrections agencies, but the effort as it stands today is unfocused and limited.

That is why I have sought for over 3 years to establish an office for science and technology within the Department of Justice with the mission of improving the technical capabilities of law enforcement at all levels. The bill before us today would do just that. Let me also note that this bill would not create a new bureaucracy. In fact, the Congressional Budget Office has scored this bill as revenue-neutral. Rather, the bill would transfer existing assets within the Justice Department to give the agency an improved science and technology capability to better respond to threats posed by technically savvy criminals and terrorists. This is a commonsense proposition. U.S. law enforcement agencies traditionally do not have research and development capabilities like those found in the military. Rather than creating a new R&D infrastructure for law enforcement, we must find ways to help law enforcement gain access to the scientific expertise found in our colleges and universities as well as our defense and national laboratories.

H.R. 3482 does this by explicitly authorizing DOJ's existing network of regional technology assistance centers, the National Law Enforcement and Corrections Technology Centers. These centers are able to leverage existing defense capabilities in sensitive areas such as information security, chemical, biological and nuclear security to provide Federal, State and local law enforcement access to the best technologies available to meet these emerging threats.

In my home district, one such center is leading the Nation in the fight against cybercrime and all forms of crime. This is the National Law Enforcement and Corrections Technology Center, Northeast Region, located at the Air Force Research Laboratory Information Directorate at Rome, New York. A prominent example of the center's work was the establishment of the highly successful Utica Arson Strike Force in 1997. In less than a year, the city went from worst to first in the Nation in the rate of arson convictions. Leveraging the high tech expertise of the Air Force research laboratory, the center was able to create affordable technology tools for the Utica task force's use.

While the track record of the center and others around the Nation is impressive, the amount of resources available for technical assistance is meager. The entire center system, as well as the science and technology function within the Department of Justice, needs a clear congressional mandate and an adequate budget. This bill would bring needed focus to R&D in support of law enforcement and establish the Office of Science and Technology as a key liaison between DOJ and other Federal research agencies.

Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Science recently heard testimony from a distinguished panel of the National Academy of Sciences about the need for greater science and technology investment to combat terrorism. For this reason, the Committee on Science unanimously approved the creation of an under secretary for research and development in the proposed Homeland Security Department. The bill before us today is consistent with this vision. As we move forward in this process, I hope to forge a close working partnership between DOJ's Office of Science and Technology and the new Homeland Security Department.

I look forward to working with Chairman SENSENBRENNER, Chairman SMITH and all members of the Committee on the Judiciary to ensure appropriate coordination of effort to help combat terrorism and to ensure that more and more State and local first responders have access to first-rate scientific and technological expertise.

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume. I rise to support this legislation. I just want to make note that this legislation has provided a reporting requirement placed in the bill to help address the concerns, making sure that the legislation is used properly. I would have liked to have added additional safeguards dealing with the unreasonable search and seizure, but I believe that the reporting requirement will go a long way to addressing that concern, and I would ask my colleagues to support this legislation.

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in strong support of H.R. 3482, the Cyber Security Enhancement Act of 2002.

This resolution achieves several goals. The act will serve as a national focal point for science and technology and it will also aid in the development and dissemination of cyber law enforcement and technology.

Moreover, it will make technical assistance available to Federal, State, and local law enforcement agencies which is increasingly critical for our national security and infrastructure.

Crimes of fraud in computers with protected information or computers used by the Federal Government are addressed in the legislation.

A program will be established and maintained to certify, validate, and mark, or otherwise recognize law enforcement technology products that conform to standards set by the National Infrastructure Protection Center.

The National Infrastructure Protection Center will operate for regional national law enforcement and corrections technology centers and, to the extent necessary, establish additional centers through a competitive process.

This bill further provides that law enforcement agencies utilize and establish forensic technology, and technologies that support the judicial process.

The use of these forensic tools will assist State and local law enforcement agencies in combating cybercrime. In addition, penalties will increase for violations where the offender knowingly causes death or serious bodily injury.

Mr. Speaker, I urge this body to support this measure as it addresses the growing and increasingly visible problem of cybercrime.

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. CULBERSON). The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. SENSENBRENNER) that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 3482, as amended.

The question was taken.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In the opinion of the Chair, two-thirds of those present have voted in the affirmative.

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 8 of rule XX and the Chair's prior announcement, further proceedings on this motion will be postponed.

AMERICAN LEGION AMENDMENTS ACT

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 3988) to amend title 36, United States Code, to clarify the requirements for eligibility in the American Legion.

The Clerk read as follows:

H.R. 3988

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. CLARIFICATION OF REQUIREMENTS FOR ELIGIBILITY IN THE AMERICAN LEGION.

Section 21703(2) of title 36, United States Code, is amended by inserting "during or" after "continues to serve honorably".

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. SENSENBRENNER) and the gentlewoman from Texas (Ms. JACKSON-LEE) each will control 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. SENSENBRENNER).

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks and to include extraneous material on H.R. 3988 under consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 3988 would amend the Federal charter of the American Legion.

□ 1430

Current law makes a veteran eligible to become a member of the legion if that veteran has served since "August 2, 1990 through the date of cessation of hostilities as decided by the United States Government" and was "honorably discharged or separated from that service or continues to serve honorably after that period."

The United States Government has never issued a cessation of hostilities declaration for the Persian Gulf War. For those who are no longer serving, they have discharge papers stating that they honorably served during that period. Servicemen who have served since August 2, 1990, and are still on active duty, have no discharge papers for the period, and are not serving after the cessation of hostilities, but during that period.

The amendment would simply change the standard for qualification for membership in the legion by adding the words "during or" so that it states "continues to serve during or after that period" to make it clear that legion membership is open to active duty personnel who served during Operations Desert Shield, Desert Storm, and all of the operations that followed in Iraq, Bosnia, Kosovo, and Afghanistan.

Mr. Speaker, I urge the House to pass H.R. 3988 to make this change in the Federal charter of the American Legion.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, it is always important to respect our veterans and to provide additional assistance to them.

This bill makes a technical amendment to the membership qualifications language of the Federal charter of the American Legion. Currently, under the statute, veterans who get out of service are eligible to become members of the American Legion if they served since "August 2, 1990 through the date of cessation of hostilities, as decided by the United States Government" and "was honorably discharged or separated from that service or continues to serve honorably after that period."

Under the charter, however, the U.S. Government has never issued a cessation of hostilities decision signifying the end to a conflict. Those who are no longer serving have discharge papers stating they served honorably during that period, so they are unaffected. However, servicemen who served since August 2, 1990, and are still on active duty have no discharge papers for the period, and serve without the benefit of a U.S. Government-issued cessation of hostilities decision.

The amendment would simply change the standard for qualification to say a veteran that "continues to serve during or after that period" will qualify for membership. This makes it clear that membership is open to thousands of active duty personnel who served during Operations Desert Shield, Desert Storm, and all of the operations that followed in Iraq, Bosnia, Kosovo and Afghanistan, thereby respecting these particular service personnel and veterans and allowing them to participate in a very important and certainly honorable organization, the American Legion.

"The American Legion was chartered by Congress in 1919 as a patriotic, mutual-help, wartime veterans organization." The 2.8 million-member American Legion is the Nation's largest veterans organization with nearly 15,000 American Legion posts worldwide. The Legion assists our Nation's communities through "fundraising programs, educational activities, library, and museum services, and many others."

As has been stated, this is a technical amendment that allows thousands upon thousands of veterans and service personnel and others to join the American Legion, and I believe this will add vitality to the American Legion.

The Legion assists our nations communities through "fund-raising program, educational activities, library and museum services, and many others."

As has been stated, this Amendment simply allow more veterans to join in the good works of the American Legion. This will provide additional vitality to the Legion and I urge my colleagues to support this Act.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. GEKAS).

Mr. GEKAS. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

This is an opportunity for us to pay tribute to the American Legion that goes beyond the purpose of the bill, which is laudable, and that is to allow the legion to expand its membership by inclusion of certain categories of veterans who heretofore have not been able to qualify.

But I want to bring into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD remembrances of the American Legion as a young boy growing up in central Pennsylvania. Most of the parades and most of the patriotic functions of that era were either sponsored by or joined in by the American Legion, but that was not all. They also sponsored teenage baseball organizational sports, they also sponsored essay and oratorical contests in the high schools, and in a variety of ways went beyond their chief function of honoring the veteran, because they were part of the actual life of the community in so many different ways.

Then the other portion of the American Legion that sticks hard to my memory is that during the time I served in the Armed Forces myself, there were two refuges for us in the various bases in which we served, and in particular, I remember in Fort Knox, Kentucky, the USO was always there on the weekends for the purpose of providing extra services and relaxation for the veterans who were serving or the members of the Armed Forces who were serving at Fort Knox, and also the American Legion always had some kind of hostmanship-type of function to welcome the soldiers who were stationed at Fort Knox.

So for a whole series of remembrances for this Member, we support the bill and hope that many more veterans will be joining the ranks of the American Legion in the next several years.

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in strong support of H.R. 3988, the American Legion Amendments Act. I urge my colleagues to support this timely measure.

This legislation amends the charter of the American Legion to revise eligibility for the organization to those individuals who have served honorably in the Armed Forces during or after specific periods. Presently, service members are only eligible if they have served during specific periods, including designated windows for World War I, World War II, Korea, Vietnam, Lebanon/Grenada, Panama, and Desert Storm. Because the window governing Desert Storm has not closed, under current law, Desert Storm veterans are not eligible to join the American Legion. This measure corrects this problem.

The American Legion was founded and chartered by Congress in 1919. Its first major accomplishment was the creation of the U.S. Veterans Bureau, which was the precursor to the Veterans' Administration. Significant accomplishments of the Legion include the enactment of the G.I. bill, and the establishment of the cabinet-level department of Veterans Affairs.

The Legion also led the fight for an investigation into the use of Agent Orange in Vietnam, the investigations into gulf-war illnesses among Desert Storm veterans, and for the constitutional amendment to prohibit physical desecration of the American flag.

Like its fellow veterans service organizations, the American Legion offers valuable service to its membership, including, but not limited to: seeking discharge upgrades, record corrections, education benefits, disability compensation matters and pension eligibility. The Legion also has a long and distinguished history of community service.

Given our current war on terrorism, I believe it is appropriate for Congress to recognize, expand and promote the efforts of our veterans service organizations. For this reason, I urge my colleagues to support this bill.

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I have no further speakers, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. CULBERSON). The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. SENSENBRENNER) that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 3988.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

AMVETS CHARTER AMENDMENT ACT

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 3214) to amend the charter of the AMVETS organization.

The Clerk read as follows:

H.R. 3214

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. AMENDMENTS TO AMVETS CHARTER.

(a) NAME OF ORGANIZATION.—(1) Sections 22701(a) and 22706 of title 36, United States Code, are amended by striking “AMVETS (American Veterans of World War II, Korea, and Vietnam)” and inserting “AMVETS (American Veterans)”.

(2)(A) The heading of chapter 227 of such title is amended to read as follows:

“CHAPTER 227—AMVETS (AMERICAN VETERANS)”.

(B) The item relating to such chapter in the table of chapters at the beginning of subtitle II of such title is amended to read as follows:

“227. AMVETS (AMERICAN VETERANS) 22701”.

(b) GOVERNING BODY.—Section 22704(c)(1) of such title is amended by striking “seven national vice commanders” and all that follows through “a judge advocate,” and inserting “two national vice commanders, a finance officer, a judge advocate, a chaplain, six national district commanders.”.

(c) HEADQUARTERS AND PRINCIPAL PLACE OF BUSINESS.—Section 22708 of such title is amended—

(1) by striking “the District of Columbia” in the first sentence and inserting “Maryland”; and

(2) by striking “the District of Columbia” in the second sentence and inserting “Maryland”.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. SENSENBRENNER) and the gentlewoman from Texas (Ms. JACKSON-LEE) each will control 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. SENSENBRENNER).

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks and include extraneous material on H.R. 3214, the bill currently under consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 3214 would amend the Federal charter for the American Veterans of World War II, Korea and Vietnam to American Veterans to more accurately reflect the membership of AMVETS. AMVETS membership now includes not only veterans from those three wars, but also anyone who served honorably after 1940, and the National Guardsmen and Reservists.

At the AMVETS annual convention in 1998, the delegates voted for an official name change from American Veterans of World War II, Korea, and Vietnam to American Veterans to more accurately reflect the membership. Additionally, AMVETS has voted to change the structure of their governing body. This bill contains language to reflect the structure change in the statute.

Finally, because AMVETS has moved the location of their headquarters from the District of Columbia to Lanham, Maryland, the “Headquarters and principal place of business” section of their charter needs to be changed to indicate that they are now located in Maryland. In order for these changes to be recognized by the Department of Veterans Affairs, the AMVETS Federal charter must be amended, and this bill does that.

Mr. Speaker, I urge the House to pass H.R. 3214, and I reserve the balance of my time.

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, the legislation that we have before us, H.R. 3214, would amend the Federal charter of the American veterans of World War II, Korea, and Vietnam to reflect changes made at its 1998 convention. It is extremely important to ensure that we respond to the request of these valiant and heroic servicemen and women.

Their original charter, received in 1947, has been amended by Congress over the years to give membership to Korean War veterans and Vietnam veterans, and to reflect other changing characteristics of the organization.

In 1998, at the AMVETS annual convention, the delegates voted for an official name change of American veterans of World War II, Korea, and Vietnam to "American Veterans" to more accurately reflect the membership of AMVETS. Additionally, AMVETS voted to change the structure of their governing body. The organization also voted to change the location of their headquarters from the District of Columbia to Lanham, Maryland. Therefore, the "Headquarters and principal place of business" section of their charter needs to be changed to indicate that they are now located in Maryland.

In order for these changes to be recognized by the Department of Veterans Affairs, the AMVETS Federal charter must be amended. This bill will accomplish that and allow them to continue to do the service that they do on behalf of the American people and as well to continue to honor the veterans who participate in this organization.

I support H.R. 3214 as it would amend the Federal charter of the American Veterans of World War II, Korea, and Vietnam (AMVETS), to reflect changes made at its 1998 convention. Their original charter, received in 1947, has been amended by Congress over the years to give membership to Korean War veterans and Vietnam veterans, and to reflect other changing characteristics of the organization.

In 1998, at the AMVETS annual convention, the delegates voted for an official name change from American Veterans of World War II, Korea, and Vietnam to "American Veterans" to more accurately reflect the membership of AMVETS. Additionally, the AMVETS voted to change the structure of their governing body. The organization also voted to change the location of their headquarters from the District of Columbia to Lanham, Maryland. Therefore, the "Headquarters and principal place to business" section of their charter needs to be changed to indicate they are now located in Maryland.

In order for these changes to be recognized by the Department of Veterans Affairs the AMVETS federal charter must be amended. This bill will accomplish all of this.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. GEKAS).

Mr. GEKAS. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

This time, of course, I want to speak about the AMVETS who, in Pennsylvania, throughout the time that I served in the legislature, continuously participated in legislative action that pertained to veterans. On the question of veterans preference in civil service examinations and placement, in veterans benefits of all types, and in the question that arose from time to time on the legitimacy of when certain holidays were to be observed: Memorial Day, Veteran's Day back then, which was Armistice Day, et cetera.

So the AMVETS themselves, just like the American Legion aforementioned, have participated in civic, as well as neighborhood, events throughout Pennsylvania and, I am sure, throughout the Nation.

I wanted the record to be complete that this veterans organization, just as the American Legion, have been a part of the neighborhood for many, many years and will continue to expand now that we know the parameters, through this legislation, will have been expanded.

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Let me just simply say that today as we stand here on this floor, we have young men and women fighting for us in Afghanistan, young men and women serving in Guantanamo Bay, Cuba. This is important legislation, as the previous legislation was, to make procedural changes for our vets; and we honor them as we amend this particular legislation, and I would ask my colleagues to support it.

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in strong support of H.R. 3214, the AMVETS Charter Amendment Act. I urge my colleagues to support this timely measure.

This legislation amends the charter of the AMVETS organization to: change the meaning of AMVETS to American veterans, revises the composition of its governing body, and provides for its headquarters and place of business to move from the District of Columbia to Maryland.

AMVETS, which previously stood for the American Veterans of World War II, Korea and Vietnam, was founded in 1944 out of the belief that WWII Veterans needed an organization that represented their generation. In the following decades, veterans from Korea and Vietnam were permitted to join through charter modifications made by Congress.

Like its fellow veterans service organizations, AMVETS offers valuable services to its membership, including, but not limited to: seeking discharge upgrades, record corrections, education benefits, disability compensation matters and pension eligibility. AMVETS also has a long and distinguished history of community service.

Given our current war on terrorism, I believe it is appropriate for Congress to recognize, expand and promote the efforts of our veterans service organizations. For these reasons, I urge my colleagues to support this measure.

Mr. BILIRAKIS. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of H.R. 3214, a bill I introduced to amend the Federal charter for the AMVETS organization. The bill makes a number of simple changes to the organization's current charter, which was first approved in 1947.

First, my bill changes the meaning of AMVETS from American Veterans of World War II, Korea and Vietnam to American veterans. AMVETS was founded on December 10, 1944, in Kansas City, Missouri. It was born out of the desire for WWII veterans to have their own organization.

Overtime, AMVETS' charter has been amended to allow veterans from following wars to join the organization. In 1984, the charter was amended to allow anyone who served honorably after 1940 to join the veterans' group. As a result, its current name does not encompass this broader membership. H.R. 3214 would correct this discrepancy and allow the organization's name to more adequately reflect its current membership. This name change was also approved by the organization's members at their 1998 annual convention.

In 1961, AMVETS modified the structure of its governing body. However, its current charter still reflects its old organizational structure. Therefore, H.R. 3214 also revises the organization's Federal charter to reflect the new composition of AMVETS' governing body.

Finally, since the approval of the original charter, the organization has relocated their headquarters from the District of Columbia to Lanham, Maryland. H.R. 3214 amends the original AMVETS charter to provide for its headquarters and principal place of business to be in Maryland rather than the District of Columbia.

I want to thank Chairman SENSENBRENNER, Subcommittee Chairman GEKAS, full Committee Ranking Member CONYERS and Subcommittee Ranking member SHEILA JACKSON-LEE for their assistance in moving this legislation.

H.R. 3214 is noncontroversial and I urge my colleagues to support the legislation.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Speaker, as an original cosponsor of H.R. 3214, the AMVETS Charter Amendment Act, I am pleased this important measure has been considered and favorably reported by the Committee on Judiciary. This measure amends the AMVETS charter to bring the charter into conformance with current practices. It deserves the support of every Member.

Mr. Speaker, I also want to thank the gentleman from Florida, MIKE BILIRAKIS, for his leadership on this issue. As the author of H.R. 3214, MIKE BILIRAKIS has been a strong and committed advocate for H.R. 3214 and his efforts in large measure are responsible for this important legislation being considered by the House today.

Again, I urge all of my colleagues to support passage of H.R. 3214, the AMVETS Charter Amendment Act.

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. SENSENBRENNER) that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 3214.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

VETERANS OF FOREIGN WARS CHARTER AMENDMENT ACT

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 3838) to amend the charter of the Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States organization to make members of the armed forces who receive special pay for duty subject to hostile fire or imminent danger eligible for membership in the organization, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read as follows:

H.R. 3838

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. AMENDMENTS TO VETERANS OF FOREIGN WARS OF THE UNITED STATES CHARTER.

(a) ELIGIBILITY FOR MEMBERSHIP OF INDIVIDUALS RECEIVING SPECIAL PAY FOR DUTY SUBJECT TO HOSTILE FIRE OR IMMINENT DANGER.—Section 230103 of title 36, United States Code, is amended—

(1) by striking “or” at the end of paragraph (1);

(2) by striking the period at the end of paragraph (2) and inserting “; or”; and

(3) by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

“(3) in an area which entitled the individual to receive special pay for duty subject to hostile fire or imminent danger under section 310 of title 37.”.

(b) CLARIFICATION OF PURPOSES OF THE CORPORATION.—Section 230102 of such title is amended in the matter preceding paragraph (1) by inserting “charitable,” before “and educational.”.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. SENSENBRENNER) and the gentlewoman from Texas (Ms. JACKSON-LEE) each will control 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. SENSENBRENNER).

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks and include extraneous material on H.R. 3838, the bill currently under consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 3838 would amend the Federal charter of the Veterans of Foreign Wars to allow any member of the Armed Forces who received hostile fire or imminent danger pay to be a member of the VFW. The language would allow veterans from conflict areas such as Somalia or Kosovo to be eligible for membership in the VFW.

Currently, VFW membership is limited to those who have honorably served in the Armed Forces and who have received a campaign medal for service or those who served honorably for a specific period on the Korean peninsula.

□ 1445

Without this amendment, members of the Armed Forces who served under equally dangerous conditions, such as those experienced in the campaign medal service in Korea, are not eligible for VFW membership.

The bill also adds the word “charitable” to the purpose of the VFW. VFW members volunteer millions of hours to local communities. Although volunteerism has always been a large part of the mission of the VFW, in some States the VFW is being denied qualification as a charitable organization because “charitable” is not included in their charter language.

These amendments reflect the language of two resolutions approved by the voting delegates of the VFW at their national convention in Milwaukee, Wisconsin. I urge the House to pass this bill to ratify the changes to the VFW Federal charter, which have been approved by the membership.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise to support this legislation. This bill amends the Federal charter of the Veterans of Foreign Wars, VFW, to allow any members of the armed services or Armed Forces who have received hostile fire or imminent-danger pay to be a member of the VFW, and that is a great honor for so many of our men and women who have served in the United States military.

Without this amendment, members of the Armed Forces who have served under equally dangerous conditions as those experienced in campaign medal service in Korea and in conflict areas such as Somalia or Kosovo are not eligible for VFW membership.

The act also amends the charter of the VFW to include the word “charitable” as one of the purposes. VFW members have provided substantial amounts of time and volunteer efforts in their communities and to the needy. This will prevent some States from denying the VFW qualification as a charitable organization under 501(c) of the Tax Code simply because the word “charitable” is not mentioned in the charter.

In Texas, there are tens of thousands of members of the VFW. In my district there are thousands of VFW members, and I can assure the Members they are outstanding members of our community. They always provide us with honor and grace in our patriotic parade, and they serve us in the Memorial Day commemoration as well as the Veterans Day commemoration, along with the many other veterans groups. Also, they are there to serve the community when we are in need.

As I speak today, I pay tribute to all of the veterans groups in the State of Texas, in the 18th Congressional District, and, of course, this Nation. These members provide critical assistance to other veterans, they help raise funds for the March of Dimes, and they provide scholarships to our Nation's youth.

I urge my colleagues to support this measure, which will simply allow veterans of succeeding conflicts entry into these esteemed veterans organizations. Again, I would be remiss without acknowledging the brave men and women who serve us now in Afghanistan, throughout the Nation, and throughout the world.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. GEKAS).

Mr. GEKAS. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me.

Mr. Speaker, this time I rise to pose some reflections on the VFW. Many people will recall historically that during the Truman years there was an act of terrorism right in this Chamber, when terrorists of a different era shot up the entire Chamber here, wounding several people.

One of the Members of the House at that time was the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Jimmy Van Zandt from Altoona, Pennsylvania, who helped to apprehend one of the terrorists with a gallant leap into the back portion of the balcony, and brought him or helped bring him to justice.

But more than that, this Jimmy Van Zandt was also, prior to that, national commander of the VFW. He holds a place of honor in that organization for his special efforts and for his service directly to the country.

Then there was Dominique DeFrancesco, also from central Pennsylvania, served as national commander of the American Legion when, in 1991, he joined then President Bush in the 50-year commemorations at Pearl Harbor.

These are the kinds of devoted veteran citizens who are in the background of what we do here today when we enlarge the membership potential of their organizations.

But the most important portion of the VFW, as far as I am concerned, is because the last 30 years or more I have participated as a judge in the VFW's annual Voice of Democracy contest. Here is a contest of radio-spoken essays by our high school students who speak on what America means to them, or some other subject matter having to do with patriotism. In this way, the VFW spreads the notion of loyalty to our Nation, service to our communities, and patriotism. For that, I salute the VFW and urge everyone to support the legislation that is in front of us.

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, let me just say that just a few minutes ago we have supported H.R. 3988, H.R. 3838, and H.R. 3214, legislative initiatives helping our veterans.

I want to acknowledge and applaud the President for his recent pronouncement of allowing those who are serving in our military to apply for citizenship immediately, without having to wait a period of time previously embodied in our law.

With that in mind, Mr. Speaker, I think as member of the Subcommittee on Immigration, Border Security, and Claims of the Committee on the Judiciary, I hope that the Congress will move swiftly to pass 245(i) that will allow immigrants to access legalization and become citizens. This is long overdue. This is legislation that recognizes that we do not equate immigration to terrorism, and it is as patriotic as the legislation that we have just passed today.

So I hope that the Congress will move quickly on this legislation, and I rise again to support the legislation before us and ask my colleagues to support this legislation as we honor the men and women who have served us in the United States military and now our veterans; and as we honor those, as well, who serve us every day fighting for our freedoms.

I know the veterans of the nation, are sympathetic to doing the right thing for all of us! Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, just let me make it clear, this bill has nothing to do with the immigration law, lest anybody have a misimpression on this. It is legislation that changes the qualification for membership in the VFW, as well as makes it clear that the VFW is a charitable organization. Both of these changes were requested by the delegates to the last VFW annual convention that was held in August of last year in my hometown of Milwaukee, Wisconsin.

The best way we can help our veterans, I think, is by not confusing the issue. Let us help our veterans by doing what they asked us to do, which is to allow them to expand their membership, as well as to get some State departments of revenue off their back claiming that what the VFW does is not charitable in nature.

I think all of us in this Chamber know that the VFW is a legitimate and honorable charitable organization, and I think that we can send the message very clearly by amending their charter to get the State tax departments off their backs so that they can continue to do their very meritorious work.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, as the sponsor of H.R. 3838, I rise to urge all of my colleagues to support this legislation that will amend the Congressional charter of the Veterans of Foreign Wars (VFW). As Chairman of the Veterans' Affairs Committee, I was pleased to introduce this bill on March 4, 2002, at the request of the VFW to allow Members of the armed forces who have received hostile fire or imminent danger pay to be eligible for VFW membership.

Mr. Speaker, I want to especially commend the Chairman of the Judiciary Committee, Mr. SENSENBRENNER; the Committee's Ranking Member, Mr. CONYERS, the Chairman of the Judiciary Subcommittee on Immigration and Claims; Mr. GEKAS; and the Subcommittee's Ranking Member, Ms. JACKSON-LEE, for their attention to this matter in moving the bill through the committee and to the floor for House consideration.

This bipartisan amendment to the VFW charter simply allows the organization to keep up with the times as the nature of our Nation's military operations has changed. The VFW's charter currently requires a veteran to have received a campaign medal in order to join the organization. But the dangerous contingency operations our servicemembers have participated in over the past twenty or so years have not resulted in the award of campaign medals. Servicemen doing their duty in global hot spots have faced the type of risks that should qualify them for VFW membership. My bill would remove this barrier to membership in a way that is consistent with the type of military service the VFW has always required.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 3838 would also address a technical problem the VFW has occasionally encountered with the language of its charter regarding its purposes as an organization. The VFW has maintained a tax-exempt, nonprofit status, but some states do not want to qualify it as a tax-exempt charitable organization despite its long history of charitable work in communities across America, because its charter does not contain the word "charitable". Well, Congress can and should fix this relatively simply problem by inserting the word "charitable" as one of its purposes in order to silence anyone who insists on elevating form over substance.

Mr. Speaker, with roots that go back more than a century to the Spanish-American War, the Veterans of Foreign Wars has an admirable history of helping its fellow veterans, their communities and their Nation. This legislation will help to ensure that the VFW continues to perform these services in the 21st century and beyond. H.R. 3838 deserves the support of every House member and I urge its approval.

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in strong support of H.R. 3838, the Veterans of Foreign Wars Charter Amendment act. I urge my colleagues to support this timely measure.

This legislation amends the charter of the Veterans of Foreign Wars Organization to make members of the armed forces who receive special pay for duty that is subject to hostile fire or imminent danger eligible for membership in the organization. This change would allow veterans of operations in Somalia and Kosovo to become eligible for VFW membership.

The VFW is one of the oldest veterans service organizations in the country, and has a long and hallowed history. The VFW was founded in 1899 for soldiers returning from the Spanish-American war and Philippine insurrection. It was instrumental in creating the Veterans Administration and its subsequent elevation to cabinet level status.

The VFW participates in numerous community service efforts, and assists its members in seeking discharge upgrades, record corrections, education benefits, disability compensation matters and pension eligibility.

Given our current military environment, it is appropriate for Congress to both recognize and promote the efforts of our Veterans Service Organizations. Accordingly, I urge my colleagues to support this bill.

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. CULBERSON). The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. SENSENBRENNER) that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 3838.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

HONORING INVENTION OF MODERN AIR-CONDITIONING BY DR. WILLIS H. CARRIER ON OCCASION OF ITS 100TH ANNIVERSARY

Mr. SHAYS. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and agree to the concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 413) honoring the invention of modern air-conditioning by Dr. Willis H. Carrier on the occasion of its 100th anniversary.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. CON. RES. 413

Whereas on July 17, 1902, Dr. Willis H. Carrier submitted designs to a printing plant in Brooklyn, New York, for equipment to control temperature, humidity, ventilation, and air quality, marking the birth of modern air conditioning;

Whereas air-conditioning has become an integral technology enabling the advancement of society through improvements to the Nation's health and well-being, manufacturing processes, building capacities, research, medical capabilities, food preservation, art and historical conservation, and general productivity and indoor comfort;

Whereas Dr. Carrier debuted air-conditioning technology for legislative activity in the House of Representatives Chamber in 1928, and the Senate Chamber in 1929;

Whereas the air-conditioning industry now totals $36 billion on a global basis and employs more than 700,000 people in the United States; and

Whereas the year 2002 marks the 100th anniversary of modern air-conditioning: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the Congress honors the invention of modern air-conditioning by Dr. Willis H. Carrier on the occasion of its 100th anniversary.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from Connecticut (Mr. SHAYS) and the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. TIERNEY) each will control 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Connecticut (Mr. SHAYS).

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. SHAYS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks on the concurrent resolution, H. Con. Res. 413.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHAYS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the House consider House Concurrent Resolution 413, important legislation introduced by my distinguished colleague (JOHN WALSH of New York). This resolution expresses the sense of the House of Representatives in honoring the invention of modern air conditioning by Dr. Willis H. Carrier on its 100th anniversary.

Only 1 year after graduating with a master's degree from Cornell University, Dr. Carrier submitted designs and later installed the first modern air conditioning equipment. Installed in Brooklyn, New York, the air conditioner was designed to control indoor humidity and temperature.

When granted a U.S. patent for "the apparatus for treating air," as it was called in 1906, Dr. Carrier became known as the "father of modern air conditioning." The formula Dr. Carrier used to develop the modern air conditioner still stands today as the basis for all fundamental calculations for the air conditioning industry.

Air conditioning became the integral technology enabling the advancement of society through improvements to the Nation's health and well-being. Industries also grew with the new ability to control the temperature and humidity levels during and after production.

The invention of air conditioning has also improved areas such as film development, preservation of processed meats, medical capsules, textiles, and other products. In 1921, Carrier received a patent for the centrifugal refrigerator machine that became the first practical method for air conditioning large spaces. This single achievement paved the way for the upward expansion of cities, as well as bringing human comfort to hospitals, schools, office buildings, airports, hotels, and department stores.

Dr. Carrier debuted air conditioning technology for legislative activity in this very Chamber in 1928 and in the Senate Chamber in 1929. After World War II, the air conditioner began to be installed in homes across America. According to the Carrier Corporation, 10 percent of American homes were air conditioned by 1965. By 1995, more than 75 percent of American homes were air conditioned; and in some portions of the South, 90 percent of homes have air conditioning or central air systems. Now the air conditioning industry totals $36 billion on a global basis and employs more than 700,000 people in the United States alone.

Mr. Speaker, it is appropriate on this hot summer day that the House recognizes and honors the invention of modern air conditioning by Dr. Willis H. Carrier on its 100th anniversary.

Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from New York (Mr. WALSH).

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I thank my good friend and colleague, the gentleman from Connecticut, for yielding time to me, and also the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. TIERNEY) for bringing this resolution to the floor.

Mr. Speaker, as my colleague, the gentleman from Connecticut, pointed out, this Wednesday marks the 100th anniversary of the invention of the modern-day air conditioner by Dr. Willis Carrier, a New Yorker. Today I offer before the House, House Concurrent Resolution 413, recognizing this historic event.

Raised on a farm on the snowy eastern shore of Lake Erie in Angola, New York, the young Carrier grew up as an only child, raised by his grandparents and great aunt. Known for his superior problem-solving capabilities, Carrier would solve every complex problem he encountered by reducing it to its simplest form and solving each component one by one.

He once stated in a high school graduation essay, "A man with the power of will could make himself anything he wished, no matter what the circumstances." These words would define the rest of Mr. Carrier's life.

Carrier entered Cornell University at Ithaca College in Ithaca, New York, on a 4-year scholarship, but he was forced to earn room and board by mowing lawns, stoking furnaces, and during his senior year, forming a co-op student laundry.
